CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 3, 1900.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAM P. FRYE, a Senator from the State of Maine) took the chair and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Eternal God, rejoicing with gratitude to Thee that so many members of this body are in their places, strong in health and resolve for the responsible and onerous duties of their places, yet as the psalm of our thanksgiving rises, the heavy hand of sorrow is laid upon us as we remember the irreparable loss which this body and the country at large has sustained in the departure from earth of some of our notable members.

We recall the venerable figure of a late member of the Senate, who, looking back upon nearly fifty years of public service, had ingratiated himself into the regard, affection, and veneration of his brethren and of a large portion of the people of the country.

We recall the form and presence of the junior Senator from Iowa, taken from us and leaving a gap in his State, as well as in this body.

And now we stand with unspeakable grief by the new-made grave in the capital of Minnesota, which within the last two days has received all that was mortal of the brilliant, attractive, and serviceable senior Senator from that State. By his genius, his labor, his devotion to the interests not only of his own State, but of the whole country, and by his attractive and winsome qualities he drew the love and fixed regard of his colleagues. O Lord, the sense of our sorrow and loss is unspeakable.

Let Thy consolation come to the members of these families; let it come to the venerable father and mother as well as the wife of the Minnesota Senator.

Grant, O Lord, that the sense of our mortality may rest with becoming gravity upon the hearts and consciences of all here, and may we gird up our loins and walk reverently and humbly before Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SENATORS PRESENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, sixty-eight Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum of Senators present, and the Senate is ready to proceed with business.

SENATOR FROM VERMONT.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I present the certificate of election of the Hon. William P. Dillingham as a Senator of the United States from the State of Vermont for the unexpired portion of the term of the late Senator Morrill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The certificate will be received and the Secretary will read it to the Senate.

The Secretary read the credentials of William Paul Dillingham, chosen by the legislature of the State of Vermont a Senator from that State for the unexpired portion of the term ending March 3, 1903.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed on file, and if there be no objection the Senator-elect will present himself to take the necessary oath of office.

Mr. Dillingham was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. PROCTOR, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the committee Mr. HOAR and Mr. COCKRELL.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. HALE (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, as no business can be done until the committee which has been appointed reports, I move that the Senate take a recess for forty minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate take a further recess until 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Also, that a committee of three members had been appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to join the committee already appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each of the two Houses had assembled, and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make, and that Mr. PAYNE of New York, Mr. GROSVENOR of Ohio, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee had been appointed such committee on the part of the House.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR and Mr. COCKRELL, the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared at the bar, and

Mr. HOAR said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate, in conjunction with a committee appointed by the House of Representatives, to inform the President that a quorum of the two Houses is present and that they are ready to receive any communication from him, have discharged that commission. They are directed by the President to say that he is much gratified by the return of the members of the two Houses to the Capitol, and that he will make a communication in writing forthwith.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

At the outgoing of the old and the incoming of the new century you begin the last session of the Fifty-sixth Congress with evidences on every hand of individual and national prosperity and with proof of the growing strength and increasing power for good of republican institutions. Your countrymen will join with you in felicitation that American liberty is more firmly established than ever before, and that love for it and the determination to preserve it are more universal than at any former period of our history.

The Republic was never so strong, because never so strongly intrenched in the hearts of the people as now. The Constitution, with few amendments, exists as it left the hands of its authors. The additions which have been made to it proclaim larger freedom and more extended citizenship. Popular government has demonstrated in its one hundred and twenty-four years of trial here its stability and security, and its efficiency as the best instrument of national development and the best safeguard to human rights.

When the Sixth Congress assembled in November, 1800, the population of the United States was 5,308,483. It is now 76,304,799. Then we had 16 States. Now we have 45. Then our territory consisted of 909,050 square miles. It is now 3,846,595 square miles. Education, religion, and morality have kept pace with our advancement in other directions, and while extending its power the Government has adhered to its foundation principles and abated none of them in dealing with our new peoples and possessions. A nation so preserved and blessed gives reverent thanks to God and invokes His guidance and the continuance of His care and favor.

In our foreign intercourse the dominant question has been the treatment of the Chinese problem. Apart from this our relations with the powers have been happy.

The recent troubles in China spring from the antiforeign agitation which for the past three years has gained strength in the northern provinces. Their origin lies deep in the character of the Chinese races and in the traditions of their Government. The Taiping rebellion and the opening of Chinese ports to foreign trade and settlement disturbed alike the homogeneity and the seclusion of China.

Meanwhile foreign activity made itself felt in all quarters, not alone on the coast, but along the great river arteries and in the remoter districts, carrying new ideas and introducing new associations among a primitive people which had pursued for centuries a national policy of isolation.

The telegraph and the railway spreading over their land, the steamers plying on their waterways, the merchant and the missionary penetrating year by year farther to the interior, became to the Chinese mind types of an alien invasion, changing the course of their national life and fraught with vague forebodings of disaster to their beliefs and their self-control.

For several years before the present troubles all the resources of foreign diplomacy, backed by moral demonstrations of the physical force of fleets and arms, have been needed to secure due respect for the treaty rights of foreigners and to obtain satisfaction from the responsible authorities for the sporadic outrages upon the persons and property of unoffending sojourners, which from time to time occurred at widely separated points in the northern provinces, as in the case of the outbreaks in Sze-chuen and Shan-tung.

Posting of antiforeign placards became a daily occurrence, which the repeated reprobation of the Imperial power failed to check or punish. These imflammatory appeals to the ignorance and superstition of the masses, mendacious and absurd in their accusations and deeply hostile in their spirit, could not but work cumulative harm. They aimed at no particular class of foreigners; they were impartial in attacking everything foreign.

An outbreak in Shan-tung, in which German missionaries were slain, was the too natural result of these malevolent teachings. The posting of seditious placards, exhorting to the utter destruction of foreigners and of every foreign thing, continued unrebuked. Hostile demonstrations toward the stranger gained strength by organization.

The sect commonly styled the Boxers developed greatly in the provinces north of the Yang-Tse, and with the collusion of many notable officials, including some in the immediate councils of the Throne itself, became alarmingly aggressive. No foreigner's life outside of the protected treaty ports was safe. No foreign interest was secure from spoliation.

The diplomatic representatives of the powers in Peking strove in vain to check this movement. Protest was followed by demand, and demand by renewed protest, to be met with perfunctory edicts from the Palace and evasive and futile assurances from the Tsung-li Yamen. The circle of the Boxer influence narrowed about Peking, and while nominally stigmatized as seditious, it was felt that its spirit pervaded the capital itself, that the Imperial forces were imbued with its doctrines, and that the immediate counselors of the Empress Dowager were in full sympathy with the antiforeign movement.

The increasing gravity of the conditions in China and the imminence of peril to our own diversified interests in the Empire, as well as to those of all the other treaty governments, were soon appreciated by this Government, causing it profound solicitude. The United States from the earliest days of foreign intercourse with China had followed a policy of peace, omitting no occasions to testify good will, to further the extension of lawful trade, to respect the sovereignty of its Government, and to insure by all legitimate and kindly but earnest means the fullest measure of protection for the lives and property of our law-abiding citizens and for the exercise of their beneficent callings among the Chinese people.

Mindful of this, it was felt to be appropriate that our purposes should be pronounced in favor of such course as would hasten united action of the powers at Peking to promote the administrative reforms so greatly needed for strengthening the Imperial Government and maintaining the integrity of China, in which we believed the whole western world to be alike concerned. To these ends I caused to be addressed to the several powers occupying territory and maintaining spheres of influence in China the circular proposals of 1899, inviting from them declarations of their intentions and views as to the desirability of the adoption of measures insuring the benefits of equality of treatment of all foreign trade throughout China.

With gratifying unanimity the responses coincided in this common policy, enabling me to see in the successful termination of these negotiations proof of the friendly spirit which animates the various powers interested in the untrammeled development of commerce and industry in the Chinese Empire as a source of vast benefit to the whole commercial world.

In this conclusion, which I had the gratification to announce as a completed engagement to the interested powers on March 20, 1900, I hopefully discerned a potential factor for the abatement of the distrust of foreign purposes which for a year past had appeared to inspire the policy of the Imperial Government, and for the effective exertion by it of power and authority to quell the critical antiforeign movement in the northern provinces most immediately influenced by the Manchu sentiment.

Seeking to testify confidence in the willingness and ability of the Imperial administration to redress the wrongs and prevent the evils we suffered and feared, the marine guard, which had been sent to Peking in the autumn of 1899 for the protection of the legation, was withdrawn at the earliest practicable moment, and all pending questions were remitted, as far as we were concerned, to the ordinary resorts of diplomatic intercourse.

The Chinese Government proved, however, unable to check the rising strength of the Boxers, and appeared to be a prey to internal dissensions. In the unequal contest the antiforeign influences soon gained the ascendancy under the leadership of Prince Tuan. Organized armies of Boxers, with which the Imperial forces affiliated, held the country between Peking and the coast, penetrated into Manchuria up to the Russian borders, and through their emissaries threatened a like rising throughout northern China.

Attacks upon foreigners, destruction of their property, and slaughter of native converts were reported from all sides. The Tsung-li Yamen, already permeated with hostile sympathies, could make no effective response to the appeals of the legations. At this critical juncture, in the early spring of this year, a proposal was made by the other powers that a combined fleet should be assembled in Chinese waters as a moral demonstration, under cover of which to exact of the Chinese Government respect for foreign treaty rights and the suppression of the Boxers.

The United States, while not participating in the joint demonstration, promptly sent from the Philippines all ships that could be spared for service on the Chinese coast. A small force of marines was landed at Taku and sent to Peking for the protection of the American legation. Other powers took similar action, until some 400 men were assembled in the capital as legation guards.

Still the peril increased. The legations reported the development of the seditious movement in Peking and the need of increased provision for defense against it. While preparations were in progress for a larger expedition, to strengthen the legation guards and keep the railway open, an attempt of the foreign ships to make a landing at Taku was met by a fire from the Chinese forts. The forts were thereupon shelled by the foreign vessels, the American admiral taking no part in the attack, on the ground that we were not at war with China and that a hostile demonstration might consolidate the antiforeign elements and strengthen the Boxers to oppose the relieving column.

Two days later the Taku forts were captured after a sanguinary conflict. Severance of communication with Peking followed, and a combined force of additional guards, which was advancing to Peking by the Pei-Ho, was checked at Langfang. The isolation of the legations was complete.

The siege and the relief of the legations has passed into undying history. In all the stirring chapter which records the heroism of the devoted band, clinging to hope in the face of despair, and the undaunted spirit that led their relievers through battle and suffering to the goal, it is a memory of which my countrymen may be justly proud that the honor of our flag was maintained alike in the siege and the rescue, and that stout American hearts have again set high, in fervent emulation with true men of other race and language, the indomitable courage that ever strives for the cause of right and justice.

By June 19 the legations were cut off. An identical note from the Yamen ordered each minister to leave Peking, under a promised escort, within twenty-four hours. To gain time they replied, asking prolongation of the time, which was afterwards granted, and requesting an interview with the Tsung-li Yamen on the following day. No reply being received, on the morning of the 20th the German minister, Baron von Ketteler, set out for the Yamen to obtain a response, and on the way was murdered.

An attempt by the legation guard to recover his body was foiled by the Chinese. Armed forces turned out against the legations. Their quarters were surrounded and attacked. The mission compounds were abandoned, their inmates taking refuge in the British legation, where all the other legations and guards gathered for more effective defense. Four hundred persons were crowded in its narrow compass. Two thousand native converts were assembled in a near-by palace under protection of the foreigners. Lines of defense were strengthened, trenches dug, barricades raised, and preparations made to stand a siege, which at once began.

From June 20 until July 17, writes Minister Conger, "there was scarcely an hour during which there was not firing upon some part of our lines and into some of the legations, varying from a single shot to a general and continuous attack along the whole line." Artillery was placed around the legations and on the overlooking palace walls, and thousands of 3-inch shot and shell were fired, destroying some buildings and damaging all. So thickly did the balls rain that, when the ammunition of the besieged ran low, five quarts of Chinese bullets were gathered in an hour in one compound and recast.

Attempts were made to burn the legations by setting neighboring houses on fire, but the flames were successfully fought off, although the Austrian, Belgian, Italian, and Dutch legations were then and subsequently burned. With the aid of the native converts, directed by the missionaries, to whose helpful cooperation Mr. Conger awards unstinted praise, the British legation was made a veritable fortress. The British minister, Sir Claude MacDonald, was chosen general commander of the defense, with the secretary of the American legation, Mr. E. G. Squiers, as chief of staff.

To save life and ammunition the besieged sparingly returned the incessant fire of the Chinese soldiery, fighting only to repel attack or make an occasional successful sortie for strategic advantage, such as that of fifty-five American, British, and Russian marines led by Captain Myers, of the United States Marine Corps, which resulted in the capture of a formidable barricade on the wall that gravely menaced the American position. It was held to the last, and proved an invaluable acquisition, because commanding the water gate through which the relief column entered.

During the siege the defenders lost 65 killed, 135 wounded, and 7 by disease—the last all children.

On July 14 the besieged had their first communication with the Tsung-li Yamen, from whom a message came inviting to a conference, which was declined. Correspondence, however, ensued and a sort of armistice was agreed upon, which stopped the bombardment and lessened the rifle fire for a time. Even then no protection whatever was afforded, nor any aid given, save to send to the legations a small supply of fruit and three sacks of flour.

Indeed, the only communication had with the Chinese Government related to the occasional delivery or dispatch of a telegram or to the demands of the Tsung-li Yamen for the withdrawal of the legations to the coast under escort. Not only are the protestations of the Chinese Government that it protected and succored the legations positively contradicted, but irresistible proof accumulates that the attacks upon them were made by Imperial troops, regularly uniformed, armed, and officered, belonging to the command of Jung Lu, the Imperial commander in chief. Decrees encouraging the Boxers, organizing them under prominent Imperial officers, provisioning them, and even granting them large sums in the name of the Empress Dowager, are known to exist. Members of the Tsung-li Yamen who counseled protection of the foreigners were beheaded. Even in the distant provinces men suspected of foreign sympathy were put to death, prominent among these being Chang Yen-hoon, formerly Chinese minister in Washington.

With the negotiation of the partial armistice of July 14, a proceeding which was doubtless promoted by the representations of the Chinese envoy in Washington, the way was opened for the conveyance to Mr. Conger of a test message sent by the Secretary of State through the kind offices of Minister Wu Ting-fang. Mr. Conger's reply, dispatched from Peking on July 18 through the same channel, afforded to the outside world the first tidings that the inmates of the legations were still alive and hoping for succor.

This news stimulated the preparations for a joint relief expedition in numbers sufficient to overcome the resistance which for a month had been organizing between Taku and the capital. Reinforcements sent by all the cooperating governments were constantly arriving. The United States contingent, hastily assembled from the Philippines or dispatched from this country, amounted to some 5,000 men, under the able command first of the lamented Colonel Liscum and afterwards of General Chaffee.

Toward the end of July the movement began. A severe conflict followed at Tientsin, in which Colonel Liscum was killed. The city was stormed and partly destroyed. Its capture afforded the base of operations from which to make the final advance, which began in the first days of August, the expedition being made up of Japanese, Russian, British, and American troops at the outset.

Another battle was fought and won at Yangtsun. Thereafter the disheartened Chinese troops offered little show of resistance. A few days later the important position of Ho-si-woo was taken. A rapid march brought the united forces to the populous city of Tung Chow, which capitulated without a contest.

On August 14 the capital was reached. After a brief conflict beneath the wall the relief column entered and the legations were saved. The United States soldiers, sailors, and marines, officers and men alike, in those distant climes and unusual surroundings, showed the same valor, discipline, and good conduct and gave proof of the same high degree of intelligence and efficiency which have distinguished them in every emergency.

The Imperial family and the Government had fled a few days before. The city was without visible control. The remaining Imperial soldiery had made on the night of the 13th a last attempt to exterminate the besieged, which was gallantly repelled. It fell to the occupying forces to restore order and organize a provisional administration.

Happily the acute disturbances were confined to the northern provinces. It is a relief to recall and a pleasure to record the loyal conduct of the viceroys and local authorities of the southern and eastern provinces. Their efforts were continuously directed to the pacific control of the vast populations under their rule and to the scrupulous observance of foreign treaty rights. At critical moments they did not hesitate to memorialize the Throne, urging the protection of the legations, the restoration of communication, and the assertion of the Imperial authority against the subversive elements. They maintained excellent relations with the official representatives of foreign powers. To their kindly disposition is largely due the success of the consuls in removing many of the missionaries from the interior to places of safety. In this relation the action of the consuls should be highly commended. In Shantung and eastern Chi-li the task was difficult, but, thanks to their energy and the cooperation of American and foreign naval commanders, hundreds of foreigners, including those of other nationalities than ours, were rescued from imminent peril.

The policy of the United States through all this trying period was clearly announced and scrupulously carried out. A circular note to the powers dated July 3 proclaimed our attitude. Treating the condition in the north as one of virtual anarchy, in which the great provinces of the south and southeast had no share, we regarded the local authorities in the latter quarters as representing the Chinese people with whom we sought to remain in peace and friendship. Our declared aims involved no war against the Chinese nation. We adhered to the legitimate office of rescuing the imperiled legation, obtaining redress for wrongs already suffered, securing wherever possible the safety of American life and property in China, and preventing a spread of the disorders or their recurrence.

As was then said, "The policy of the Government of the United States is to seek a solution which may bring about permanent safety and peace to China, preserve Chinese territorial and administrative entity, protect all rights guaranteed to friendly powers by treaty and international law, and safeguard for the world the principle of equal and impartial trade with all parts of the Chinese Empire."

Faithful to those professions which, as it proved, reflected the views and purposes of the other cooperating governments, all our efforts have been directed toward ending the anomalous situation in China by negotiations for a settlement at the earliest possible moment. As soon as the sacred duty of relieving our legation and its dependents was accomplished we withdrew from active hostilities, leaving our legation under an adequate guard in Peking as a channel of negotiation and settlement—a course adopted by others of the interested powers. Overtures of the empowered representatives of the Chinese Emperor have been considerately entertained.

The Russian proposition looking to the restoration of the Imperial power in Peking has been accepted as in full consonance with our own desires, for we have held and hold that effective reparation for wrongs suffered and an enduring settlement that will make their recurrence impossible can best be brought about under an authority which the Chinese nation reverences and obeys. While so doing we forego no jot of our undoubted right to exact exemplary and deterrent punishment of the responsible authors and abettors of the criminal acts whereby we and other nations have suffered grievous injury.

For the real culprits, the evil counselors who have misled the Imperial judgment and diverted the sovereign authority to their own guilty ends, full expiation becomes imperative within the national limits of retributive justice. Regarding this as the initial condition of an acceptable settlement between China and the powers, I said in my message of October 18 to the Chinese Emperor:

"I trust that negotiations may begin so soon as we and the other offended governments shall be effectively satisfied of Your Majesty's ability and power to treat with just sternness the principal offenders, who are doubly culpable, not alone toward the foreigners, but toward Your Majesty, under whose rule the purpose of China to dwell in concord with the world had hitherto found expression in the welcome and protection assured to strangers."

Taking, as a point of departure, the Imperial edict appointing Earl Li Hung Chang and Prince Ching plenipotentiaries to arrange a settlement, and the edict of September 25, whereby certain high officials were designated for punishment, this Government has moved, in concert with the other powers, toward the opening of negotiations, which Mr. Conger, assisted by Mr. Rockhill, has been authorized to conduct on behalf of the United States.

General bases of negotiation formulated by the Government of the French Republic have been accepted with certain reservations as to details, made necessary by our own circumstances, but, like similar reservations by other powers, open to discussion in the progress of the negotiations. The disposition of the Emperor's Government to admit liability for wrongs done to foreign governments and their nationals, and to act upon such additional designation of the guilty persons as the foreign ministers at Peking may be in a position to make, gives hope of a complete settlement of all questions involved, assuring foreign rights of residence and intercourse on terms of equality for all the world.

I regard as one of the essential factors of a durable adjustment the securement of adequate guarantees for liberty of faith, since insecurity of those natives who may embrace alien creeds is a scarcely less effectual assault upon the rights of foreign worship and teaching than would be the direct invasion thereof.

The matter of indemnity for our wronged citizens is a question of grave concern. Measured in money alone, a sufficient reparation may prove to be beyond the ability of China to meet. All the powers concur in emphatic disclaimers of any purpose of aggrandizement through the dismemberment of the Empire. I am disposed to think that due compensation may be made in part by increased guarantees of security for foreign rights and immunities, and, most important of all, by the opening of China to the equal commerce of all the world. These views have been and will be earnestly advocated by our representatives.

The Government of Russia has put forward a suggestion, that in the event of protracted divergence of views in regard to indemnities the matter may be relegated to the Court of Arbitration at The Hague. I favorably incline to this, believing that high tribunal could not fail to reach a solution no less conducive to the stability and enlarged prosperity of China itself than immediately beneficial to the powers.

Ratifications of a treaty of extradition with the Argentine Republic were exchanged on June 2 last.

While the Austro-Hungarian Government has in the many cases that have been reported of the arrest of our naturalized citizens for alleged evasion of military service faithfully observed the provisions of the treaty and released such persons from military obligations, it has in some instances expelled those whose presence in the community of their origin was asserted to have a pernicious influence. Representations have been made against this course whenever its adoption has appeared unduly onerous.

We have been urgently solicited by Belgium to ratify the international convention of June, 1899, amendatory of the previous convention of 1890 in respect to the regulation of the liquor trade in Africa. Compliance was necessarily withheld, in the absence of the advice and consent of the Senate thereto. The principle involved has the cordial sympathy of this Government, which in the revisionary negotiations advocated more drastic measures, and I would gladly see its extension, by international agreement, to the restriction of the liquor traffic with all uncivilized peoples, especially in the western Pacific.

A conference will be held at Brussels December 11, 1900, under the convention for the protection of industrial property concluded at Paris March 20, 1883, to which delegates from this country have been appointed. Any lessening of the difficulties that our inventors encounter in obtaining patents abroad for their inventions and that our farmers, manufacturers, and merchants may have in the protection of their trade-marks is worthy of careful consideration, and your attention will be called to the results of the conference at the proper time.

In the interest of expanding trade between this country and South America, efforts have been made during the past year to conclude conventions with the southern republics for the enlargement of postal facilities. Two such agreements, signed with Bolivia on April 24, of which that establishing the money-order system is undergoing certain changes suggested by the Post-Office Department, have not yet been ratified by this Government. A treaty of extradition with that country, signed on the same day, is before the Senate.

A boundary dispute between Brazil and Bolivia over the territory of Acre is in a fair way of friendly adjustment, a protocol signed in December, 1899, having agreed on a definite frontier and provided for its demarcation by a joint commission.

Conditions in Brazil have weighed heavily on our export trade to that country, in marked contrast to the favorable conditions upon which Brazilian products are admitted into our markets. Urgent representations have been made to that Government on the subject, and some amelioration has been effected. We rely upon the reciprocal justice and good will of that Government to assure to us a further improvement in our commercial relations.

The convention signed May 24, 1897, for the final settlement of claims left in abeyance upon the dissolution of the commission of 1893 was at length ratified by the Chilean Congress, and the supplemental commission has been organized.

It remains for the Congress to appropriate for the necessary expenses of the commission.

The insurrectionary movement which disturbed Colombia in the latter part of 1899 has been practically suppressed, although guerrillas still operate in some departments. The executive power of that Republic changed hands in August last by the act of Vice-President Marroquin in assuming the reins of government during the absence of President San Clemente from the capital. The change met with no serious opposition, and, following the precedents in such cases, the United States minister entered into relations with the new de facto Government on September 17th.

It is gratifying to announce that the residual questions between Costa Rica and Nicaragua growing out of the award of President Cleveland in 1888 have been adjusted through the choice of an American engineer, Gen. E. P. Alexander, as umpire to run the disputed line. His task has been accomplished to the satisfaction of both contestants.

A revolution in the Dominican Republic toward the close of last year resulted in the installation of President Jimenez, whose Government was formally recognized in January. Since then final payment has been made of the American claim in regard to the Ozama bridge.

The year of the Exposition has been fruitful in occasions for displaying the good will that exists between this country and France. This great competition brought together from every nation the best in natural productions, industry, science, and the arts, submitted in generous rivalry to a judgment made all the more searching because of that rivalry. The extraordinary increase of exportations from this country during the past three years and the activity with which our inventions and wares had invaded new markets caused much interest to center upon the American exhibit, and every encouragement was offered in the way of space and facilities to permit of its being comprehensive as a whole and complete in every part.

It was, however, not an easy task to assemble exhibits that could fitly illustrate our diversified resources and manufactures. Singularly enough our national prosperity lessened the incentive to exhibit. The dealer in raw materials knew that the user must come to him; the great factories were contented with the phenomenal demand for their output, not alone at home, but also abroad, where merit had already won a profitable trade.

Appeals had to be made to the patriotism of exhibitors to induce them to incur outlays promising no immediate return. This was especially the case where it became needful to complete an industrial sequence or illustrate a class of processes. One manufacturer after another had to be visited and importuned, and at times, after a promise to exhibit in a particular section had been obtained, it would be withdrawn, owing to pressure of trade orders, and a new quest would have to be made.

The installation of exhibits, too, encountered many obstacles and involved unexpected cost. The Exposition was far from ready at the date fixed for its opening. The French transportation lines were congested with offered freight. Belated goods had to be hastily installed in unfinished quarters with whatever labor could be obtained in the prevailing confusion. Nor was the task of the Commission lightened by the fact that, owing to the scheme of classification adopted, it was impossible to have the entire exhibit of any one country in the same building or more than one group of exhibits in the same part of any building. Our installations were scattered on both sides of the Seine and in widely remote suburbs of Paris, so that additional assistants were needed for the work of supervision and arrangement.

Despite all these drawbacks the contribution of the United States was not only the largest foreign display, but was among the earliest in place and the most orderly in arrangement. Our exhibits were shown in one hundred and one out of one hundred and twenty-one classes, and more completely covered the entire classification than those of any other nation. In total number they ranked next after those of France, and the attractive form in which they were presented secured general attention.

A criterion of the extent and success of our participation and of the thoroughness with which our exhibits were organized is seen in the awards granted to American exhibitors by the international jury, namely, grand prizes, 240; gold medals, 597; silver medals, 776; bronze medals, 541, and honorable mentions, 322—2,476 in all, being the greatest total number given to the exhibit of any exhibiting nation, as well as the largest number in each grade. This significant recognition of merit in competition with the chosen exhibits of all other nations and at the hands of juries almost wholly made up of representatives of France and other competing countries is not only most gratifying, but is especially valuable, since it sets us to the front in international questions of supply and demand, while the large proportion of awards in the classes of art and artistic manufactures afforded unexpected proof of the stimulation of national culture by the prosperity that flows from natural productiveness joined to industrial excellence.

Apart from the Exposition several occasions for showing international good will occurred. The inauguration in Paris of the Lafayette monument, presented by the school children of the United States, and the designing of a commemorative coin by our Mint and the presentation of the first piece struck to the President of the Republic, were marked by appropriate ceremonies, and the Fourth of July was especially observed in the French capital.

Good will prevails in our relations with the German Empire. An amicable adjustment of the long-pending question of the admission of our life-insurance companies to do business in Prussia has been reached. One of the principal companies has already been readmitted and the way is opened for the others to share the privilege.

The settlement of the Samoan problem, to which I adverted in my last message, has accomplished good results. Peace and contentment prevail in the islands, especially in Tutuila, where a convenient administration that has won the confidence and esteem of the kindly disposed natives has been organized under the direction of the commander of the United States naval station at Pago-Pago.

An Imperial meat-inspection law has been enacted for Germany. While it may simplify the inspections, it prohibits certain products heretofore admitted. There is still great uncertainty as to whether our well-nigh extinguished German trade in meat products can revive under its new burdens. Much will depend upon regulations not yet promulgated, which we confidently hope will be free from the discriminations which attended the enforcement of the old statutes.

The remaining link in the new lines of direct telegraphic communication between the United States and the German Empire has recently been completed, affording a gratifying occasion for exchange of friendly congratulations with the German Emperor.

Our friendly relations with Great Britain continue. The war in Southern Africa introduced important questions. A condition unusual in international wars was presented in that while one beligerent had control of the seas, the other had no ports, shipping, or direct trade, but was only accessible through the territory of a neutral. Vexatious questions arose through Great Britain's action in respect to neutral cargoes, not contraband in their own nature, shipped to Portuguese South Africa, on the score of probable or suspected ultimate destination to the Boer States.

Such consignments in British ships, by which alone direct trade is kept up between our ports and southern Africa, were seized in application of a municipal law prohibiting British vessels from trading with the enemy without regard to any contraband character of the goods, while cargoes shipped to Delagoa Bay in neutral bottoms were arrested on the ground of alleged destination to enemy's country. Appropriate representations on our part resulted in the British Government agreeing to purchase outright all such goods shown to be the actual property of American citizens, thus closing the incident to the satisfaction of the immediately interested parties, although, unfortunately, without a broad settlement of the question of a neutral's right to send goods not contraband per se to a neutral port adjacent to a belligerent area.

The work of making certain provisional boundary points, for convenience of administration, around the head of Lynn Canal, in accordance with the temporary arrangement of October, 1899, was completed by a joint survey in July last. The modus vivendi has so far worked without friction, and the Dominion Government has provided rules and regulations for securing to our citizens the benefit of the reciprocal stipulation that the citizens or subjects of either power found by that arrangement within the temporary jurisdiction of the other shall suffer no diminution of the rights and privileges they have hitherto enjoyed. But however necessary such an expedient may have been to tide over the grave emergencies of the situation, it is at best but an unsatisfactory makeshift which should not be suffered to delay the speedy and complete establishment of the frontier line to which we are entitled under the Russo-American treaty for the cession of Alaska.

In this relation I may refer again to the need of definitely marking the Alaskan boundary where it follows the one hundred and forty-first meridian. A convention to that end has been before the Senate for some two years, but as no action has been taken I contemplate negotiating a new convention for a joint determination of the meridian by telegraphic observations. These, it is believed, will give more accurate and unquestionable results than the sidereal methods heretofore independently followed, which, as is known, proved discrepant at several points on the line, although not varying at any place more than 700 feet.

The pending claim of R. H. May against the Guatemalan Government has been settled by arbitration, Mr. George F. B. Jenner, British minister at Guatemala, who was chosen as sole arbitrator, having awarded $143,750.73 in gold to the claimant.

Various American claims against Haiti have been or are being advanced to the resort of arbitration.

As the result of negotiations with the Government of Honduras in regard to the indemnity demanded for the murder of Frank H.

Pears in Honduras, that Government has paid $10,000 in settlement of the claim of the heirs.

The assassination of King Humbert called forth sincere expressions of sorrow from this Government and people, and occasion was fitly taken to testify to the Italian nation the high regard here felt for the memory of the lamented ruler.

In my last message I referred at considerable length to the lynching of five Italians at Tallulah. Notwithstanding the efforts of the Federal Government, the production of evidence tending to inculpate the authors of this grievous offense against our civilization, and the repeated inquests set on foot by the authorities of the State of Louisiana, no punishments have followed. Successive grand juries have failed to indict. The representations of the Italian Government in the face of this miscarriage have been most temperate and just.

Setting the principle at issue high above all consideration of merely pecuniary indemnification, such as this Government made in the three previous cases, Italy has solemnly invoked the pledges of existing treaty and asked that the justice to which she is entitled shall be meted in regard to her unfortunate countrymen in our territory with the same full measure she herself would give to any American were his reciprocal treaty rights contemned.

I renew the urgent recommendations I made last year that the Congress appropriately confer upon the Federal courts jurisdiction in this class of international cases where the ultimate responsibility of the Federal Government may be involved, and I invite action upon the bills to accomplish this which were introduced in the Senate and House. It is incumbent upon us to remedy the statutory omission which has led, and may again lead, to such untoward results. I have pointed out the necessity and the precedent for legislation of this character. Its enactment is a simple measure of previsory justice toward the nations with which we as a sovereign equal make treaties requiring reciprocal observance.

While the Italian Government naturally regards such action as the primary and, indeed, the most essential element in the disposal of the Tallulah incident, I advise that, in accordance with precedent and in view of the improbabilty of that particular case being reached by the bill now pending, Congress make gracious provision for indemnity to the Italian sufferers in the same form and proportion as heretofore.

In my inaugural address I referred to the general subject of lynching in these words:

"Lynching must not be tolerated in a great and civilized country like the United States; courts, not mobs, must execute the penalties of the law. The preservation of public order, the right of discussion, the integrity of courts, and the orderly administration of justice must continue forever the rock of safety upon which our Government securely rests."

This I most urgently reiterate and again invite the attention of my countrymen to this reproach upon our civilization.

The closing year has witnessed a decided strengthening of Japan's relations to other states. The development of her independent, judicial, and administrative functions under the treaties which took effect July 17, 1899, has proceeded without international friction, showing the competence of the Japanese to hold a foremost place among modern peoples.

In the treatment of the difficult Chinese problems Japan has acted in harmonious concert with the other powers, and her generous cooperation materially aided in the joint relief of the beleaguered legations in Peking and in bringing about an understanding preliminary to a settlement of the issues between the powers and China. Japan's declarations in favor of the integrity of the Chinese Empire and the conservation of open world trade therewith have been frank and positive. As a factor for promoting the general interests of peace, order, and fair commerce in the Far East the influence of Japan can hardly be overestimated.

The valuable aid and kindly courtesies extended by the Japanese Government and naval officers to the battle ship Oregon are gratefully appreciated.

Complaint was made last summer of the discriminatory enforcement of a bubonic quarantine against Japanese on the Pacific coast and of interference with their travel in California and Colorado under the health laws of those States. The latter restrictions have been adjudged by a Federal court to be unconstitutional. No recurrence of either cause of complaint is apprehended.

No noteworthy incident has occurred in our relations with our important southern neighbor. Commercial intercourse with Mexico continues to thrive, and the two Governments neglect no opportunity to foster their mutual interests in all practicable ways.

Pursuant to the declaration of the Supreme Court that the awards of the late joint commission in the La Abra and Weil claims were obtained through fraud, the sum awarded in the first case, $403,030.08, has been returned to Mexico, and the amount of the Weil award will be returned in like manner.

A convention indefinitely extending the time for the labors of the United States and Mexican International (Water) Boundary Commission has been signed.

It is with satisfaction that I am able to announce the formal notification at The Hague, on September 4, of the deposit of ratifications of the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes by sixteen powers, namely, the United States, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, England, France, Germany, Italy, Persia, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Siam, Spain, Sweden and Norway, and the Netherlands. Japan also has since ratified the convention.

The Administrative Council of the Permanent Court of Arbitration has been organized and has adopted rules of order and a constitution for the International Arbitration Bureau. In accordance with Article XXIII of the convention, providing for the appointment by each signatory power of persons of known competency in questions of international law as arbitrators, I have appointed as members of this court Hon. Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, ex-President of the United States; Hon. Melville W. Fuller, of Illinois, Chief Justice of the United States; Hon. John W. Griggs, of New Jersey, Attorney-General of the United States, and Hon. George Gray, of Delaware, a judge of the circuit court of the United States.

As an incident of the brief revolution in the Mosquito district of Nicaragua early in 1899, the insurgents forcibly collected from American merchants duties upon imports. On the restoration of order the Nicaraguan authorities demanded a second payment of such duties on the ground that they were due to the titular Government and that their diversion had aided the revolt.

This position was not accepted by us. After prolonged discussion a compromise was effected under which the amount of the second payments was deposited with the British consul at San Juan del Norte in trust until the two Governments should determine whether the first payments had been made under compulsion to a de facto authority. Agreement as to this was not reached, and the point was waived by the act of the Nicaraguan Government in requesting the British consul to return the deposits to the merchants.

Menacing differences between several of the Central American States have been accommodated, our ministers rendering good offices toward an understanding.

The all-important matter of an interoceanic canal has assumed a new phase. Adhering to its refusal to reopen the question of the forfeiture of the contract of the Maritime Canal Company, which was terminated for alleged nonexecution in October, 1899, the Government of Nicaragua has since supplemented that action by declaring the so-styled Eyre-Cragin option void for nonpayment of the stipulated advance. Protests in relation to these acts have been filed in the State Department and are under consideration. Deeming itself relieved from existing engagements, the Nicaraguan Government shows a disposition to deal freely with the canal question either in the way of negotiations with the United States or by taking measures to promote the waterway.

Overtures for a convention to effect the building of a canal under the auspices of the United States are under consideration. In the meantime, the views of the Congress upon the general subject, in the light of the report of the Commission appointed to examine the comparative merits of the various trans-Isthmian ship-canal projects, may be awaited.

I commend to the early attention of the Senate the convention with Great Britain to facilitate the construction of such a canal and to remove any objection which might arise out of the convention commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

The long-standing contention with Portugal, growing out of the seizure of the Delagoa Bay Railway, has been at last determined by a favorable award of the tribunal of arbitration at Berne, to which it was submitted. The amount of the award, which was deposited in London awaiting arrangements by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain for its disposal, has recently been paid over to the two Governments.

A lately signed Convention of Extradition with Peru as amended by the Senate has been ratified by the Peruvian Congress.

Another illustration of the policy of this Government to refer international disputes to impartial arbitration is seen in the agreement reached with Russia to submit the claims on behalf of American sealing vessels seized in Bering Sea to determination by Mr. T. M. C. Asser, a distinguished statesman and jurist of the Netherlands.

Thanks are due to the Imperial Russian Government for the kindly aid rendered by its authorities in eastern Siberia to American missionaries fleeing from Manchuria.

Satisfactory progress has been made toward the conclusion of a general treaty of friendship and intercourse with Spain, in replacement of the old treaty, which passed into abeyance by reason of the late war. A new convention of extradition is approaching completion, and I should be much pleased were a commercial arrangement to follow. I feel that we should not suffer to pass any opportunity to reaffirm the cordial ties that existed between us and Spain from the time of our earliest independence, and to enhance the mutual benefits of that commercial intercourse which is natural between the two countries.

By the terms of the Treaty of Peace the line bounding the ceded

Philippine group in the southwest failed to include several small islands lying westward of the Sulús, which have always been recognized as under Spanish control. The occupation of Sibutú and Cagayan Sulú by our naval forces elicited a claim on the part of Spain, the essential equity of which could not be gainsaid. In order to cure the defect of the treaty by removing all possible ground of future misunderstanding respecting the interpretation of its third article, I directed the negotiation of a supplementary treaty, which will be forthwith laid before the Senate, whereby Spain quits all title and claim of title to the islands named as well as to any and all islands belonging to the Philippine Archipelago lying outside the lines described in said third article, and agrees that all such islands shall be comprehended in the cession of the archipelago as fully as if they had been expressly included within those lines. In consideration of this cession the United States is to pay to Spain the sum of $100,000.

A bill is now pending to effect the recommendation made in my last Annual Message that appropriate legislation be had to carry into execution Article VII of the Treaty of Peace with Spain, by which the United States assumed the payment of certain claims for indemnity of its citizens against Spain. I ask that action be taken to fulfill this obligation.

The King of Sweden and Norway has accepted the joint invitation of the United States, Germany, and Great Britain to arbitrate claims growing out of losses sustained in the Samoan Islands in the course of military operations made necessary by the disturbances in 1899.

Our claims upon the Government of the Sultan for reparation for injuries suffered by American citizens in Armenia and elsewhere give promise of early and satisfactory settlement. His Majesty's good disposition in this regard has been evinced by the issuance of an iradé for rebuilding the American college at Harpoot.

The failure of action by the Senate at its last session upon the commercial conventions then submitted for its consideration and approval, although caused by the great pressure of other legislative business, has caused much disappointment to the agricultural and industrial interests of the country, which hoped to profit by their provisions. The conventional periods for their ratification having expired, it became necessary to sign additional articles extending the time for that purpose. This was requested on our part, and the other governments interested have concurred with the exception of one convention, in respect to which no formal reply has been received.

Since my last communication to the Congress on this subject special commercial agreements under the third section of the tariff act have been proclaimed with Portugal, with Italy, and with Germany. Commercial conventions under the general limitations of the fourth section of the same act have been concluded with Nicaragua, with Ecuador, with the Dominican Republic, with Great Britain on behalf of the island of Trinidad, and with Denmark on behalf of the island of St. Croix. These will be early communicated to the Senate. Negotiations with other governments are in progress for the improvement and security of our commercial relations.

The policy of reciprocity so manifestly rests upon the principles of international equity and has been so repeatedly approved by the people of the United States that there ought to be no hesitation in either branch of the Congress in giving to it full effect.

This Government desires to preserve the most just and amicable commercial relations with all foreign countries, unmoved by the industrial rivalries necessarily developed in the expansion of international trade. It is believed that the foreign governments generally entertain the same purpose, although in some instances there are clamorous demands upon them for legislation specifically hostile to American interests. Should these demands prevail I shall communicate with the Congress with the view of advising such legislation as may be necessary to meet the emergency.

The exposition of the resources and products of the Western Hemisphere to be held at Buffalo next year promises important results not only for the United States but for the other participating countries. It is gratifying that the Latin-American States have evinced the liveliest interest, and the fact that an international American congress will be held in the City of Mexico while the exposition is in progress encourages the hope of a larger display at Buffalo than might otherwise be practicable. The work of preparing an exhibit of our national resources is making satisfactory progress under the direction of different officials of the Federal Government, and the various States of the Union have shown a disposition toward the most liberal participation in the enterprise.

The Bureau of the American Republics continues to discharge, with the happiest results, the important work of promoting cordial relations between the United States and the Latin-American countries, all of which are now active members of the International Union. The Bureau has been instrumental in bringing about the agreement for another international American congress, which is to meet in the City of Mexico in October, 1901. The Bureau's future for another term of ten years is assured by the international compact, but the congress will doubtless have much to do with shaping new lines of work and a general policy. Its usefulness to the interests of Latin-American trade is widely appreciated and shows a gratifying development.

The practical utility of the consular service in obtaining a wide range of information as to the industries and commerce of other countries and the opportunities thereby afforded for introducing the sale of our goods have kept steadily in advance of the notable expansion of our foreign trade, and abundant evidence has been furnished, both at home and abroad, of the fact that the Consular Reports, including many from our diplomatic representatives, have to a considerable extent pointed out ways and means of disposing of a great variety of manufactured goods which otherwise might not have found sale abroad.

Testimony of foreign observers to the commercial efficiency of the consular corps seems to be conclusive, and our own manufacturers and exporters highly appreciate the value of the services rendered, not only in the printed reports, but also in the individual efforts of consular officers to promote American trade. An increasing part of the work of the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, whose primary duty it is to compile and print the reports, is to answer inquiries from trade organizations, business houses, etc., as to conditions in various parts of the world, and, notwithstanding the smallness of the force employed, the work has been so systematized that responses are made with such promptitude and accuracy as to elicit flattering encomiums. The experiment of printing the Consular Reports daily for immediate use by trade bodies, exporters, and the press, which was begun in January, 1898, continues to give general satisfaction.

It is gratifying to be able to state that the surplus revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, were $79,527,060.18. For the six preceding years we had only deficits, the aggregate of which from 1894 to 1899, inclusive, amounted to $283,022,991.14. The receipts for the year from all sources, exclusive of postal revenues, aggregated $567,240,851.89, and expenditures for all purposes, except for the administration of the postal department, aggregated $487,713,791.71. The receipts from customs were $233,164,871.16, an increase over the preceding year of $27,036,389.41. The receipts from internal revenue were $295,327,926.76, an increase of $21,890,765.25 over 1899. The receipts from miscellaneous sources were $38,748,053.97, as against $36,394,976.92 for the previous year.

It is gratifying also to note that during the year a considerable reduction is shown in the expenditures of the Government. The War Department expenditures for the fiscal year 1900 were $134,774,767.78, a reduction of $95,066,486.69 over those of 1899. In the Navy Department the expenditures were $55,953,077.72 for the year 1900, as against $63,942,104.25 for the preceding year, a decrease of $7,989,026.53. In the expenditures on account of Indians there was a decrease in 1900 over 1899 of $2,630,604.38; and in the civil and miscellaneous expenses for 1900 there was a reduction of $13,418,065.74.

Because of the excess of revenues over expenditures the Secretary of the Treasury was enabled to apply bonds and other securities to the sinking fund to the amount of $56,544,556.06. The details of the sinking fund are set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, to which I invite attention. The Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the receipts for the current fiscal year will aggregate $580,000,000 and the expenditures $500,000,000, leaving an excess of revenues over expenditures of $80,000,000. The present condition of the Treasury is one of undoubted strength. The available cash balance November 30 was $139,303,794.50. Under the form of statement prior to the financial law of March 14 last there would have been included in the statement of available cash gold coin and bullion held for the redemption of United States notes.

If this form were pursued, the cash balance, including the present gold reserve of $150,000,000, would be $289,303,794.50. Such balance November 30, 1899, was $296,495,301.55. In the general fund, which is wholly separate from the reserve and trust funds, there was on November 30, $70,090,073.15 in gold coin and bullion, to which should be added $22,957,300 in gold certificates subject to issue, against which there is held in the Division of Redemption gold coin and bullion, making a total holding of free gold amounting to $93,047,373.15.

It will be the duty as I am sure it will be the disposition of the Congress to provide whatever further legislation is needed to insure the continued parity under all conditions between our two forms of metallic money, silver and gold.

Our surplus revenues have permitted the Secretary of the Treasury since the close of the fiscal year to call in the funded loan of 1891 continued at 2 per cent, in the sum of $25,364,500. To and including November 30, $23,458,100 of these bonds have been paid. This sum, together with the amount which may accrue from further redemptions under the call, will be applied to the sinking fund.

The law of March 14, 1900, provided for refunding into 2 per cent thirty-year bonds, payable, principal and interest, in gold coin of the present standard value, that portion of the public debt represented by the 3 per cent bonds of 1908, the 4 percents of 1907, and the 5 percents of 1904, of which there was outstanding at the date of said law $839,149,930. The holders of the old bonds presented them for exchange between March 14 and November 30 to the amount of $364,943,750. The net saving to the Government on these transactions aggregates $9,106,166.

Another effect of the operation, as stated by the Secretary, is to reduce the charge upon the Treasury for the payment of interest from the dates of refunding to February 1, 1904, by the sum of more than seven million dollars annually. From February 1, 1904, to July 1, 1907, the annual interest charge will be reduced by the sum of more than five millions, and for the thirteen months ending August 1, 1908, by about one million. The full details of the refunding are given in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The beneficial effect of the financial act of 1900, so far as it relates to a modification of the national banking act, is already apparent. The provision for the incorporation of national banks with a capital of not less than $25,000 in places not exceeding three thousand inhabitants has resulted in the extension of banking facilities to many small communities hitherto unable to provide themselves with banking institutions under the national system. There were organized from the enactment of the law up to and including November 30, 369 national banks, of which 266 were with capital less than $50,000, and 103 with capital of $50,000 or more.

It is worthy of mention that the greater number of banks being organized under the new law are in sections where the need of banking facilities has been most pronounced. Iowa stands first, with 30 banks of the smaller class, while Texas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and the middle and western sections of the country have also availed themselves largely of the privileges under the new law.

A large increase in national-bank-note circulation has resulted from the provision of the act which permits national banks to issue circulating notes to the par value of the United States bonds deposited as security instead of only 90 per cent thereof, as heretofore. The increase in circulating notes from March 14 to November 30 is $77,889,570.

The party in power is committed to such legislation as will better make the currency responsive to the varying needs of business at all seasons and in all sections.

Our foreign trade shows a remarkable record of commercial and industrial progress. The total of imports and exports for the first time in the history of the country exceeded two billions of dollars. The exports are greater than they have ever been before, the total for the fiscal year 1900 being $1,394,483,082, an increase over 1899 of $167,459,780, an increase over 1898 of $163,000,752, over 1897 of $343,489,526, and greater than 1896 by $511,876,144.

The growth of manufactures in the United States is evidenced by the fact that exports of manufactured products largely exceed those of any previous year, their value for 1900 being $433,851,756, against $339,592,146 in 1899, an increase of 28 per cent.

Agricultural products were also exported during 1900 in greater volume than in 1899, the total for the year being $835,858,123, against $784,776,142 in 1899.

The imports for the year amounted to $849,941,184, an increase over 1899 of $152,792,695. This increase is largely in materials for manufacture, and is in response to the rapid development of manufacturing in the United States. While there was imported for use in manufactures in 1900 material to the value of $79,768,972 in excess of 1899, it is reassuring to observe that there is a tendency toward decrease in the importation of articles manufactured ready for consumption, which in 1900 formed 15.17 per cent of the total imports, against 15.54 per cent in 1899 and 21.09 per cent in 1896.

I recommend that the Congress at its present session reduce the internal-revenue taxes imposed to meet the expenses of the war with Spain in the sum of thirty million dollars. This reduction should be secured by the remission of those taxes which experience has shown to be the most burdensome to the industries of the people.

I specially urge that there be included in whatever reduction is made the legacy tax on bequests for public uses of a literary, educational, or charitable character.

American vessels during the past three years have carried about 9 per cent of our exports and imports. Foreign ships should carry the least, not the greatest, part of American trade. The remarkable growth of our steel industries, the progress of shipbuilding for the domestic trade, and our steadily maintained expenditures for the Navy have created an opportunity to place the United States in the first rank of commercial maritime powers.

Besides realizing a proper national aspiration this will mean the establishment and healthy growth along all our coasts of a distinctive national industry, expanding the field for the profitable employment of labor and capital. It will increase the transportation facilities and reduce freight charges on the vast volume of products brought from the interior to the seaboard for export, and will strengthen an arm of the national defense upon which the founders of the Government and their successors have relied. In again urging immediate action by the Congress on measures to promote American shipping and foreign trade, I direct attention to the recommendations on the subject in previous messages, and particularly to the opinion expressed in the Message of 1899:

"I am satisfied the judgment of the country favors the policy of aid to our merchant marine, which will broaden our commerce and markets and upbuild our sea-carrying capacity for the products of agriculture and manufacture, which, with the increase of our Navy, mean more work and wages to our countrymen, as well as a safeguard to American interests in every part of the world."

The attention of the Congress is invited to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury in his Annual Report for legislation in behalf of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and favorable action is urged.

In my last annual message to the Congress I called attention to the necessity for early action to remedy such evils as might be found to exist in connection with combinations of capital organized into trusts, and again invite attention to my discussion of the subject at that time, which concluded with these words:

"It is apparent that uniformity of legislation upon this subject in the several States is much to be desired. It is to be hoped that such uniformity, founded in a wise and just discrimination between what is injurious and what is useful and necessary in business operations, may be obtained, and that means may be found for the Congress, within the limitations of its constitutional power, so to supplement an effective code of State legislation as to make a complete system of laws throughout the United States adequate to compel a general observance of the salutary rules to which I have referred.

"The whole question is so important and far-reaching that I am sure no part of it will be lightly considered, but every phase of it will have the studied deliberation of the Congress, resulting in wise and judicious action."

Restraint upon such combinations as are injurious and which are within Federal jurisdiction should be promptly applied by the Congress.

In my last annual message I dwelt at some length upon the condition of affairs in the Philippines. While seeking to impress upon you that the grave responsibility of the future government of those islands rests with the Congress of the United States, I abstained from recommending at that time a specific and final form of government for the territory actually held by the United States forces and in which as long as insurrection continues the military arm must necessarily be supreme. I stated my purpose, until the Congress shall have made the formal expression of its will, to use the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes to uphold the sovereignty of the United States in those distant islands as in all other places where our flag rightfully floats, placing, to that end, at the disposal of the Army and Navy all the means which the liberality of the Congress and the people have provided. No contrary expression of the will of the Congress having been made, I have steadfastly pursued the purpose so declared, employing the civil arm as well toward the accomplishment of pacification and the institution of local governments within the lines of authority and law.

Progress in the hoped-for direction has been favorable. Our forces have successfully controlled the greater part of the islands, overcoming the organized forces of the insurgents and carrying order and administrative regularity to all quarters. What opposition remains is for the most part scattered, obeying no concerted plan of strategic action, operating only by the methods common to the traditions of guerrilla warfare, which, while ineffective to alter the general control now established, are still sufficient to beget insecurity among the populations that have felt the good results of our control and thus delay the conferment upon them of the fuller measures of local self-government, of education, and of industrial and agricultural development which we stand ready to give to them.

By the spring of this year the effective opposition of the dissatisfied Tagals to the authority of the United States was virtually ended, thus opening the door for the extension of a stable administration over much of the territory of the Archipelago. Desiring to bring this about, I appointed in March last a civil Commission composed of the Hon. William H. Taft, of Ohio; Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of Michigan; the Hon. Luke I. Wright, of Tennessee; the Hon. Henry C. Ide, of Vermont, and Prof. Bernard Moses, of California. The aims of their mission and the scope of their authority are clearly set forth in my instructions of April 7, 1900, addressed to the Secretary of War to be transmitted to them:

"In the message transmitted to the Congress on the 5th of December, 1899, I said, speaking of the Philippine Islands: 'As long as the insurrection continues the military arm must necessarily be supreme. But there is no reason why steps should not be taken from time to time to inaugurate governments essentially popular in their form as fast as territory is held and controlled by our troops. To this end I am considering the advisability of the return of the commission, or such of the members thereof as can be secured, to aid the existing authorities and facilitate this work throughout the islands.'

"To give effect to the intention thus expressed, I have appointed Hon. William H. Taft, of Ohio; Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of Michigan; Hon. Luke I. Wright, of Tennessee; Hon. Henry C. Ide, of Vermont, and Prof. Bernard Moses, of California, Commissioners to the Philippine Islands to continue and perfect the work of organizing and establishing civil government already commenced by the military authorities, subject in all respects to any laws which the Congress may hereafter enact.

"The Commissioners named will meet and act as a board, and the Hon. William H. Taft is designated as president of the board. It is probable that the transfer of authority from military commanders to civil officers will be gradual and will occupy a considerable period. Its successful accomplishment and the maintenance of peace and order in the meantime will require the most perfect cooperation between the civil and military authorities in the island, and both should be directed during the transition period by the same Executive Department. The commission will therefore report to the Secretary of War, and all their action will be subject to your approval and control.

"You will instruct the commission to proceed to the city of Manila, where they will make their principal office, and to communicate with the military governor of the Philippine Islands, whom you will at the same time direct to render to them every assistance within his power in the performance of their duties. Without hampering them by too specific instructions, they should in general be enjoined, after making themselves familiar with the conditions and needs of the country, to devote their attention in the first instance to the establishment of municipal governments, in which the natives of the islands, both in the cities and in the rural communities, shall be afforded the opportunity to manage their own local affairs to the fullest extent of which they are capable and subject to the least degree of supervision and control which a careful study of their capacities and observation of the workings of native control show to be consistent with the maintenance of law, order, and loyalty.

"The next subject in order of importance should be the organization of government in the larger administrative divisions corresponding to counties, departments, or provinces, in which the common interests of many or several municipalities falling within the same tribal lines, or the same natural geographical limits, may best be subserved by a common administration. Whenever the commission is of the opinion that the condition of affairs in the islands is such that the central administration may safely be transferred from military to civil control they will report that conclusion to you, with their recommendations as to the form of central government to be established for the purpose of taking over the control.

"Beginning with the 1st day of September, 1900, the authority to exercise, subject to my approval, through the Secretary of War, that part of the power of government in the Philippine Islands which is of a legislative nature is to be transferred from the military governor of the islands to this commission, to be thereafter exercised by them in the place and stead of the military governor, under such rules and regulations as you shall prescribe, until the establishment of the civil central government for the islands contemplated in the last foregoing paragraph, or until Congress shall otherwise provide. Exercise of this legislative authority will include the making of rules and orders, having the effect of law, for the raising of revenue by taxes, customs duties, and imposts; the appropriation and expenditure of public funds of the islands; the establishment of an educational system throughout the islands; the establishment of a system to secure an efficient civil service; the organization and establishment of courts; the organization and establishment of municipal and departmental governments, and all other matters of a civil nature for which the military governor is now competent to provide by rules or orders of a legislative character.

"The commission will also have power during the same period to appoint to office such officers under the judicial, educational, and civil-service systems and in the municipal and departmental governments as shall be provided for. Until the complete transfer of control the military governor will remain the chief executive head of the government of the islands, and will exercise the executive authority now possessed by him and not herein expressly assigned to the commission, subject, however, to the rules and orders enacted by the commission in the exercise of the legislative powers conferred upon them. In the meantime the municipal and departmental governments will continue to report to the military governor and be subject to his administrative supervision and control, under your direction, but that supervision and control will be confined within the narrowest limits consistent with the requirement that the powers of government in the municipalities and departments shall be honestly and effectively exercised and that law and order and individual freedom shall be maintained.

"All legislative rules and orders, establishments of government, and appointments to office by the commission will take effect immediately, or at such times as they shall designate, subject to your approval and action upon the coming in of the commission's reports, which are to be made from time to time as their action is taken. Wherever civil governments are constituted under the direction of the commission such military posts, garrisons, and forces will be continued for the suppression of insurrection and brigandage and the maintenance of law and order as the military commander shall deem requisite, and the military forces shall be at all times subject, under his orders, to the call of the civil authorities for the maintenance of law and order and the enforcement of their authority.

"In the establishment of municipal governments the commission will take as the basis of their work the governments established by the military governor under his order of August 8, 1899, and under the report of the board constituted by the military governor by his order of January 29, 1900, to formulate and report a plan of municipal government, of which His Honor Cayetano Arellano, President of the Audiencia, was chairman, and they will give to the conclusions of that board the weight and consideration which the high character and distinguished abilities of its members justify.

"In the constitution of departmental or provincial governments they will give especial attention to the existing government of the island of Negros, constituted, with the approval of the people of that island, under the order of the military governor of July 22, 1899, and after verifying, so far as may be practicable, the reports of the successful working of that government, they will be guided by the experience thus acquired so far as it may be applicable to the condition existing in other portions of the Philippines. They will avail themselves, to the fullest degree practicable, of the conclusions reached by the previous commission to the Philippines.

"In the distribution of powers among the governments organized by the commission, the presumption is always to be in favor of the smaller subdivision, so that all the powers which can properly be exercised by the municipal government shall be vested in that government, and all the powers of a more general character which can be exercised by the departmental government shall be vested in that government, and so that in the governmental system, which is the result of the process, the central government of the islands, following the example of the distribution of the powers between the States and the National Government of the United States, shall have no direct administration except of matters of purely general concern, and shall have only such supervision and control over local governments as may be necessary to secure and enforce faithful and efficient administration by local officers.

"The many different degrees of civilization and varieties of custom and capacity among the people of the different islands preclude very definite instruction as to the part which the people shall take in the selection of their own officers; but these general rules are to be observed: That in all cases the municipal officers, who administer the local affairs of the people, are to be selected by the people, and that wherever officers of more extended jurisdiction are to be selected in any way natives of the islands are to be preferred, and if they can be found competent and willing to perform the duties, they are to receive the offices in preference to any others.

"It will be necessary to fill some offices for the present with Americans which after a time may well be filled by natives of the islands. As soon as practicable a system for ascertaining the merit and fitness of candidates for civil office should be put in force. An indispensable qualification for all offices and positions of trust and authority in the islands must be absolute and unconditional loyalty to the United States, and absolute and unhampered authority and power to remove and punish any officer deviating from that standard must at all times be retained in the hands of the central authority of the islands.

"In all the forms of government and administrative provisions which they are authorized to prescribe the commission should bear in mind that the government which they are establishing is designed not for our satisfaction, or for the expression of our theoretical views, but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands, and the measures adopted should be made to conform to their customs, their habits, and even their prejudices, to the fullest extent consistent with the accomplishment of the indispensable requisites of just and effective government.

"At the same time the commission should bear in mind, and the people of the islands should be made plainly to understand, that there are certain great principles of government which have been made the basis of our governmental system which we deem essential to the rule of law and the maintenance of individual freedom, and of which they have, unfortunately, been denied the experience possessed by us; that there are also certain practical rules of government which we have found to be essential to the preservation of these great principles of liberty and law, and that these principles and these rules of government must be established and maintained in their islands for the sake of their liberty and happiness, however much they may conflict with the customs or laws of procedure with which they are familiar.

"It is evident that the most enlightened thought of the Philippine Islands fully appreciates the importance of these principles and rules, and they will inevitably within a short time command universal assent. Upon every division and branch of the government of the Philippines, therefore, must be imposed these inviolable rules:

"That no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation; that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense; that excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted; that no person shall be put twice in jeopardy for the same offense, or be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; that the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist except as a punishment for crime; that no bill of attainder or ex-post-facto law shall be passed; that no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the rights of the people to peaceably assemble and petition the Government for a redress of grievances; that no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall forever be allowed.

"It will be the duty of the commission to make a thorough investigation into the titles to the large tracts of land held or claimed by individuals or by religious orders; into the justice of the claims and complaints made against such landholders by the people of the island or any part of the people, and to seek by wise and peaceable measures a just settlement of the controversies and redress of wrongs which have caused strife and bloodshed in the past. In the performance of this duty the commission is enjoined to see that no injustice is done; to have regard for substantial rights and equity, disregarding technicalities so far as substantial right permits, and to observe the following rules:

"That the provision of the treaty of Paris pledging the United States to the protection of all rights of property in the islands, and as well the principle of our own Government which prohibits the taking of private property without due process of law, shall not be violated; that the welfare of the people of the islands, which should be a paramount consideration, shall be attained consistently with this rule of property right; that if it becomes necessary for the public interest of the people of the islands to dispose of claims to property which the commission finds to be not lawfully acquired and held disposition shall be made thereof by due legal procedure, in which there shall be full opportunity for fair and impartial hearing and judgment; that if the same public interests require the extinguishment of property rights lawfully acquired and held due compensation shall be made out of the public treasury therefor; that no form of religion and no minister of religion shall be forced upon any community or upon any citizen of the islands; that, upon the other hand, no minister of religion shall be interfered with or molested in following his calling, and that the separation between state and church shall be real, entire, and absolute.

"It will be the duty of the commission to promote and extend, and, as they find occasion, to improve, the system of education already inaugurated by the military authorities. In doing this they should regard as of first importance the extension of a system of primary education which shall be free to all, and which shall tend to fit the people for the duties of citizenship and for the ordinary avocations of a civilized community. This instruction should be given in the first instance in every part of the islands in the language of the people. In view of the great number of languages spoken by the different tribes, it is especially important to the prosperity of the islands that a common medium of communication may be established, and it is obviously desirable that this medium should be the English language. Especial attention should be at once given to affording full opportunity to all the people of the islands to acquire the use of the English language.

"It may be well that the main changes which should be made in the system of taxation and in the body of the laws under which the people are governed, except such changes as have already been made by the military government, should be relegated to the civil government which is to be established under the auspices of the commission. It will, however, be the duty of the commission to inquire diligently as to whether there are any further changes which ought not to be delayed, and if so, they are authorized to make such changes, subject to your approval. In doing so they are to bear in mind that taxes which tend to penalize or repress industry and enterprise are to be avoided; that provisions for taxation should be simple, so that they may be understood by the people; that they should affect the fewest practicable subjects of taxation which will serve for the general distribution of the burden.

"The main body of the laws which regulate the rights and obligations of the people should be maintained with as little interference as possible. Changes made should be mainly in procedure, and in the criminal laws to secure speedy and impartial trials, and at the same time effective administration and respect for individual rights.

"In dealing with the uncivilized tribes of the islands the commission should adopt the same course followed by Congress in permitting the tribes of our North American Indians to maintain their tribal organization and government, and under which many of those tribes are now living in peace and contentment, surrounded by a civilization to which they are unable or unwilling to conform. Such tribal governments should, however, be subjected to wise and firm regulation, and, without undue or petty interference, constant and active effort should be exercised to prevent barbarous practices and introduce civilized customs.

"Upon all officers and employees of the United States, both civil and military, should be impressed a sense of the duty to observe not merely the material but the personal and social rights of the people of the islands, and to treat them with the same courtesy and respect for their personal dignity which the people of the United States are accustomed to require from each other.

"The articles of capitulation of the city of Manila on the 13th of August, 1898, concluded with these words:

"'This city, its inhabitants, its churches and religious worship, its educational establishments, and its private property of all descriptions, are placed under the special safeguard of the faith and honor of the American Army.'

"I believe that this pledge has been faithfully kept. As high and sacred an obligation rests upon the Government of the United States to give protection for property and life, civil and religious freedom, and wise, firm, and unselfish guidance in the paths of peace and prosperity to all the people of the Philippine Islands. I charge this commission to labor for the full performance of this obligation, which concerns the honor and conscience of their country, in the firm hope that through their labors all the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands may come to look back with gratitude to the day when God gave victory to American arms at Manila and set their land under the sovereignty and the protection of the people of the United States."

Coincidently with the entrance of the commission upon its labors I caused to be issued by General MacArthur, the military governor of the Philippines, on June 21, 1900, a proclamation of amnesty in generous terms, of which many of the insurgents took advantage, among them a number of important leaders.

This Commission, composed of eminent citizens representing the diverse geographical and political interests of the country, and bringing to their task the ripe fruits of long and intelligent service in educational, administrative, and judicial careers, made great progress from the outset. As early as August 21, 1900, it submitted a preliminary report, which will be laid before the Congress, and from which it appears that already the good effects of returning order are felt; that business, interrupted by hostilities, is improving as peace extends; that a larger area is under sugar cultivation than ever before; that the customs revenues are greater than at any time during the Spanish rule; that economy and efficiency in the military administration have created a surplus fund of $6,000,000, available for needed public improvements; that a stringent civil-service law is in preparation; that railroad communications are expanding, opening up rich districts, and that a comprehensive scheme of education is being organized.

Later reports from the commission show yet more encouraging advance toward insuring the benefits of liberty and good government to the Filipinos, in the interest of humanity and with the aim of building up an enduring, self-supporting, and self-administering community in those far eastern seas. I would impress upon the Congress that whatever legislation may be enacted in respect to the Philippine Islands should be along these generous lines. The fortune of war has thrown upon this nation an unsought trust which should be unselfishly discharged, and devolved upon this Government a moral as well as material responsibility toward these millions whom we have freed from an oppressive yoke.

I have on another occasion called the Filipinos "the wards of the nation." Our obligation as guardian was not lightly assumed; it must not be otherwise than honestly fulfilled, aiming first of all to benefit those who have come under our fostering care. It is our duty so to treat them that our flag may be no less beloved in the mountains of Luzon and the fertile zones of Mindanao and Negros than it is at home; that there as here it shall be the revered symbol of liberty, enlightenment, and progress in every avenue of development.

The Filipinos are a race quick to learn and to profit by knowledge. He would be rash who, with the teachings of contemporaneous history in view, would fix a limit to the degree of culture and advancement yet within the reach of these people if our duty toward them be faithfully performed.

The civil government of Porto Rico provided for by the act of the Congress approved April 12, 1900, is in successful operation. The courts have been established. The governor and his associates, working intelligently and harmoniously, are meeting with commendable success.

On the 6th of November a general election was held in the island for members of the Legislature, and the body elected has been called to convene on the first Monday of December.

I recommend that legislation be enacted by the Congress conferring upon the Secretary of the Interior supervision over the public lands in Porto Rico, and that he be directed to ascertain the location and quantity of lands the title to which remained in the Crown of Spain at the date of cession of Porto Rico to the United States, and that appropriations necessary for surveys be made, and that the methods of the disposition of such lands be prescribed by law.

On the 25th of July, 1900, I directed that a call be issued for an election in Cuba for members of a constitutional convention to frame a constitution as a basis for a stable and independent government in the island. In pursuance thereof the military governor issued the following instructions:

"Whereas the Congress of the United States by its joint resolution of April 20, 1898, declared—

"'That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

"'That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people;'

"And whereas the people of Cuba have established municipal governments, deriving their authority from the suffrages of the people given under just and equal laws, and are now ready, in like manner, to proceed to the establishment of a general government which shall assume and exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control over the island:

"Therefore, it is ordered that a general election be held in the island of Cuba on the third Saturday of September, in the year nineteen hundred, to elect delegates to a convention to meet in the city of Havana at twelve o'clock noon on the first Monday of November, in the year nineteen hundred, to frame and adopt a constitution for the people of Cuba, and as a part thereof to provide for and agree with the Government of the United States upon the relations to exist between that Government and the government of Cuba, and to provide for the election by the people of officers under such constitution and the transfer of government to the officers so elected.

"The election will be held in the several voting precincts of the island under, and pursuant to, the provisions of the electoral law of April 18, 1900, and the amendments thereof."

The election was held on the 15th of September, and the convention assembled on the 5th of November, 1900, and is now in session.

In calling the convention to order, the military governor of Cuba made the following statement:

"As military governor of the island, representing the President of the United States, I call this convention to order.

"It will be your duty, first, to frame and adopt a constitution for Cuba, and when that has been done to formulate what in your opinion ought to be the relations between Cuba and the United States.

"The Constitution must be adequate to secure a stable, orderly, and free government.

"When you have formulated the relations which in your opinion ought to exist between Cuba and the United States the Government of the United States will doubtless take such action on its part as shall lead to a final and authoritative agreement between the people of the two countries to the promotion of their common interests.

"All friends of Cuba will follow your deliberations with the deepest interest, earnestly desiring that you shall reach just conclusions, and that by the dignity, individual self-restraint, and wise conservatism which shall characterize your proceedings the capacity of the Cuban people for representative government may be signally illustrated.

"The fundamental distinction between true representative government and dictatorship is that in the former every representative of the people, in whatever office, confines himself strictly within the limits of his defined powers. Without such restraint there can be no free constitutional government.

"Under the order pursuant to which you have been elected and convened, you have no duty and no authority to take part in the present government of the island. Your powers are strictly limited by the terms of that order."

When the convention concludes its labors I will transmit to the Congress the constitution as framed by the convention for its consideration and for such action as it may deem advisable.

I renew the recommendation made in my special message of February 10, 1899, as to the necessity for cable communication between the United States and Hawaii, with extension to Manila. Since then circumstances have strikingly emphasized this need. Surveys have shown the entire feasibility of a chain of cables which at each stopping place shall touch on American territory, so that the system shall be under our own complete control. Manila once within telegraphic reach, connection with the systems of the Asiatic coast would open increased and profitable opportunities for a more direct cable route from our shores to the Orient than is now afforded by the trans-Atlantic, continental, and trans-Asian lines. I urge attention to this important matter.

The present strength of the Army is 100,000 men—65,000 regulars and 35,000 volunteers. Under the act of March 2, 1899, on the 30th of June next the present volunteer force will be discharged and the Regular Army will be reduced to 2,447 officers and 29,025 enlisted men.

In 1888 a board of officers convened by President Cleveland adopted a comprehensive scheme of coast-defense fortifications, which involved the outlay of something over one hundred million dollars. This plan received the approval of the Congress, and since then regular appropriations have been made and the work of fortification has steadily progressed.

More than sixty millions of dollars have been invested in a great number of forts and guns, with all the complicated and scientific machinery and electrical appliances necessary for their use. The proper care of this defensive machinery requires men trained in its use. The number of men necessary to perform this duty alone is ascertained by the War Department, at a minimum allowance, to be 18,420.

There are fifty-eight or more military posts in the United States other than the coast-defense fortifications.

The number of these posts is being constantly increased by the Congress. More than $22,000,000 have been expended in building and equipment, and they can only be cared for by the Regular Army. The posts now in existence and others to be built provide for accommodations for, and if fully garrisoned require, 26,000 troops. Many of these posts are along our frontier or at important strategic points, the occupation of which is necessary.

We have in Cuba between 5,000 and 6,000 troops. For the present our troops in that island can not be withdrawn or materially diminished, and certainly not until the conclusion of the labors of the constitutional convention now in session and a government provided by the new constitution shall have been established and its stability assured.

In Porto Rico we have reduced the garrisons to 1,636, which includes 879 native troops. There is no room for further reduction here.

We will be required to keep a considerable force in the Philippine Islands for some time to come. From the best information obtainable we will need there for the immediate future from 45,000 to 60,000 men. I am sure the number may be reduced as the insurgents shall come to acknowledge the authority of the United States, of which there are assuring indications.

It must be apparent that we will require an army of about 60,000, and that during present conditions in Cuba and the Philippines the President should have authority to increase the force to the present number of 100,000. Included in this number authority should be given to raise native troops in the Philippines up to 15,000, which the Taft Commission believe will be more effective in detecting and suppressing guerrillas, assassins, and ladrones than our own soldiers.

The full discussion of this subject by the Secretary of War in his annual report is called to your earnest attention.

I renew the recommendation made in my last Annual Message that the Congress provide a special medal of honor for the volunteers, regulars, sailors, and marines on duty in the Philippines who voluntarily remained in the service after their terms of enlistment had expired.

I favor the recommendation of the Secretary of War for the detail of officers from the line of the Army when vacancies occur in the Adjutant-General's Department, Inspector-General's Department, Quartermaster's Department, Subsistence Department, Pay Department, Ordnance Department, and Signal Corps.

The Army can not be too highly commended for its faithful and effective service in active military operations in the field and the difficult work of civil administration.

The continued and rapid growth of the postal service is a sure index of the great and increasing business activity of the country. Its most striking new development is the extension of rural free delivery. This has come almost wholly within the last year. At the beginning of the fiscal year 1899–1900 the number of routes in operation was only 391, and most of these had been running less than twelve months. On the 15th of November, 1900, the number had increased to 2,614, reaching into forty-four States and Territories, and serving a population of 1,801,524. The number of applications now pending and awaiting action nearly equals all those granted up to the present time, and by the close of the current fiscal year about 4,000 routes will have been established, providing for the daily delivery of mails at the scattered homes of about three and a half millions of rural population.

This service ameliorates the isolation of farm life, conduces to good roads, and quickens and extends the dissemination of general information. Experience thus far has tended to allay the apprehension that it would be so expensive as to forbid its general adoption or make it a serious burden. Its actual application has shown that it increases postal receipts, and can be accompanied by reductions in other branches of the service, so that the augmented revenues and the accomplished savings together materially reduce the net cost. The evidences which point to these conclusions are presented in detail in the annual report of the Postmaster-General, which, with its recommendations, is commended to the consideration of the Congress. The full development of this special service, however, requires such a large outlay of money that it should be undertaken only after a careful study and thorough understanding of all that it involves.

Very efficient service has been rendered by the Navy in connection with the insurrection in the Philippines and the recent disturbance in China.

A very satisfactory settlement has been made of the long-pending question of the manufacture of armor plate. A reasonable price has been secured and the necessity for a Government armor plant avoided.

I approve of the recommendations of the Secretary for new vessels and for additional officers and men which the required increase of the Navy makes necessary. I commend to the favorable action of the Congress the measure now pending for the erection of a statue to the memory of the late Admiral David D. Porter. I commend also the establishment of a national naval reserve and of the grade of vice-admiral. Provision should be made, as recommended by the Secretary, for suitable rewards for special merit. Many officers who rendered the most distinguished service during the recent war with Spain have received in return no recognition from the Congress.

The total area of public lands as given by the Secretary of the Interior is approximately 1,071,881,662 acres, of which 917,135,880 acres are undisposed of and 154,745,782 acres have been reserved for various purposes. The public lands disposed of during the year amount to 13,453,887.96 acres, including 62,423.09 acres of Indian lands, an increase of 4,271,474.80 over the preceding year. The total receipts from the sale of public lands during the fiscal year were $4,379,758.10, an increase of $1,309,620.76 over the preceding year.

The results obtained from our forest policy have demonstrated its wisdom and the necessity in the interest of the public for its continuance and increased appropriations by the Congress for the carrying on of the work. On June 30, 1900, there were thirty-seven forest reserves, created by Presidential proclamations under section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, embracing an area of 46,425,529 acres.

During the past year the Olympic Reserve, in the State of Washington, was reduced 265,040 acres, leaving its present area at 1,923,840 acres. The Prescott Reserve, in Arizona, was increased from 10,240 acres to 423,680 acres, and the Big Horn Reserve, in Wyoming, was increased from 1,127,680 acres to 1,180,800 acres. A new reserve, the Santa Ynez, in California, embracing an area of 145,000 acres, was created during this year. On October 10, 1900, the Crow Creek Forest Reserve, in Wyoming, was created, with an area of 56,320 acres.

At the end of the fiscal year there were on the pension roll 993,529 names, a net increase of 2,010 over the fiscal year 1899. The number added to the rolls during the year was 45,344. The amount disbursed for Army pensions during the year was $134,700,597.24, and for Navy pensions $3,761,533.41, a total of $138,462,130.65, leaving an unexpended balance of $5,542,768.25 to be covered into the Treasury, which shows an increase over the previous year's expenditure of $107,077.70. There were 684 names added to the rolls during the year by special acts passed at the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

The act of May 9, 1900, among other things provides for an extension of income to widows pensioned under said act to $250 per annum. The Secretary of the Interior believes that by the operations of this act the number of persons pensioned under it will increase and the increased annual payment for pensions will be between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

The Government justly appreciates the services of its soldiers and sailors by making pension payments liberal beyond precedent to them, their widows and orphans.

There were 36,540 letters patent granted, including reissues and designs, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900; 1,660 trademarks, 682 labels, and 93 prints registered. The number of patents which expired was 19,988. The total receipts for patents were $1,358,228.35. The expenditures were $1,247,827.58, showing a surplus of $110,400.77.

The attention of the Congress is called to the report of the Secretary of the Interior touching the necessity for the further establishment of schools in the Territory of Alaska, and favorable action is invited thereon.

Much interesting information is given in the report of the governor of Hawaii as to the progress and development of the islands during the period from July 7, 1898, the date of the approval of the joint resolution of the Congress providing for their annexation, up to April 30, 1900, the date of the approval of the act providing a government for the Territory, and thereafter.

The last Hawaiian census, taken in the year 1896, gives a total population of 109,020, of which 31,019 were native Hawaiians. The number of Americans reported was 8,485. The results of the Federal census, taken this year, show the islands to have a total population of 154,001, showing an increase over that reported in 1896 of 44,981, or 41.2 per cent.

There has been marked progress in the educational, agricultural, and railroad development of the islands.

In the Territorial act of April 30, 1900, section 7 of said act repeals chapter 34 of the civil laws of Hawaii, whereby the Government was to assist in encouraging and developing the agricultural resources of the Republic, especially irrigation. The governor of Hawaii recommends legislation looking to the development of such water supply as may exist on the public lands, with a view of promoting land settlement. The earnest consideration of the Congress is invited to this important recommendation and others, as embodied in the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Director of the Census states that the work in connection with the Twelfth Census is progressing favorably. This national undertaking, ordered by the Congress each decade, has finally resulted in the collection of an aggregation of statistical facts to determine the industrial growth of the country, its manufacturing and mechanical resources, its richness in mines and forests, the number of its agriculturists, their farms and products, its educational and religious opportunities, as well as questions pertaining to sociological conditions.

The labors of the officials in charge of the Bureau indicate that the four important and most-desired subjects, namely, population, agricultural, manufacturing, and vital statistics, will be completed within the limit prescribed by the law of March 3, 1899.

The field work incident to the above inquiries is now practically finished, and as a result the population of the States and Territories, including the Hawaiian Islands and Alaska, has been announced. The growth of population during the last decade amounts to over 13,000,000, a greater numerical increase than in any previous census in the history of the country.

Bulletins will be issued as rapidly as possible giving the population by States and Territories, by minor civil divisions. Several announcements of this kind have already been made, and it is hoped that the list will be completed by January 1. Other bulletins giving the results of the manufacturing and agricultural inquiries will be given to the public as rapidly as circumstances will admit.

The Director, while confident of his ability to complete the different branches of the undertaking in the allotted time, finds himself embarrassed by the lack of a trained force properly equipped for statistical work, thus raising the question whether in the interest of economy and a thorough execution of the census work there should not be retained in the Government employ a certain number of experts, not only to aid in the preliminary organization prior to the taking of the decennial census, but in addition to have the advantage in the field and office work of the Bureau of trained assistants to facilitate the early completion of this enormous undertaking.

I recommend that the Congress at its present session apportion representation among the several States as provided by the Constitution.

The Department of Agriculture has been extending its work during the past year, reaching farther for new varieties of seeds and plants; cooperating more fully with the States and Territories in research along useful lines; making progress in meteorological work relating to lines of wireless telegraphy and forecasts for ocean-going vessels; continuing inquiry as to animal disease; looking into the extent and character of food adulteration; outlining plans for the care, preservation, and intelligent harvesting of our woodlands; studying soils that producers may cultivate with better knowledge of conditions, and helping to clothe desert places with grasses suitable to our arid regions. Our island possessions are being considered that their peoples may be helped to produce the tropical products now so extensively brought into the United States. Inquiry into methods of improving our roads has been active during the year; help has been given to many localities, and scientific investigation of material in the States and Territories has been inaugurated. Irrigation problems in our semi-arid regions are receiving careful and increased consideration.

An extensive exhibit at Paris of the products of agriculture has made the peoples of many countries more familiar with the varied products of our fields and their comparative excellence.

The collection of statistics regarding our crops is being improved and sources of information are being enlarged, to the end that producers may have the earliest advices regarding crop conditions. There has never been a time when those for whom it was established have shown more appreciation of the services of the Department.

In my annual message of December 5, 1898, I called attention to the necessity for some amendment of the alien-contract law. There still remain important features of the rightful application of the eight-hour law for the benefit of labor and of the principle of arbitration, and I again commend these subjects to the careful attention of the Congress.

That there may be secured the best service possible in the Philippine Islands, I have issued, under date of November 30, 1900, the following order:

"The United States Civil Service Commission is directed to render such assistance as may be practicable to the Civil Service Board, created under the act of the United States Philippine Commission, for the establishment and maintenance of an honest and efficient civil service in the Philippine Islands, and for that purpose to conduct examinations for the civil service of the Philippine Islands upon the request of the Civil Service Board of said islands, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the said Board and the said United States Civil Service Commission."

The Civil Service Commission is greatly embarrassed in its work for want of an adequate permanent force for clerical and other assistance. Its needs are fully set forth in its report. I invite attention to the report, and especially urge upon the Congress that this important bureau of the public service, which passes upon the qualifications and character of so large a number of the officers and employees of the Government, should be supported by all needed appropriations to secure promptness and efficiency.

I am very much impressed with the statement made by the heads of all the Departments of the urgent necessity of a hall of public records. In every departmental building in Washington, so far as I am informed, the space for official records is not only exhausted, but the walls of rooms are lined with shelves, the middle floor space of many rooms is filled with file cases, and garrets and basements, which were never intended and are unfitted for their accommodation, are crowded with them. Aside from the inconvenience, there is great danger, not only from fire, but from the weight of these records upon timbers not intended for their support. There should be a separate building especially designed for the purpose of receiving and preserving the annually accumulating archives of the several Executive Departments. Such a hall need not be a costly structure, but should be so arranged as to admit of enlargement from time to time. I urgently recommend that the Congress take early action in this matter.

I transmit to the Congress a resolution adopted at a recent meeting of the American Bar Association concerning the proposed celebration of John Marshall Day, February 4, 1901. Fitting exercises have been arranged, and it is earnestly desired by the committee that the Congress may participate in this movement to honor the memory of the great jurist.

The transfer of the Government to this city is a fact of great historical interest. Among the people there is a feeling of genuine pride in the Capital of the Republic.

It is a matter of interest in this connection that in 1800 the population of the District of Columbia was 14,093; to-day it is 278,718. The population of the city of Washington was then 3,210; to-day it is 218,196.

The Congress having provided for "an appropriate national celebration of the Centennial Anniversary of the Establishment of the Seat of Government in the District of Columbia," the committees authorized by it have prepared a programme for the 12th of December, 1900, which date has been selected as the anniversary day. Deep interest has been shown in the arrangements for the celebration by the members of the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, the committee of Governors appointed by the President, and the committees appointed by the citizens and inhabitants of the District of Columbia generally. The programme, in addition to a reception and other exercises at the Executive Mansion, provides commemorative exercises to be held jointly by the Senate and House of Representatives in the Hall of the House of Representatives, and a reception in the evening at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in honor of the governors of the States and Territories.

In our great prosperity we must guard against the danger it invites of extravagance in Government expenditures and appropriations; and the chosen representatives of the people will, I doubt not, furnish an example in their legislation of that wise economy which in a season of plenty husbands for the future. In this era of great business activity and opportunity caution is not untimely. It will not abate, but strengthen, confidence. It will not retard, but promote, legitimate industrial and commercial expansion. Our growing power brings with it temptations and perils requiring constant vigilance to avoid. It must not be used to invite conflicts, nor for oppression, but for the more effective maintenance of those principles of equality and justice upon which our institutions and happiness depend. Let us keep always in mind that the foundation of our Government is liberty; its superstructure peace.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 3, 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the message, with the accompanying papers, will be laid upon the table and printed for the use of the Senate.

DEATH OF SENATORS GEAR AND DAVIS.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that I announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, Hon. JOHN HENRY GEAR, which occurred in this city on the 14th day of July last. At some future time, of which I shall give due notice, I desire to afford the Senate an opportunity of paying tribute to the memory of Senator GEAR and his long and distinguished services to his State and his country. At this time I beg leave to offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JOHN HENRY GEAR, late a Senator from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it is my sad duty to announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, Senator CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, at his home in St. Paul, Minn., on the 27th of November last, at 9 o'clock in the evening, after a lingering illness of more than two months. In his death our nation has lost one of its foremost public servants and Minnesota one of the noblest and best of her sons.

On some future occasion I shall ask the Senate to set aside a day for the consideration of tributes to the memory of my deceased colleague. On this occasion I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. CUSHMAN KELLOGG DAVIS, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I offer an additional resolution, which I ask to have read and considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, Hon. JOHN HENRY GEAR and Hon. CUSHMAN KELLOGG DAVIS, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 4, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 3, 1900.

This being the day designated by the Constitution, the members of the House of Representatives assembled in their Hall for the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

At 12 o'clock noon, the Speaker, Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON, a Representative from the State of Iowa, called the House to order.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, God over all, through whose eternal energy all things proceed, and by whose infinite power all things at last must fulfill their appointed destiny, humbly and most reverently we bow before Thee.

Let Thy blessings descend upon us and so move upon the hearts of these Thy servants, that all the legislative acts of this session of Congress may be in accordance with Thy will. To this end encourage every noble endeavor and discourage all unworthiness.

Rule Thou in the hearts of our rulers, that the genius of our nation may more and more obtain. Bless every skill and worthy industry throughout our land, every school and college; strengthen the ties of fraternity and make Christian patriots of us all.

That in the great things of life we may grow greater, deepen Thou our sense of responsibility and our consciousness of wrong so that justice and truth and right may ever be the glory of our Union.

Since last we met Thou hast called two of our members to their homes above. Bless, we pray Thee, their colleagues and friends; comfort their dear ones with the hope of immortality.

And Thine shall be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The call of the roll discloses the presence of 287 members, more than a quorum; and therefore the House is ready to proceed to business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Also resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that, in accordance with the provisions of the preceding resolution, the President pro tempore of the Senate had appointed Mr. HOAR and Mr. COCKRELL as such committee on the part of the Senate.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS-ELECT.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege—the swearing in of a member-elect.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the credentials of several members-elect who, the Chair is advised, are present; and after the reading of the credentials these gentlemen will step forward and take the oath of office. The Chair thinks this will expedite business somewhat.

The Clerk read as follows:

The STATE OF IOWA, ss:

To Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL,
Clerk of the House of Representatives:

This is to certify that at an election holden on Tuesday, November 6, A. D. 1900, the following-named persons were duly elected Representatives in Congress, to represent the Congressional districts of said State herein set forth, to fill vacancies, to wit:

Walter I. Smith, of Council Bluffs, in the county of Pottawattamie, to succeed Smith McPherson, resigned on the 6th day of June, A. D. 1900.

James P. Conner, of Denison, in the county of Crawford, to succeed JONATHAN P. DOLLIVER, resigned, to take effect on the first Monday of December, A. D. 1900.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of Iowa, this 28th day of November, A. D. 1900.

LESLIE M. SHAW.

By the governor:

G. L. DOBSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if the credentials just read entitle the holder to be sworn in as member of the House. They recite that Mr. DOLLIVER'S resignation was to take effect after this election, and that does not seem possible. I have no desire, however, to interrupt the proceedings at this point.

The Clerk read the credentials of the following-named members-elect:

Edward De V. Morrell, of Pennsylvania, to fill the unexpired term of Hon. Alfred C. Harmer, deceased.

Josiah L. Kerr, of Maryland, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. John Walter Smith.

Allan L. McDermott, of New Jersey, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William D. Daly.

Samuel D. Woods, of California, for the unexpired term of Marion De Vries, resigned.

William Richardson, of Alabama, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. Joseph Wheeler.

Walter O. Hoffecker, of Delaware, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. John H. Hoffecker.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the more I reflect upon it the more I am convinced that the credentials of the gentleman elected to succeed Mr. DOLLIVER are not in a form which can be accepted by the House. The credentials on their face show that this gentleman was elected to fill a vacancy that had not occurred when the election was held, Mr. DOLLIVER'S resignation having been tendered to the governor to take effect the first Monday of December. Without any careful examination of the question, my impression is distinct that the courts have held more than once that a resignation to take effect at some future day is not a resignation at all, but merely a notice of an intention to resign. If that is true, then Mr. DOLLIVER had not resigned his seat as a member of this House when the governor of Iowa ordered that election.

I believe the case I now have in my mind was decided by the supreme court of Indiana, and the court declared that a resignation to take effect at some future day was not a resignation at all in law, but merely a notice of an intention to resign, and that such notice could be withdrawn.

Now, I realize that the district from which this gentleman comes ought not to be without a Representative. I realize that it was the intention of the people of that district that Mr. Conner should succeed Mr. DOLLIVER, lately appointed to the Senate. But so far as this House is concerned, it does not know the day when the appointment of Mr. DOLLIVER to the Senate took effect. Surely the governor of Iowa had no power to appoint him to the Senate to take effect at some future day. His appointment must have taken effect the day it was made, because a vacancy in the representation of Iowa in the Senate existed the day the appointment was made, and the governor had no option as to when his appointment should take effect.

Now, if the governor issued the commission as Senator to Mr. DOLLIVER—I have no personal knowledge of this—but if he did, no matter when it was stated in the commission that the appointment should take effect, that statement was beyond the power of the governor to make; and therefore the appointment, if effective at all, was effective from the day the commission was granted.

Though I regret to press this matter, I am unwilling that this credential shall be accepted by the House as properly and legally entitling the holder of it to membership in this body.

The SPEAKER. This objection being made, Mr. Conner will step aside until the other gentlemen whose credentials have been read are sworn.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, if it be in order, I desire to ask consent for the swearing in of Albert D. Shaw, who has been elected to this Congress to succeed Charles A. Chickering, who lately represented the Twenty-fourth New York district, and by whose death the vacancy was created. To fill that vacancy Colonel Shaw has been elected by a majority exceeding 11,000. There is no contest, no question over his election. The reason his credentials are not here at this time is that under the laws of the State of New York the State returning board does not assemble until this week, and it will be some days before the credentials are made out in due form. In accordance with the custom of the House in such cases, I ask that Colonel Shaw be sworn in with these other gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] asks unanimous consent that his colleague-elect, Mr. Shaw, be sworn in at this time, notwithstanding the fact that his credentials have not been filed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentlemen whose credentials have been read, with the exception of Mr. Conner, of Iowa, will step forward to take the oath of office, and also Mr. Shaw, of New York.

The gentlemen named came forward and were duly sworn.

MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make an announcement, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. J. P. DOLLIVER having resigned as a member of the House, the Chair appoints Mr. J. W. BABCOCK as a member on the Committee on Ways and Means.

NOTIFICATIONS TO THE PRESIDENT AND THE SENATE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House, to join the committee appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

The resolution was adopted; and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. PAYNE, Mr. GROSVENOR, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

Mr. BINGHAM offered the following resolution; which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

MINORITY REPORT ON SHIPPING SUBSIDY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries upon the shipping subsidy bill be reprinted.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. DALZELL (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). I move that the House take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House (at 2 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

The committee appointed to wait on the President appeared at the bar of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed by the House, to join a like committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the House had assembled and was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make report that they have performed that duty, and the President informed them that he would immediately communicate a message in writing.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will report.

The message was read at length.

[For message see Senate proceedings for this day.]

At the conclusion of the reading of the message there was general applause.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message and the accompanying documents be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the President's message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JOHN HENRY GEAR, late a Senator from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. CUSHMAN KELLOGG DAVIS, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. REEVES, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BARTLETT, for to-day, on account of important business.

To Mr. CAMPBELL, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CUSHMAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. RIORDAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. OVERSTREET, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Edward G. Fugate, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

REPRINT OF REPORTS ON SHIPPING SUBSIDY BILL.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to amend the motion that was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] just before the recess this morning. He moved, as you will remember, that the minority report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on House bill 64 be reprinted. I desire to remind the House that there are two minority reports, and I want to so amend the motion that both of these minority reports shall be included in the motion, and be reprinted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will allow that motion to lie over until to-morrow. I should like to look into the matter of the present condition of those reports, and also to see what is left, if anything, of the copies of the bill and of the majority report.

Mr. GILBERT. I have no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will wait, I will confer with him to-morrow in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the House has already given consent, on the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], to the reprinting of one of the minority reports.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish the gentleman would withdraw that also. I think it would be better that all the reprinting be done at one time.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that there is not a single copy of the minority report to be had.

Mr. GILBERT. Neither one of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. They are not to be found, either in the document room of the House or on the Senate side; and inasmuch as it is stated that the Senate will take up this bill to-morrow, and as the minority of the Senate have not submitted any report, I hardly feel like withdrawing my request, which has been already granted.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Are there not two minority reports?

Mr. GILBERT. There are.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will only delay the printing one day. We are not generally anxious to print documents for the benefit of the Senate. By to-morrow I will confer with both gentlemen, and we will agree on what ought to be done about it. I am not opposed to the printing of all that may be required.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that I have already told members of the Senate that the resolution went through, and that copies of the minority report can be obtained to-morrow. I believe the gentleman must agree with me that as this bill is to be debated, the report ought to be in print so that it can be had by members.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman took advantage of my absence to secure an agreement which ought not to have been made in my absence. So far as information for the Senate is concerned, the Senate has some power of printing when they want information. I understand, from information I have just received, there are no copies of either one of the reports now available. That being true, it seems to me that an agreement ought to be made as to the number of each one of the reports that should be supplied, and then a resolution asking for the printing offered, and I am entirely ready and willing to have the order made; but I do not think one of the minority reports ought to be printed in the absence of the other reports.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I have no objection to the gentleman from Ohio having an order made that the majority report be reprinted, and that the two minority reports be reprinted. It seems to me that, while the matter is being investigated and an agreement made as to the number of each of the reports that should be printed, this reprint might go through this afternoon, so that the copies might be available to-morrow. A great many members have asked me for a copy of the minority report, and I have made inquiries in the Clerk's office and found that there is not a single copy available. I do not think that is a situation that ought to be allowed to continue.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is accounted for by the very great value of the minority report. I think that it is caused also by the interest which has been excited in the subject, and is true of either of the minority reports, and I think it true of the very valuable and able majority report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Kentucky asking a reprint of part 2 of report 890.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. That does not include the minority report signed by three members?

The SPEAKER. Just one. The Chair will state for the information of the House that the majority report is No. 890; then report 890, part 2, is signed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the report 890, part 3, signed by Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. That gentleman secured the consent of the House this morning to the reprint of his part of the report. The gentleman from Kentucky now asks consent of the House for a reprint of this part of the report.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a correction. The report is signed by Mr. Daly, Mr. De Vries, and Mr. SPIGHT, with myself, constituting a majority of the minority.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Two of those gentlemen are no longer members of the House.

The SPEAKER. That does not appear in the title; but I see their names are attached to the end. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will not make a request for the reprinting of the majority report now, as that can be printed under another order of the House.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN H. HOFFECKER.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN H. HOFFECKER, a member of this House from the State of Delaware.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM D. DALY.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM D. DALY, a member of this House from the State of New Jersey.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN HENRY GEAR.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce to the House of Representatives the death of JOHN HENRY GEAR, late a Senator from the State of Iowa, who died in the city of Washington on the 14th day of July last.

Senator GEAR's public career was long and illustrious. It began with Iowa's first political organization. He was perhaps more widely known and beloved than any of her public servants. Regret at his sudden death in the midst of his great career and marked usefulness is everywhere felt in that Commonwealth.

I submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN HENRY GEAR, a Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. CUSHMAN K. DAVIS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to officially announce to this House the death of that distinguished statesman, scholar, and accomplished diplomat, Senator CUSHMAN KELLOGG DAVIS, of Minnesota. His death occurred at his home, in St. Paul, Tuesday evening of last week, at about 11 o'clock. For several weeks he struggled heroically against a disease which at last proved too formidable for him to longer resist, and he yielded with a prayer upon his lips for the future glory of his country.

This is not the appropriate time to speak of the illustrious character and distinguished public services of Senator DAVIS. We will hereafter ask the House to devote a portion of its time to the paying of such tributes to his memory as are befitting his remarkable career of public usefulness, not only in the Senate of the United States, but also in the councils and administrative affairs of his adopted State.

His death has occurred at a time when his great ability and learning were most needed and when his country could least afford to lose him.

As a further mark of our esteem for the distinguished dead, I now offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, a Senator of the United States from the State of Minnesota.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memories of the late Representatives HOFFECKER and DALY and the late Senators GEAR and DAVIS, this House do now adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the families of the deceased Senators and Representatives herein named.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

LUCIEN BAKER, a Senator from the State of Kansas; MARION BUTLER, a Senator from the State of North Carolina; CLARENCE D. CLARK, a Senator from the State of Wyoming; HENRY C. HANSBROUGH, a Senator from the State of North Dakota; HENRY HEITFELD, a Senator from the State of Idaho, and RICHARD F. PETTIGREW, a Senator from the State of South Dakota, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM IOWA.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. Jonathan P. Dolliver, appointed by the governor of Iowa to the place in the Senate made vacant by the death of the late Senator Gear.

The credentials of Jonathan Prentiss Dolliver, appointed by the governor of the State of Iowa to fill the vacancy from that State in the term ending March 3, 1905, occasioned by the death of Senator John H. Gear, were read and ordered to be filed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator appointed will present himself at the desk and take the necessary oath.

Mr. Dolliver was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. ALLISON, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of Congress, copy of a letter from the Commissioner-General of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1900, of November 17, 1900, giving a detailed statement of the expenditures of the commission for the year ended November 15, 1900.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 4, 1900.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, a preliminary report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, dated November 30, 1900.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 4, 1900.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that 10,000 extra copies of that report be printed; 6,000 for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for an order of the Senate that 10,000 extra copies of the report be printed.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection, but the rule—in fact, the law—provides that a motion to print any document, where the printing will cost more than $500, shall go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know, but I suppose that the extra copies would not cost more than $500.

Mr. HALE. It is a pretty extensive report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not voluminous at all.

Mr. LODGE. Is not this the preliminary report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the preliminary report.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the preliminary report.

Mr. LODGE. It is a very short report.

Mr. HALE. Then undoubtedly the cost will be within $500. I do not object to the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The petitioners request that the resolutions be printed as a document. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SUPREME COURT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I introduce a bill to create a supreme court for the Philippine Islands, and I beg leave to call the attention of the Judiciary Committee to the importance of legislation of that character.

The bill provides for a supreme court, consisting of five judges with an annual salary of $20,000 each.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose that in the usage of the Senate, under the arrangement at any rate made last winter, it is not expected that the Judiciary Committee shall have jurisdiction, at the beginning, of this subject. Indeed, it is not the practice of the Senate to send a bill relating solely to the Territorial courts to the Judiciary Committee, but such measures go to the Committee on Territories. I think therefore this bill should go to the Committee on the Philippines.

The bill (S. 4962) to create a supreme court for the Philippine Islands was read twice by its title.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to make one further remark in regard to the bill. Our Territorial system of judges has been a success in the agricultural parts of the country, but it has been a failure in the mining regions where great interests were involved. The supreme court, as provided for in this bill, would have appellate jurisdiction in all matters and the appointment of all inferior judges. This matter must be taken hold of earnestly or we will have on a large scale a repetition of what has occurred in many of our mining States where the judiciary system has been utterly inadequate for a mining community or a community far off where there are great interests involved.

It is idle to send a man out on a salary of $3,000 a year where he has to spend $10,000 to live and where millions are involved in cases that come before him. The bill makes provision for a very urgent matter—I believe it is the most important matter connected with governing our newly acquired territory. To do justice there you must have the appointing power on the ground, and you must give sufficient salary to take judges from the top of the bar if you expect success.

I am not particular as to what committee it goes, but it seems to me that the Judiciary Committee should have charge of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. As the bill relates to the Philippine Islands, I suggest that it go to that committee.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; let it go there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 4963) for the relief of Frank W. Howbert; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4964) granting an increase of pension to Edward Conrey;

A bill (S. 4965) granting a pension to Thomas Robbins;

A bill (S. 4966) granting a pension to Jose Pablo Garcia;

A bill (S. 4967) granting an increase of pension to Solomon D. Taylor;

A bill (S. 4968) granting an increase of pension to John Milburn;

A bill (S. 4969) granting a pension to Edgar L. Beckwith;

A bill (S. 4970) granting an increase of pension to Stanley M. Casper;

A bill (S. 4971) granting an increase of pension to George H. Smith (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4972) granting an increase of pension to Edward D. Lashley;

A bill (S. 4973) granting an increase of pension to Dallas W. Spencer (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4974) granting a pension to Mary Pollock;

A bill (S. 4975) granting a pension to F. J. Landis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4976) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Brown; and

A bill (S. 4977) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Scherzer.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 4978) for the relief of Richard Emmons and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4979) for the relief of the estate of Daniel Heflebower, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 4982) for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAWLEY. To accompany the bill I present an explanatory letter from the Secretary of War, which I move be printed, and that it be referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4983) granting a pension to Louisa A. Crosby;

A bill (S. 4984) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Barnum; and

A bill (S. 4985) granting an increase of pension to Dr. George C. Jarvis.

Mr. HALE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, which were ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (S. 4986) relating to the examination for promotion of warrant officers in the Navy;

A bill (S. 4987) authorizing the President to reclassify vessels of the Navy, and to formulate rules governing assignments to command; and

A bill (S. 4988) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section thirty-seven hundred and nineteen of the Revised Statutes, relative to guaranties on proposals for naval supplies."

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 4989) to enable the people of Oklahoma to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to said State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 4990) for the relief of James Chieves; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4992) for the relief of the estate of George W. Drake, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McENERY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4993) for the relief of the estates of Mrs. Amy Anderson, deceased, Robert K. Anderson, deceased, and Adeliza Pickett Quays, deceased;

A bill (S. 4994) for the relief of the estate of Henry Bauman, deceased;

A bill (S. 4995) for the relief of Evelyn Clark;

A bill (S. 4996) for the relief of the estate of George W. Dyson, deceased;

A bill (S. 4997) for the relief of Victorie C. Avet and of the estate of Vincent Avet;

A bill (S. 4998) for the relief of Mrs. E. H. Briant; and

A bill (S. 4999) for the relief of James A. Verret, administrator of Adolphe Verret, deceased.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 5000) granting an increase of pension to Etta Scott Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MONEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5001) for the relief of Mrs. M. H. Coles;

A bill (S. 5002) for the relief of the estates of Robert Bradley and Mary C. Bradley, deceased;

A bill (S. 5003) for the relief of the estate of James A. Ford, deceased; and

A bill (S. 5004) for the relief of the estate of R. T. Brown, deceased.

Mr. KENNEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5005) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Vogel;

A bill (S. 5006) granting an increase of pension to John T. Comegys;

A bill (S. 5007) granting an increase of pension to George N. Tarburton;

A bill (S. 5008) granting a pension to David Pollock;

A bill (S. 5009) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Ridgway; and

A bill (S. 5010) granting a pension to Thomas E. Clark.

Mr. KENNEY introduced a bill (S. 5011) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John W. Cheesman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5012) to establish a national military park at Valley Forge, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5013) creating the office of superintendent and inspector of national cemeteries under the authority and control of the United States, and providing for the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5014) to authorize the Fourth Pool Connecting Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5015) granting a pension to Betsey L. Woodman;

A bill (S. 5016) granting an increase of pension to Francis H. Buffum; and

A bill (S. 5017) granting a pension to George H. Shapley.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 5018) to incorporate the National Army Relief Society; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 5019) granting an increase of pension to Julia Crenshaw; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5020) to admit free of duty articles controlled by a trust; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5021) to provide for refunding the tax laid and collected on raw cotton in the event that the Supreme Court holds the laws under which the same was collected to have been unconstitutional; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5022) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at Fall River, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5023) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at New Bedford, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT ON REINDEER IN ALASKA.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to the Senate the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon "The introduction of domestic reindeer into the district of Alaska," for 1900.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. ALDRICH, it was Ordered, That Mr. DILLINGHAM be appointed to fill vacancies on the following committees: To Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, Engrossed Bills, Territories, Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress (select), and Indian Depredations; and

That Mr. DOLLIVER be appointed to fill vacancies on the following committees: Pacific Railroads, Agriculture and Forestry, Education and Labor, Interstate Commerce, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for by law.

CUBAN POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate all the information in his possession in relation to frauds in the postal service of Cuba.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let it go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under objection.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE.

Mr. BURROWS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Privileges and Elections, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said committee, and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

AID TO ASYLUMS FOR THE BLIND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will report the first case on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 706) granting to the State of Montana 50,000 acres of land to aid in the establishment and maintenance of an asylum for the blind was announced as first in order on the Calendar; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Chair is informed that no written report has been made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from Montana explain the effect of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the bill merely provides for what, I think, is provided in other cases, but not in this particular enabling act—the donation of public lands to establish and maintain a school for the blind. There was a provision made for the deaf and dumb, but not for the blind in our State. We are maintaining such a school, and it seems but proper that this indemnity or grant should be made in order to assist in maintaining the school.

The General Government is somewhat interested in the school, because the local school maintained by the State has been burdened with the care of blind from the Indian reservations, for whom no provision of law has been made and for which no compensation has been allowed. It is but an auxiliary to the maintenance of this school, and I think it is a just appropriation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The same enabling act applies to South Dakota. The State of South Dakota has recently built a school for the blind. I therefore move to insert the words "and South Dakota" after the word "Montana" in the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the bill be read, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire also to add an amendment. It seems there was an omission in the enabling act, and there was no grant of public lands for institutions for the blind. At the proper time I shall want to add "and the State of Colorado."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by adding at the end of line 4, after the word "Montana," the words "and South Dakota."

Mr. WOLCOTT. And after the words "South Dakota" add "and Colorado."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves to amend by adding what will be read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And then you will provide for 50,000 acres each?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment it is proposed to add the words "and Colorado," so that the bill will read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, granted 50,000 acres of the unappropriated public lands within the State of Montana, South Dakota, and Colorado unto said State, to be selected by the proper authorities thereof, to aid in the establishment and maintenance of an institution for the blind, which institution may be established and maintained separately or in conjunction with the asylum for the care and maintenance of the deaf and dumb.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the word "State" will be changed by consent to the plural, provided the amendments prevail. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I would be glad to have read the sections of the enabling act that apply to this matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. We had better get all the States in first.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; later on let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] is recognized.

Mr. SHOUP. I move that Idaho be also added to the States named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Idaho that no further amendment can be received at the present time. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], inserting the words "and Colorado."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to have the bill amended so that 50,000 acres will be donated to each institution. The bill as it now reads carries only 50,000 acres for one institution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Dakota kindly prepare his amendment and send it to the desk?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the clerks can put it in in proper form. "Fifty thousand acres each for the following States," I think, would be the proper wording.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a complicated sort of a bill, and I suggest that it had better be recommitted to the committee to prepare the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island make that motion?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPOSITIONS BEFORE NAVAL COURTS.

Mr. HALE. There are one or two bills that are important for the operations of the Navy Department to which there is no objection and which I wish to have passed. The first one is Order of Business 533, Senate bill 1358. I ask to have taken up the bill (S. 1358) to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases. There are two bills on the Calendar that are necessary to the taking of testimony in the Navy Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. The bill will speak for itself as it is read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 1358) to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases, and by unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place at which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring great expense or serious loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital.

The bill was reported to the Senate without ammendment.

Mr. VEST. Let the bill be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, do I understand that bill to provide that in anything less than a capital case a deposition can be read without the consent of the accused?

Mr. HALE. No; it is just the reverse.

Mr. VEST. Then I did not catch the meaning of the bill. It says "either party."

Mr. HALE. It excepts capital cases.

Mr. VEST. I understand; but how does the Senator dispose of that clause of the Constitution which provides that in all criminal cases the accused shall be entitled to be confronted with the witnesses? Suppose a man is accused of robbery or any of the felonies below murder, can you force him to submit to evidence taken by deposition without his consent? It seems to me that the bill is clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. HALE. The committee considered that, and did not believe that courts-martial came under the provision of the Constitution. Nearly all courts-martial are for the trial of small offenses, involving no heavy punishment. In many cases it is impossible, except at great expense and delay, to examine witnesses; and the committee did not consider, when capital cases are excepted, that any harm would result. Of course, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] suggests to me, wherever the provision of the Constitution applies, the accused has the right to trial by jury. These, of course, are not in that class of cases. I have no idea that any harm can come from the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. If the committee would insert an amendment that depositions taken at the instance of the accused might be read in evidence, that would be all right, but certainly in every criminal proceeding the accused has the right to be confronted by the witnesses. Here is a man locked up in prison; the case comes to trial before a court-martial; he can not get out on bail to go and attend the examination, to examine or cross-examine the witnesses upon such matters as might arise in the course of the trial. The constitutional provision is necessary in every one of the judicial tribunals of the United States, and more eminently so in courts-martial. Courts-martial should know that they are subject to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and that those provisions can not be violated. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he insert the words "at the instance of the accused."

Mr. HALE. There was so much noise in the Chamber that I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator to put in the words "depositions taken at the instance of the accused." That, I think, will dispel the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please take their seats and visitors to the Senate Chamber will preserve order.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill be read as proposed to be amended, so that we can see how it would stand.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the depositions, taken at the instance of the accused, of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place at which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring great expense or serious loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the bill read. I have not heard a word the Senator from Alabama said. It was utterly impossible to hear a word. It was not his fault, but the fault of the Senate. I have tried to listen to the reading and discussion of this bill, but I do not know any more about it than if it had not been read, though I sit within a few feet of the Senator who has it in charge. I do not know how important this bill may be.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have order, Mr. President, and let us stop business until we do have it.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that this is an important bill, and I think we had better suspend operations until order is restored and then have the bill read. I heard something said about trial by jury in a military court. If there is any such opportunity allowed to the accused, I should like to know exactly how it comes, and what provision is made for it. I have been under the impression that in a military court there was not much opportunity for a man to defend himself, and that the right of trial by jury was not accorded to him under those circumstances.

Mr. HALE. Of course not, and the statement I made was to that effect. This is a matter in which the accused certainly ought to have an opportunity, on giving notice to the other side, to take depositions to be used in court-martial cases. Under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Alabama it only applies to the side of the accused, and no harm can come from it. As I said, in many of these cases the charges are what we may call slight; the punishment is slight; and the party accused ought to have the opportunity of giving notice to the Government and taking depositions, which can be done at very little expense, where it would be impossible for him to attend when he is a thousand miles away.

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to object to the bill. I think the accused ought to have that right, but I was in absolute ignorance of whether this was a provision for the benefit of the accused, or whether it was in the interest of the Government and against the accused. If it is an attempt to give greater protection to the individual charged with an offense, I am in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will once more request that the Senate shall be in order. Senators will please resume their seats and visitors to the Senate Chamber will observe the rules of the Senate. The Chair will call the attention of the Sergeant-at-Arms to the necessity of enforcing the rule. [A pause.] The Senator from Colorado asks that the bill be again read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the rule enforced, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the bill read. It has not been read in the hearing of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist before the bill is read that we shall have order. We have plenty of time. The whole session is before us now, and let us start out with good order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary again read the bill as amended.

Mr. HOAR. Who is to determine under the bill what seems to be an essential preliminary to the validity of a deposition whether the evidence can be had and whether the party can not attend? It seems to me that there should be somewhere lodged the power to decide that question. The court-martial, when a deposition is offered, or the magistrate who takes the deposition, or somebody should determine that question, because the deposition is valid in one case and in the other it is not.

Mr. HALE. Of course, we can make no iron rule that shall settle that. I can not conceive of any language that is better than that employed in the bill. It is only to be done in such cases. I suppose if the privilege is abused, or if it was sought to give the deposition of a witness who was near by and whom the court knew could be had, the court would not receive the deposition, but would send for the witness. For the present I can not think of any description that would settle that any better than it is now. The court itself must decide whether it will receive the deposition under the circumstances, as all courts do.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose there should be added these words, which will carry out the idea suggested by the Senator:

Such deposition to be admissible in case the tribunal to whom it is offered find that the aforesaid cause for taking the same exist.

Mr. HALE. That would put it in a form which would undoubtedly be the practice.

Mr. HOAR. I dare say it might be, but I think it better to have the words inserted.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add:

Such deposition to be admissible in case the tribunal to whom it is offered find that the aforesaid cause for taking the same exist.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the next bill in order on the Calendar will be stated, the Chair would say to the Senator from Maine that he understood the Senator to state that he had another bill which he desired to be acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I have sent for the other bill, but I want to examine it a little further, and will not call it up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar will be proceeded with.

ABRAM G. HOYT.

The bill (S. 1981) for the relief of Abram G. Hoyt was announced as next in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. WARREN February 5, 1900, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1981) for the relief of Abram G. Hoyt, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report thereon:

In the Fifty-first Congress H. R. 3609, in similar language, was favorably reported to the House from the Committee on Claims by House Report No. 1658, which your committee adopt as their report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1658, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3609) for the relief of Abram G. Hoyt, having carefully considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report:

Abram G. Hoyt, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., was, during the year 1876, designated depositary of the United States in the city of Santa Fe, Territory of New Mexico. One A. P. Gates was employed in the office of the designated depositary as a clerk, having the care and charge of the books and papers pertaining to the duties of the said office. He came to Mr. Hoyt highly recommended by gentlemen of character and high standing.

Between February 23, 1876, and March 17, 1876, while engaged in making a thorough examination of the books and papers of the designated depositary, Mr. Hoyt discovered that Gates had committed an embezzlement of $2,943.62; that the books had been altered, and that the balances in many instances were false ones. Previous to the date of this examination Mr. Hoyt was ignorant of the defalcation of Gates. Upon verifying the fact he at once replaced the entire amount of the embezzlement.

Gates was first employed in the said office on or about the 1st day of August, 1874, and so remained as a clerk up to the 23d day of February, 1876, when his employment ceased.

In December, 1874, he stole a check after it had been paid by Mr. Hoyt, and previous to its cancellation. The check was signed by Capt. A. J. McGonigle, assistant quartermaster, for the sum of $188.98. Gates negotiated the check after it had been paid, and had it paid a second time by said Hoyt; and thereafter, from December, 1874, until February 23, 1876, he at divers times stole and negotiated certain checks in the same manner, and Mr. Hoyt paid them all a second time.

Through the efforts of Mr. Hoyt, Gates was arrested, tried, and convicted of the theft, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask some member of the committee—I do not see the Senator who reported the bill in his seat—whether they think it desirable to establish the precedent that a designated depository shall be reimbursed for money stolen by trusted employees? I have in mind the case of the First National Bank of New York, which lost $790,000 through a trusted employee. Is the Government of the United States to be held responsible for the repayment of that money? In the absence of the chairman of the committee reporting the bill, I think it had better go over unless some Senator can explain it.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF THE DIOCESE OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 2399) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BAKER February 5, 1900, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2399) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of Washington," make a favorable report thereon. The object of the bill is to remove the ambiguity in the original act of incorporation, so as to make it certain that the corporation referred to shall have power to take contributions and bequests for the purpose of the episcopal residence and such educational institutions as may be founded by the convention.

The favorable report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia is given below.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 25, 1900.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommend favorable action upon Senate bill 2399, "To amend section 2 of an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of Washington,'" which was referred to them at your instance for their examination and report.

The object of this bill is to remove any doubt there may be as to the right of the body corporate under said act to take and hold real estate, under the words "grants and devises," for the purpose of an episcopal residence, diocesan house, church, colleges, church or parish schools, etc. There has been some question whether under section 2 of the act of March 16, 1896, the corporation may take real estate by deed or will.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. WIGHT, President.

Senator JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a question under the language of this bill as to the quantity of real estate that may be held. I think it is entirely too indefinite. I sent for the original law of March 16, 1896, which this bill proposes to amend so as to give greater power to the Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of Washington to hold real estate according to the report which has just been read. The question now is whether under this new grant of power they could not hold real estate indefinitely, and I should like to have a limitation on that power.

I call the attention of the Senator reporting the bill to the exact language as it occurs here:

That the said corporation shall have full power and authority to take and hold subscriptions, contributions, donations, grants, devises, or bequests, in money, real estate, or otherwise, which heretofore have been made or which may hereafter be made for the purpose of an episcopal residence, diocesan house, church colleges, church or parish schools, churches, or mission chapels, and for the purpose of creating a permanent fund or endowment for the support of the episcopate in said diocese.

The language of the bill would extend the right to hold real estate to any and every purpose. They could hold land for endowment purposes. I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill the words:

And provided further, That under this act no real estate shall be held for any other purpose than an episcopal residence, diocesan house, church colleges, church or parish schools, churches, and mission chapels.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I think if the Senator will add the words "or for similar uses" it will answer his purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know about "similar uses." You might extend that indefinitely.

Mr. MCCOMAS. No; it must be of like kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not believe in granting to any corporation the power to hold indefinite amounts of real estate.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The object of the bill is not to do other than what the Senator desires.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

Mr. MCCOMAS. But if you begin to specify you may exclude unwittingly, and if you add the words "or for like uses" you will serve your purpose and there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see that there are "like uses;" and if that language is employed, who is to determine what those "like uses" are and all that? What other uses can they have for the land except for an episcopal residence? That is all that is named here. Then, there is a drag net at the end of the bill. I want to get it right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

And provided further, That under this act no real estate shall be held for any other purpose than an episcopal residence, diocesan house, church colleges, church or parish schools, churches, and mission chapels.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Before the question is put, I would suggest to the Senator to use words giving a little more latitude, such as "for the like purposes," which he really has in mind.

Mr. COCKRELL. What would be a "like purpose?" Let us see. We understand the English language just about as well as the ordinary average person, and let us specify what that like purpose is.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. An orphan asylum, for instance.

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes; an orphan asylum might be one.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am willing to put that in, but I do not want the bill to so read that the object for which it is designed can be avoided.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think perhaps the language in connection with the bill may be broad enough.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is ample.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

N. M. BROOKS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar two small bills reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which are merely formal in character and will excite no debate. The first one is the bill (S. 4284) to authorize Capt. N. M. Brooks, Superintendent of Foreign Mails, Post-Office Department, to accept a decoration tendered to him by the Emperor of Germany.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HON. GEORGE D. MEIKLEJOHN.

Mr. LODGE. The next measure for which I ask present consideration is the bill (S. 4439) to authorize Hon. George D. Meiklejohn, Assistant Secretary of War, to accept a decoration tendered to him by the Government of Sweden and Norway.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRA J. PAXTON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4830) to correct the military record of Ira J. Paxton.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the words "on account of being under 18 years of age," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Ira J. Paxton, late a private in Company I, Eighth Regiment Missouri State Militia, and to issue to him a discharge as of date August 2, 1862, on account of being under 18 years of age.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there a report in the case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the report may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL May 31, 1900, was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4830) to correct the military record of Ira J. Paxton, have duly considered the same and submit the following report:

This bill directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Ira J. Paxton and issue to him an honorable discharge as of date August 2, 1862.

Your committee hereto attach the letter from the War Department as part of this report. The facts, as shown by the petition of the claimant, verified by his affidavit and by the affidavits of his father, brother, and several citizens and comrades, are that claimant was born December 12, 1845, and on March 13, 1862, being 16 years and 9 months old, enlisted in Company I, Eighth Regiment Missouri State Militia, without the permission or consent of his father and against his wishes and without his knowledge.

The company afterwards camped near his father's residence. His father visited the camp and begged his minor son to return home to aid him and his mother to care for five small children at home. His father's importunities continued, adding that his three older brothers were defending the flag and country, and finally the son yielded to the demands of his father and returned home and remained there during the war openly, and known to the company officers and soldiers, who were at times camped in the neighborhood, and visited his father's house and saw and talked with him and never asked for his return and never made any complaints to him for his absence.

Under the law at the time there was no authority to enlist or accept him of his then age into the service, and such enlistment was in violation of the law and orders.

His father could have had him discharged on writ of habeas corpus beyond any doubt, and in such a case the War Department has authority to remove such charge and issue discharge. It is perfectly manifest that this soldier did not intend to desert the flag or the cause of his country, and did not believe he was committing any offense, and did believe that, in obedience to his father's demands, he was doing right in staying at home to aid his parents and his brothers and sisters, only small children. He did not know that he was charged with desertion until after the close of the war.

The War Department has no authority to remove such charge and the case is exceptional.

Your committee believe that this stain upon the record of this soldier and citizen should be removed, and a discharge granted to him as of date August 2, 1862, and report the bill back to the Senate and recommend its passage with an amendment by adding "on account of being under the age of 18 years."

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, March 30, 1900.

SIR: In reply to your letter of yesterday, received to-day, in which you request to be furnished with the complete military and medical record of Ira J. Paxton, as of Company I, Eighth Missouri State Militia, together with such facts as the records show relative to the soldier's desertion, etc., I beg to inform you that the records show that Ira J. Paxton was enrolled March 13, 1862, at Linn Creek, Mo., as a private in Captain Reeder's company, Missouri State Militia, which eventually became Company I, Eighth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and that he deserted at Warsaw, Mo., August 2, 1862, never thereafter returning to his command, which remained in the service until April 23, 1865. It does not appear that he was under medical treatment at any time during his service.

It is stated on the records that he was born in Hickory County, Mo.; was 18 years of age at the time of enlistment; by occupation, a farmer; 5 feet 3½ inches high; of fair complexion, and that he had hazel eyes and dark hair.

No record has been found of any application for removal of the charge of desertion, nor does it appear that the case has heretofore been under investigation.

It is proper to add that in the absence of an explanation of the circumstances under which this soldier left his command, and of his failure to return thereto, the Department is unable to determine whether the case is covered by the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the law governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Very respectfully,

JOHN TWEEDALE,
Acting Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLARA H. FULFORD.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 21) for the relief of Clara H. Fulford.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there a report?

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is a report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it a long report? If it is not long, I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think I can state the facts. The report is quite long.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a short report. Let it be read.

The report (submitted by Mr. TELLER June 2, 1900) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 21) for the relief of Clara H. Fulford, having considered the same, respectfully recommend that the bill shall pass.

Your committee further report that Congress passed an act which was approved January 20, 1897, and is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, instructed to redeem, in favor of the heirs at law of D. Fulford, two bonds of the United States, consols of 1867, of the denomination of $500, $100, and known as five-twenties, said bonds having been destroyed by fire the 9th day of July, 1872, and to pay to the heirs at law of said D. Fulford the amount of said bonds, together with accrued interest from July 1, 1872, to the date of the maturity of said bonds.

"SEC. 2. That the said heirs of D. Fulford shall also execute and file with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the penalty of $2,000, conditioned to save harmless the United States from loss or liability on account of said bonds or the interest accrued thereon: Provided, That as it appears from the records of the Treasury Department that there are now outstanding and unpaid a $100 coupon bond, No. 83482, and two $500 coupon bonds, Nos. 12792 and 34411, of the loan known as consols of 1867, of which the last coupon bears date of July 1, 1872, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to proceed against said bond of indemnity whenever said coupon bonds shall have been redeemed.

"Approved, January 20, 1897."

When the above bill was reported to the Senate by the Committee on Claims, the committee in its report said:

"It has been ascertained by your committee that D. Fulford, deceased, who is represented in this claim by his heirs, was a minister of the Methodist Church and a resident of Dekalb, N. Y., and was the owner of four Government bonds, one for $500 and one for $100 and two for $50 each. On the 9th of July, 1872, these bonds were destroyed in a fire which consumed his residence. He was unable to describe them or give their numbers, as he had failed to procure a record thereof. He had received payment of the coupons due July 1, 1872. His understanding was that all the bonds destroyed by fire were of the class known as consols of 1867. The accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Treasury confirms this understanding as to the $500 and $100 bonds, but indicates an error regarding the character of the two $50 bonds.

"Your committee has concluded upon the evidence that Mr. Fulford was the owner of the bonds described, and that the bonds were destroyed by fire as claimed. The Secretary of the Treasury answers in his communication, herewith submitted, that the outstanding $100 bond may be one of Mr. Fulford's burned bonds, but says he has no way of determining which, if either, of the two outstanding $500 bonds belonged to him. No process of investigation can bring the missing bonds any closer to identification than this. It is reasonable to presume that one of them was his property and that the $100 unredeemed bond of the same class was also his.

"Your committee is satisfied that the entire claim of the heirs of D. Fulford is a just one; that the Government was the recipient from him of the face of these bonds; and that he should be compensated, though unable, through misfortune, to present the evidence of governmental indebtedness.

"The accompanying paper hereto attached is submitted as part of this report.

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, D. C., January 25, 1896.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, inclosing Senate bill for the relief of the heirs of D. Fulford, and requesting the opinion of the Department as to whether a bond of indemnity can be so framed as to protect the United States from loss should the bill become a law; and also desiring to know how many bonds are now outstanding and unpaid, known as consols of 1867, denominations of $100 and $500, of which the last coupon paid is dated July 1, 1872.

"In reply I have to inform you that Mr. Fulford made application to this Department for the payment of $700 United States 5.26 per cent coupon bonds, known as consols of 1867, alleged to have been destroyed by fire July 9, 1872, viz: Two bonds of the denominations of $50 each, one bond of $100, and one bond of $500. He was unable to give the numbers of the bonds, and his only means of identifying them was by the date of the last matured coupons detached and sold, which he said were dated July 1, 1872, he having collected the interest on the bonds to that date. An examination of the records of this Department shows that there are no $50 coupon bonds outstanding of the consols of 1867 of which the last coupon paid was dated July 1, 1872; and of the denominations of $100 and $500 of said loan there are found to be outstanding one bond of $100, No. 8382, and two of $500, Nos. 12792 and 34411, of which the last coupon paid was dated July 1, 1872. It is evident, therefore, that the $50 bonds alleged to have been destroyed do not belong to the loan of consols of 1867, and assuming that the $100 bond referred to is one of the lost bonds, there is apparently no way of determining which, if either, of the two $500 bonds was the property of Mr. Fulford.

"In view of these facts, and to further protect the Government against a second payment by reason of the passage of said bill, it is respectfully suggested that Senate bill be amended so as to cover the redemption of $600 only of the amount claimed, and that a proviso be inserted therein to the following effect, viz: 'Provided, That as it appears from the records of the Treasury Department that there are now outstanding and unpaid a $100 coupon bond, No. 8382, and two $500 coupon bonds, Nos. 12792 and 34411, of the loan known as consols of 1867, of which the last coupon paid bears date of July 1, 1872, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to proceed against said bond of indemnity whenever said coupon bonds shall have been redeemed.'

"Very respectfully, S. WILKE, Acting Secretary.

"Hon. R. F. PETTIGREW,
"United States Senate."

The two bonds of $50 each provided for in this bill are the bonds referred to in the above report, and are as yet unpaid.

It is the opinion of your committee that a bond can be prepared by the Treasury Department so as to protect the interest of the Government, and that the two $50 bonds should be paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] what evidence the committee had of the burning of those bonds. This is a pretty dangerous precedent to establish.

Mr. TELLER. So far as that is concerned, there was no doubt that bonds were burned. Of course it is a little uncertain whether these two bonds were, because the claimant was not quite prepared to describe them. These bonds have never come to the Department, and no claim for interest has been made since, and the Department itself believes those bonds were the bonds which were burned.

Mr. ALDRICH. A large number of bonds of different issues have never been paid by the Government. If hereafter persons, knowing the numbers of the bonds, should file claims, it would be a very unfortunate thing for the Government.

Mr. TELLER. There is no controversy but that this man lost certain fifty-dollar bonds. That is proved. I think it is clear enough that these were the bonds. We suppose they were. If it should turn out that there were other bonds and that these were not the bonds which were burned, the bond that the claimant is to give will be ample to protect the Government. It is a small matter, and has been before the committee two or three times. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to be advised by the Senator in charge of the bill why it is that the widow is entitled to this money and not the heirs of the deceased also?

Mr. TELLER. That is a point which I do not recall now without going over the case again. It was not large enough for me to carry in my mind a great while. But I have no doubt it is correct that the widow is entitled to the money, or the committee would not have so reported. Perhaps the Senator whose constituent this woman is may be able to tell about it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The widow is about 75 years old, and without property. She has some children who are of age and abundantly able to take care of themselves, and therefore I drew the bill so as to give the money to her. I think she is the person who ought to have it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In the original bill, passed upon the application of the heirs of Mr. Fulford, no provision was made for the two fifty-dollar bonds. It is now claimed that those should be paid, and that point suggests an inquiry, namely: The letter of the Department of January 25, 1896, only says that the two bonds of the denomination of $50 each do not belong to the loan of 1867, known as consols of 1867, and it further fails to show that there were any fifty-dollar bonds of any issue outstanding and unpaid. I suppose it is all right, but I think the evidence ought to be a little more precise and particular.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE AND WEST INDIAN EXPOSITION AT CHARLESTON, S. C.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4673) to encourage the holding of an interstate and West Indian exposition in the city of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, in the year 1901.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 6, page 8, line 4, there is evidently a word left out. It reads: "The United States shall not in any manner nor under any circumstances be liable for any of said South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition Association." It ought to read "for any acts or doings." I move to insert "acts or doings."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 6, page 8, line 4, by inserting, after the words "for any," the words "acts or doings."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that there are two appropriating clauses in the bill. One appropriates $75,000 for the building, and then there is another clause which appropriates $250,000, apparently including the building. There are two appropriating clauses; and while I do not wish to propose any amendment, I suggest that if it passes here and goes to the House it will be well enough to look at it and not have two appropriating clauses in the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will point out anything that is defective and let us fix it right now. We do not want to have any hitch or a double appropriation. We want merely the appropriation of $250,000, and that is all we do want. Seventy-five thousand dollars of that amount, as I understand the bill, is for buildings, and $175,000 for all other expenses. It is a duplicate, or was intended to be a duplicate, of the Buffalo Exposition bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On page 5, I noticed, as the bill was being read, this language in line 21:

But the contract for said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $75,000, said sum being hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Now, if I can find it in a moment, there is another appropriation.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is at the bottom of page 6.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Beginning near the bottom of page 6, the bill reads:

And the total cost of said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $75,000, nor shall the expenses of said Government exhibit for each and every other purpose connected therewith, including transportation, exceed the sum of $175,000, amounting in all—

"Amounting in all," it says—

to not exceeding the sum of $250,000, which said sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury.

There are two appropriation clauses. I do not think it is necessary to appropriate in the first instance.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that we strike out, in line 22, page 5, after the word "dollars," the words "said sum being hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is all included in the last appropriation.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 5 I move to strike out lines 22, 23, and 24. Then that will leave the other appropriation and make only one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senate from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, section 3, line 22, after the word "dollars," strike out:

Said sum being hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the death of Hon. Cushman K. Davis, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota; Hon. John H. Gear, late a Senator from the State of Iowa; Hon. John H. Hoffecker, late a Representative from the State of Delaware, and Hon. William D. Daly, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11548) to authorize the Kingston Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Clinch River at Kingston, Tenn.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ABANDONED PROPERTY IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

Mr. MONEY. I ask to have a reprint made of the bill (S. 602) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, so as to incorporate an amendment constituting the sixth section of the bill, which amendment has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims. I ask to have the bill reprinted with that amendment added.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, as a matter of privilege I desire to call up for present consideration resolution No. 371 on the Calendar, found under the caption of "Subjects on the table." The resolution is one introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] for the purpose of referring certain credentials of Senators appointed from Montana to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It proposes to refer the credentials of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis, appointed Senators from Montana, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for report, and so forth.

Mr. PETTUS. What is the motion, Mr. President?

Mr. CARTER. That the resolution referred to be taken up for present consideration to the end that the credentials may be referred and reported upon, as the resolution provides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will first be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 25th day of May, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials showing the appointment as Senator from the State of Montana of William A. Clark, signed by Acting Governor A. E. Spriggs, and the credentials showing a like appointment of Martin Maginnis, signed by Governor Robert B. Smith, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that said committee be directed to inquire whether either of said appointees has been duly and legally appointed to a seat in the Senate as Senator from said State of Montana, and if so, to report which of said appointees is entitled to be admitted to the seat.

Mr. CARTER. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has it been to any committee?

Mr. CARTER. I wish to refer the matter to the committee. The resolution has been on the table since the latter part of May. It will be recalled by the Senator from Missouri that the credentials of Mr. Clark were presented and laid on the table. The credentials of Mr. Maginnis were, I think, presented and likewise laid on the table. Thereupon the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted resolution No. 371, which has just been read. That resolution was not acted upon at the last session of Congress. It is desirable that the State shall be informed who is entitled to represent it upon the floor. An effort has been made by the lieutenant-governor, and likewise by the governor, to get an appointment to the Senate of a Senator to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Clark. I do not know how the matter can be disposed of except by the reference provided for in the resolution. I think the State is entitled to a prompt report upon the resolution, and that such a report should indicate who is entitled to the seat under the appointments now pending in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I would take the liberty of suggesting to the Senator from Montana that the resolution which it is now proposed to adopt should make provision for due notice being given to these several gentlemen, one of whom, as I am informed, is in the distant State of Montana, and he should have an opportunity to be present at the time the investigation is to be entered upon by the committee.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that such notice would be given in conformity with the regular rules of the committee. I have no objection whatever to having the resolution state that the respective applicants for the seat shall be duly notified. I assume that that will be done.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senate would trust any committee of this body to see that if there were any doubt upon the title of a Senator to be sworn in the committee would give him a hearing before reporting upon the case; but supposing——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I have not quite completed the sentence; then I will yield. Supposing it should turn out that there was no doubt whatever as to the title of one of these persons to take the seat in the minds of anybody on the committee, it would be an injustice to him then to give him a notice to appear to argue in favor of a conclusion which the committee had already reached; and if the Senator's amendment is made to the resolution that must be the result.

Mr. BACON. With all due deference to the learned Senator, there is a difference between this and an ordinary case. If the investigation were to be limited to the right of a single party to a seat, then the proposition of the Senator would be correct. But the Senator will observe that here are two claimants, and the right of one is necessarily antagonistic to the right of the other. Therefore, if the committee should determine that one of the contestants or claimants is entitled to the seat, it would certainly be due to the other claimant that he should have the opportunity to show to the committee that they were in error.

Mr. HOAR. Unquestionably.

Mr. BACON. Therefore it is important, in view of this particular complication, that both the claimants should have notice not only of the investigation the committee might make as to the particular right of one, but of the investigation which the committee would proceed to make as to the claimant whose right to the seat the other opposes.

Mr. HOAR. I do not see any objection——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. CARTER). Let the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CARTER. The pending business is, I understand, of the highest privilege, and takes precedence.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Montana to accept the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CARTER. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. If the committee state it is their purpose to give both claimants notice and not to limit the notice to the particular one whose right they may propose to investigate, I do not desire that there shall be any amendment proposed. If the committee should indicate that that is the purpose, that would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HOAR. The chairman of the committee is not present, and being next in seniority I think I can safely give the assurance, in behalf of the committee, that these gentlemen will be notified.

Mr. BACON. That both of them will be notified?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be stated.

Mr. BACON. And that they will have the opportunity to be heard before the committee?

Mr. VEST. I appeal to the Senator from Montana to let this matter go over until to-morrow. I should like to look into it. It has come up suddenly; it is a matter of very extreme importance in more ways than one, and no harm can come from its going over until to-morrow. Although it is a question of the highest privilege, there is no necessity for rushing it right through the Senate now.

Mr. CARTER. I beg the Senator to remember that there has been no undue haste in pressing it. I have no objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow. I do insist, however, that the State, having made an effort to secure a full representation on the floor of the Senate, is entitled to know what, if any, defect exists in either of the credentials, and whether the proper proceedings have been followed to secure representation here, and that the State is entitled to that information at as early a date as practicable. That is all. I have no objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays the unfinished business before the Senate. It will be announced by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2355) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE AND INCREASE OF TRADE.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 727. Does the Chair understand the Senator from South Dakota to demand the reading of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I demand the reading of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the formal reading might be dispensed with and that when read it might be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. VEST. Let it be read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Do I understand that the Senator from Maine wishes to make some remarks?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; I wish to explain the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well. I will withdraw my request.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator consent to that request?

Mr. BACON. What is it?

Mr. FRYE. That the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Maine that the bill has not yet been taken up for consideration. The question is upon the motion made by the Senator from Maine, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 727, the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. CHILTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. HANNA (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire if the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. HANNA. I will transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], and let my vote stand.

Mr. WARREN. On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. If he were present, I should vote in favor of taking up the bill, and I assume that the Senator from Washington would vote in the negative.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Quarles,
Allison,	Foster,	McComas,	Scott,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, our present condition as a great maritime nation is humiliating beyond expression. With thousands of miles of seacoast equipped with fine harbors, boundless forests, iron and coal enough to supply the world, skilled mechanics, enterprising shipbuilders, the largest exportations of any country in the world, imports amounting last year to $840,000,000, and abundant capital, we have permitted other countries—our commercial rivals, our inferiors in most of these regards—to seize upon the pathways of the oceans and hold them to our practical exclusion. Last year we carried under our flag to and from Europe only 2¼ per cent of our exports and imports; to and from the world a fraction over 9 per cent. We paid foreign nations, principally Great Britain and Germany, $500,000 a day in gold for transporting our foreign commerce.

I fail to see how anyone can be blind to the dangers of our position in this regard. Our short and decisive war with Spain compelled us to hunt the seas over for transports and colliers; to purchase or charter forty ships from foreign nations. Suppose the war had lasted a year, or had been with a more powerful nation, and neutrality had been enforced, as it should be, we would have been in most serious straits. As it was, our producers paid heavy penalties in increased freight rates. Great Britain in her war with the Boers had transports enough; but even then rates were seriously advanced in the East. Suppose there should be a European war or a conflict between Great Britain and Germany, what would become of our enormous export trade? Who would be our carriers? Who would pay the war insurance premiums on our cargoes, even if carriers could be found? We should suffer almost as seriously as either of the combatants. Our farmers, manufacturers, and wage-earners would pay almost as much as a cost of the war as they.

From a purely commercial point of view in peaceful hours could anything be less helpful to us than the employment of agencies whose interests were entirely antagonistic to ours? How would they help us to find markets for our products? Could we expect them to be ambitious to extend our foreign trade?

I have been trying for many years to find a remedy for this unfortunate condition. A few years ago, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I reported a bill to the Senate, which became a law, removing all statute burdens from our ships. The decline still kept on. I reported an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill, intended and well designed to establish steamship lines to the South American Republics and to promote our trade with them. It became a law, but the Postmaster-General refused to execute it, resorting to the statutes authorizing the Post-Office Department to compel our vessels to take and deliver the mails, receiving as compensation sea and inland postage not sufficient to pay the actual cost of the service. Congress repealed those statutes.

In 1891 I reported from the Committee on Commerce two bills, one paying a bounty to all ships engaged in the foreign trade, the other postal subsidies. The bounty was nearly double that contained in the pending measure. It passed the Senate and was defeated in the House by a majority of 3. The subsidy bill cost me several months of hard work. To be certain of providing rates just and adequate for the several classes of steamers I consulted leading experts, who made most careful and painstaking examination. The completed bill was submitted to capitalists who were willing to consider the propriety of establishing steamship lines to South America, in the Pacific, and across the Atlantic.

I received assurances that if the bill was enacted into law six or eight lines would be established of ships from 14 to 21 knots an hour. The House crippled the bill by a large and unscientific reduction of rates, returned it to the Senate too late in the session for any contest, and it became a law. Of course, it proved a dead failure. We did succeed under it in securing the American Line from New York to Southampton by admitting the New York and Paris to an American registry on condition that the company should build two ships here of like tonnage and speed. But those four ships have ever since been run at a loss to the corporation, not to us, for their value as auxiliaries to our Navy during the Spanish war was beyond computation.

Now, in these regards we are at our worst when we should be at our best. The world has entered upon a fierce commercial war, each of the great powers seeking an extension of its foreign markets. The most of them are already intrenched in all of the commercial ports of the world, with subsidized steamship lines, banking facilities, long-established business agencies. They are all, too, looking especially to the East for the desired extension; Russia, England, Germany, France, and Italy are paying $5,000,000 in aid of steamship lines to Asia, while we are paying $48,000; and yet our necessities are as pressing, if not more so, than theirs.

Our productive forces are greater than those of any other country. We raise more wheat, ten times more corn, five times more cotton, produce more coal, more pig iron, more copper, have cheaper freight rates on rail, by river and lake, than any country in the world. Our product from farm, factory, shop, and mine is increasing enormously. During the last three years we have exported $500,000,000 worth more of farm products than during the preceding three years. Our manufactures are showing a corresponding increase. In 1897 we exported $151,000,000 and imported twice more than we exported. Last year we exported $200,000,000 more than we imported.

This increase will continue, and to us an extension of our foreign markets is an absolute necessity if prosperity is to continue, for an unsold surplus would prove its death knell. In some regards there is no nation better equipped to secure its share of the trade of the Pacific than ours. With our Pacific coast, Hawaii and Pearl Harbor, the best in the Pacific; Tutuilla, with the second best harbor, a coaling and naval station already completely equipped there; Guam, a coaling station and a landing place for our cable, and I sincerely hope that the cable will be provided for at this session; the Philippine Archipelago, with Manila for a distributing point for our products, we lack but one thing—ships to carry our exports. This is a serious handicap. One of the most efficient possible agencies for the extension of our markets would be American ships, officered by intelligent, active, and interested American citizens, seeking markets for our goods, establishing abroad all the necessary agencies for trade.

Why do we find ourselves in this unfortunate and humiliating condition as to our foreign carrying trade? In my opinion there can be but one answer. Our ships costing 25 per cent more than those of England and Germany, with operating charges at least 40 per cent greater by reason of higher wages and better living, unprotected, are compelled to compete with those protected.

We outstrip other nations in nearly all of the industries by law encouraged and protected. This one alone, more important than any other, because national, is left to fight the battle with the world unaided. We have to-day a most magnificent fleet of coastwise, river, and lake vessels, with a tonnage of documented and undocumented close on to six millions. It carried last year 168,000,000 tons of freight and 200,000,000 passengers at lower rates than elsewhere known.

This industry has been protected for a hundred years by a law prohibiting any foreign ship from engaging in it.

This brings me to the consideration of the pending measure. Three years ago, instructed by resolutions of State legislatures, of political conventions, of commercial organizations, by recommendations of public officials, it seemed to me that our people were taking a greater interest in the restoration of our merchant marine than ever before, and that it was an opportune time to once more call the attention of Congress to the subject. I found, however, a great diversity of opinion among friends of the ship as to the remedy to be proposed. Discriminating duties had many advocates; bounties, subsidies, free ships each some. I knew that success was dependent upon united action. As a method of securing that I selected a committee of twenty-five, all friends of Congressional action; some of them shipbuilders and ship owners, experts, required for intelligent conclusions; a majority having no interest other than as American citizens; those interested hardly any two in the same trade or in the same type of ships, selected from every part of the country; some favoring each proposed remedy except that of free ships, a majority at the start for discriminating duties.

This committee was composed as follows: Senators HANNA, ELKINS, PERKINS, FRYE, gentlemen who had shown great interest, and some of whom had had experience in shipping matters; Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE, then chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine; Charles H. Cramp, the well-known shipbuilder of Philadelphia; C. P. Huntington, who has probably at Newport News the finest shipyard in the world; Samuel S. Sewall, representing the largest building company of sailing ships in the country; Edwin W. Hyde, connected with the Bath shipbuilding works; C. A. Griscom, president of the American Line; Joseph P. Grace, representing the line between New York and Chile; H. P. Booth, president of the New York and Cuba Mail; William P. Clyde, president of the Clyde Steamship Company; Eugene T. Chamberlain, Commissioner of Navigation; Theodore C. Search, president of the National Manufacturers' Association, the largest association, probably, that is known in the world, having a membership from nearly every State in the Union, an association whose sole object is to promote the export trade of the United States; Aaron Vanderbilt, secretary of the American Shipping League; Harvey D. Goulder, attorney for the Lake Carriers' Association, one of the most accomplished admiralty lawyers in the United States; Charles H. Keep, secretary of the Lake Carriers' Association, which represents nine-tenths of the lake interests; D. D. C. Mink, president of the Coastwise Steamship Association, having no interest in this subject except as an American citizen and understanding shipping interests; A. R. Smith, formerly editor of the Seaboard, now secretary of the New York Commission of Commerce; Frank J. Firth, president of the Lake Carriers' Association, and Thomas Clyde, of the Clyde Steamship Company. The subject-matter was committed to this committee in 1897.

Leaving out myself, Mr. President, I think it would be very difficult to select from the entire country men more capable of just and intelligent conclusions. It was possibly unfortunate for the American Line that Mr. Griscom, its president, was made chairman. To escape even the seeming of selfish purpose for his own, he assented to terms which gave that line the lowest subsidy.

Knowing that the subject to be considered would involve many important legal questions, I advised the employment of counsel. Hon. George F. Edmunds was very wisely selected. The committee was indefatigable in its labors, meeting many times in New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. After full, complete, and the most careful consideration this committee finally, with entire unanimity, decided against discriminating duties, against discriminating tonnage taxes, against bounties to be paid on the exportation of the products of the American farm, and in favor of sailing bounties for our ships, and in my opinion these conclusions were eminently wise.

I am aware that in the early days when we carried but little of our commerce we adopted discriminating duties and that our carrying trade increased. I am equally aware that we surrendered the discriminating duties. The conditions prevailing then do not prevail at all to-day. Then we were not an exporting nation. Then we imported the most of what we used in the country. Then other countries discriminated and could not complain of our doing so. Then we had no commercial treaties with other nations; and then, again, no man could tell whether or not it was the discriminating duties which increased our carrying trade. We had at the same time a prohibitory tonnage tax against certain classes of ships—absolutely prohibitory. How much did that have to do with our getting our carrying trade back? Again, in those days we built the cheapest ships built in the world. We even built ships for other nations. Then, again, there was not the difference in wages in those days nor in the manner of living on shipboard there is to-day.

Suppose you pass a law providing for discriminating duties of 10, 15, or 20 per cent; who knows but that the next Congress would repeal it? With the danger of such repeal, do you suppose you are going to induce any capital to build these ships, costing all the way from a million to two million dollars apiece? Take our position to-day. See where we would be under discriminating duties. Of course no duty can be laid on exports, and we must deal with imports alone. Our imports last year amounted to $840,000,000. Thirty-five per cent of those were raw materials for our manufacturers. Is it likely that Congress would impose a duty on those raw materials? Is it likely that the country would receive that with favor? Again, 44 per cent of all those imports are on the free list, placed there by Congress for good and undoubtedly sufficient reasons. Would Congress, then, turn around and impose a duty of 10 or 15 per cent on the entire free list? Certainly it would not. Then it leaves us with three or four hundred million dollars in imports and a discriminating duty to establish our merchant marine once more upon the oceans of the world. It is simply an utterly absurd proposition. It would not be a bagatelle in solving the problem.

Take the matter of bounties on exports. Can you place a bounty on wheat? I do not think the Constitution would permit it. Can you select certain products of the farm and place bounties upon them? I am inclined to think that the lawyers here would say "no." But there are twenty or thirty treaties which would be violated by such a course, and you would be compelled to abrogate all of them. Again, you would be compelled to pay those bounties to all ships alike, and you would simply leave us in the same relative position that we are to-day.

Then, again, who would receive the bounties? The ship, to be sure. You could not hunt up the farmers all over this country and pay them the bounty. They had counsel here, and he proposed a dollar a ton placed on agricultural products. But the tonnage of such products would amount, I think, to between twenty and twenty-nine million tons. That would require an expenditure of from twenty to twenty-nine million dollars every year; and the expenditure would be to the ships, never to the farmer. He would not get the slightest possible benefit from it, while under the measure which is pending I have no doubt that the farmers of this country will receive an immense benefit. You let this bill become a law, and commence building our ships, do you suppose that Germany and Great Britain are going to surrender without a contest the profits that they have been receiving from our carrying trade? It will be one of the sharpest we have ever seen on the oceans. Every witness before our committee and before the House committee declared that in his judgment it would reduce the freight rates for transportation across the oceans at least 25 per cent within two years.

What is the tonnage of our exports and imports? About 30,000,000 tons, as to our exports. Perhaps exports and imports both might amount to in the neighborhood of 40,000,000 tons. What is the average rate across the oceans of the world? It is nearer $6 than $5, but call it $5, and then you have $200,000,000 paid for freight on your exports and your imports. Suppose these gentlemen are right and that the competition will reduce freight rates 25 per cent. Then you have a saving of $50,000,000 a year in rates. Who saves that? Not the shipowner. He loses it. It is the producer who saves it. In that way the farmer, the producer, receives a direct benefit. In the other way of bounty it is utterly impossible for him to get any benefit.

I wish to say right here what I should have said before, that in the matter of discriminating duties we encountered thirty-one commercial treaties, every one of which we should be compelled to abrogate. Some of them you can abrogate, on notice, in a year, some of them in two years. Those treaties are reasonably satisfactory to the people of the United States. Suppose that after we had placed discriminating duties upon the imports sent into this country we should desire once more to place ourselves in accord with the commercial nations of the earth. Do you think we could easily renew our treaties, when we had given this direct offense to all these nations of abrogation and then the discriminating duties? Our relations with the peoples of Europe to-day are of the very best, and our exports to them to-day are enormous, especially to Great Britain. Is it wise to do anything which shall disturb the present amicable commercial relations between us and those countries?

And, as I say, the same trouble will be encountered with the bounties. I wrote to Senator Edmunds in relation to the bounty business, and received a reply which I think I will not take the time of the Senate to read, but with the consent of the Senate I will have it printed as a part of my remarks. It names the treaties a bounty would interfere with, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection that order will be made.

The statement referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Agreeably to your request, I have examined all the treaties in force between the United States and other countries on the subject of the ships of other countries being entitled to bounties on exportations if the United States grant bounties to its own ships, etc. The following list is taken from the book published this year, Compilation of Treaties in Force, being House Doc. No. 276, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session. This list contains the names of countries which by express provision of our treaties would be entitled to have their ships receive the same bounties for the exportation of goods from the United States that the United States may grant to its own ships.

1. The Argentine Republic. Treaty of 1853, page 6, article 6.
2. Austria. Treaty of 1829, page 11, article 6.
3. Belgium. Treaty of 1879, page 48, article 7.
4. Bolivia. Treaty of 1858, page 63, article 4.
5. Brazil. Treaty of 1828, pages 77-78, article 4.
6. Colombia. Treaty of 1846, page 127, article 4.
7. Costa Rica. Treaty of 1851, page 148, article 6. This bounty provision is confined to exportations between the two countries.
8. Denmark. Treaty of 1826, page 153, article 3.
9. Great Britain. Treaty of 1815, page 217, article 2. This bounty provision is limited to exportations between the two countries.
10. Greece. Treaty of 1837, page 270, article 9.
11. Haiti. Treaty of 1864, page 279, article 2.
12. Hanseatic Republics. Treaty of 1827 (Bremen, Hamburg, Lubeck), page 290, article 1. These Republics are now in the North German Union.
13. Honduras. Treaty of 1864, page 301, article 6. This bounty provision is limited to exportations between the two countries.
14. Italy. Treaty of 1871, page 311, article 5.
15. Japan. Treaty of 1894, page 355, article 8.
16. Mecklenburg-Schwerin. Treaty of 1847, page 384, article 1.
17. Mexico. Treaties of 1831 and 1848. The bounty provision under the treaty of 1831 is found in the large book of treaties, page 665, article 6, and is continued in force by the treaty of 1848, Book of Treaties in Force, page 398, article 17.
18. Netherlands. Treaty of 1852, page 441, article 1.
19. Nicaragua. Treaty of 1867, page 456, article 3. This treaty does not mention bounties, but provides that each country shall have every right and benefit or concession that may be granted to other countries at any time.
20. Paraguay. Treaty of 1859, page 484, article 3. This treaty provides that every favor, privilege, etc., granted to citizens of other States shall extend to the citizens of both countries.
21. Peru. Treaty of 1887, page 499, article 6.
22. Prussia. Treaty of 1828, page 518, article 9. This treaty provides that any particular favor in navigation or commerce granted to citizens of other countries shall belong to citizens of both parties.
23. Servia. Treaty of 1881, page 570, articles 1 and 6. This treaty provides that all rights, privileges, etc., enjoyed by citizens of other countries, with respect to commerce, etc., shall extend to the citizens of each.
24. Sweden and Norway. Treaty of 1827, page 614, article 10.

It will be seen from an examination of the foregoing named treaties that it is impossible for the United States to grant export bounties to their own ships without bringing into the benefits of the bounty the ships of nearly all the commercial and maritime competitors of the United States, or else by the abrogation of quite or nearly all the treaties above referred to.

To grant export bounties without abrogating the treaties would obviously increase the advantage the foreign ships now have, for an equal increase of payments to two competitors always helps the stronger of the two more than the weaker. Such a bounty could not in the least increase competition and thus lower freight charges.

Again, it is certain that in such case the American producer and manufacturer would neither increase their exports nor get any higher prices for their products.

The supporters of bounty legislation as against the bill under consideration entirely mistake the nature of the bill. It is said that speed, and not carrying goods, is the chief test. It is not. The very first clause of rates provides for all vessels without regard to speed. Speed is also provided for by additional compensation. This is important for many reasons:

First. Speed is sometimes, and indeed often, of high importance in the transportation of food products, especially over warm seas or to tropical countries.

Second. It is also very often important in the transportation of manufactured goods, as much or more so than on land.

Third. Fast and large ships are absolutely necessary to the safety of the United States in time of strain and trouble.

Fourth. At the present time and in the future, under the existing and continuing international struggle for the commerce of the globe, the nation that does not possess, under its own flag, a great fleet of merchant vessels will shortly find itself incapable of either extending its commerce or of defending its rights and honor.

The Constitution of the United States as it now stands is designed to prevent Congress as well as the States from enacting any class legislation whatever. Equal rights and equal opportunities to engage in any business or enterprise, and to receive equal or corresponding benefits from public expenditures, are among the fundamental principles embodied in that instrument. Congress may raise and support armies and navies, and do whatever is fairly incidental to those ends, and thus may provide for inducing the building of ships which may be taken and used in the national defense. It may possibly grant bounties on the exportation of all the products of the country as a means of improving commercial relations with other countries. But if it discriminates by granting bounties on the exportation of particular classes of products it does at once establish a governmental difference in favor of those particular classes and against all other products capable of and designed for similar exportation. It is clear to me, therefore, that a bounty on the exportation of woolen goods or wheat, for instance, while the exportation of cotton goods or corn was left unaided, would be in violation of the Constitution. I think, then, that a law granting a bounty on agricultural products alone, as has been suggested, could not be upheld, just as a bounty on the exportation of manufactured products alone could not be upheld.

If a bounty on exports is to be granted, it must apply to all exports. If such a course of legislation can be maintained at all, it must be on the ground that it is impartial and universal. The instance in our history of the fisheries bounty stood on the principle and policy of providing seamen for national defense. And the sugar bounty of a few years ago, if it could have been held valid at all, which is extremely doubtful, must have been upheld on the ground of the special and peculiar circumstances attending that subject.

A general bounty on exports, if valid, must necessarily be equal, value for value, and if large enough to reach and benefit the original producers and manufacturers would be startling in amount. Every class of industry can be benefited in only two ways:

First. By increasing sales at home and abroad.

Second. By cheapening the cost of carriage from the purchaser to the consumer; and this can in the main only be done by enlarging the means of transportation and thus reducing prices of carriage through competition. It is true that the original cost of production can be reduced by a reduction of the wages of labor, which labor constitutes in almost, if not in all, cases a very large proportion of the value of the thing produced; but such a means of promoting national happiness or welfare would have the opposite effect.

I have condensed these considerations in respect of bounty, and in respect of the opposition to the bill by those favoring the bounty, to the smallest compass, knowing that the committee will understand the points I have suggested and the extensive range of considerations that enter into the subject.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. None of the committee were in favor of free ships; and I do not know why any of them should be. The highest duty of the United States of America to-day is to provide more shipyards, more docks, more facilities for the construction of ships for the oceans. A great maritime nation like ours might just as well be without a constitution as without shipyards. And free ships would simply relegate all of our shipyards to doing Government work, or supplying the necessities of the coastwise trade and the Great Lakes. Besides, what benefit would a free ship be? What would you save by it? You would save the depreciation, the interest, and the insurance on the additional cost of the American ship over the English, and that is all. You would save, on the average, about $4.50 a gross ton. That you would save, I admit, but you would still be handicapped by the difference of operation, from 40 to 80 per cent in wages, as between a foreign ship and your own. I assert, and I assert it without the slightest hesitation, that you can admit free ships to the United States to-day, and you will find no capital to invest in them. You will not be able to sail them on the oceans of the world in competition with the Norwegian ships or the English.

A bill was finally drafted embodying the views of this committee, was presented to the Senate in the last Congress by Senator HANNA, and to the House by Representative PAYNE, referred to the respective committees having jurisdiction, was carefully considered, evidence taken, discussion had, amendments adopted, and favorable reports were made; but for want of time the measure was not considered. The general committee agreed to the amendments proposed by the Congressional committees; the press gave the details of the bill to the country. The result was further criticisms, additional amendments. All were considered, and those seeming reasonable were adopted. At the last session of this Congress the amended bills were again referred, were again discussed in committee, additional amendments were adopted, and agreed to by a subcommittee of the general committee, which was continually in session here.

Finally the pending measure, with proposed amendments, was favorably reported to the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. In regard to it I wish to say that there never was any other bill before Congress which received such close and critical consideration, on which was expended such careful, conscientious, and intelligent work. Nor was there ever one with this purpose in view which so generally commended itself to the friends of the American ship. Its critics and opponents are those who honestly believe in, and have always advocated, free ships, and the foreign lines who will not tamely submit to surrender the profits of their carrying trade. The former contest it from principle, but are not dangerous, for the country rejects their theory; the latter are inspired only by self-interest, one of the most powerful of all motives, and they will make a most determined, vigorous, and never-ending fight.

I now call your attention to the provisions of the pending bill. The first section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to American ships registered and engaged in the foreign carrying trade of our exports and imports one cent and a half a ton for each 100 miles sailed up to 1,500; beyond the 1,500, 1 cent per ton for each 100 miles. Those figures were reached with the greatest possible care, the only purpose being to equalize the conditions of the British ship and the American ship. The committee did not take the ships which can carry at the lowest possible cost.

The Norwegian ships can beat the world to-day in cheapness of carrying. It did not take the German ships or the Spanish. For its comparison it took the English ship, which in wages and manner of living on shipboard leads the other nations, except perhaps, in the matter of food, Germany, and it only intended that it should equalize the difference between the two. That provision applies to all ships, sail or steam, registered and engaged in the foreign carrying trade. It is the purest kind of democracy. A postal subsidy law is aristocracy; it is monopoly. The subsidy is paid to one great line, for instance, running between this port and the other port, thus practically excluding every other line from running between those ports. But the provisions of this bill seeks to encourage the building of ships by any man who has money enough to build them, and the establishing of lines by any corporation that desires to establish them, and to run them between any ports they please.

The difference between the 1,500 miles and the balance of the long voyages was made on the principle of the long and short haul. The ship that sailed but 1,500 miles would make a great many more entries in a year than the one that sailed 10,000 miles, and the former would have to handle cargo a great many times more frequently than the latter. The ship on the long voyage would have a decided advantage over the ship on the short. It would pay less in port charges, because it would be less frequently in port. It would pay less light-house dues and other port charges abroad for the same reason. Therefore the committee believed that for voyages under 1,500 miles, which would be confined very largely to those between here and the Caribbean Sea ports and the West Indies, the rate fixed was wise, because we have for some time been losing trade there.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The shorter-voyage vessel gets the greater pay?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; for reasons which were very obvious.

Now, is the committee correct in its statement that it costs more to build and more to operate an American ship than it costs our commercial rivals to build and operate theirs? If the committee is mistaken in that respect, then the foundation of this bill falls through. If the committee is correct, then any Senator can see that we never will run American ships on the oceans against foreign ships until there is legislation which will equalize the difference.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator speaks of the results of the work of the committee. Am I to understand him to refer to the committee of 25 distinguished men?

Mr. FRYE. The committee of 25 men.

Mr. MONEY. Not the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. FRYE. I have not yet reached the Committee on Commerce. I am dealing with the bill which two years ago the committee of 25 finally concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. That is not this bill.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no. It is not this bill by any manner of means.

Mr. HANNA. It has been changed.

Mr. FRYE. It has been changed very materially in a great many respects.

Mr. HANNA. By the Commerce Committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I see there are changes in it.

Mr. FRYE. Now, as to the relative cost of ships. The St. Louis and St. Paul cost $5,100,000. Builders on the Clyde offered to construct them for four millions. The St. Louis and St. Paul cost $220 a ton. Great Britain's offer was a hundred and seventy-two dollars a ton. I have a report from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That company is now building two 18-knot ships at Newport News at a cost of a hundred and sixty dollars a ton. The Egypt and the Arabia, 19-knot ships, built in England for the Asiatic trade, cost a hundred and forty-two dollars a ton. The 10-knot steamer Mascanoma, of forty-two hundred tons, built in England, cost $53 a ton. The lowest offer made here on bid was $80 a ton. The fair average cost here of these steamships is a hundred and sixty dollars a ton. In England it is a hundred and forty dollars a ton. I will give the difference on 18-knot steamships. First comes depreciation, which is calculated on all of these ships at from 5 to 6 per cent a year. The depreciation on the American ship would be $8; on the English $7. The insurance increase on the American ship would be $9.60; on the English $8.40. The interest, which in England is only 3 and 3½ per cent on ship property and here never has been known to be less than 6 per cent and is now no less than that, would be $8 on the American ship and $5.60 on the English ship. The difference, total, is $4.60 a gross ton.

There was very much more evidence than that before the committee as to the comparative cost of ships which I do not deem it necessary at this time to lay before the Senate, but the conclusion reached by the general committee was that from $4.60 to $5 a gross ton is the difference in favor of an English ship over an American ship.

Now, as to the cost of operating. I am considering now wages alone. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company is operating the City of Sydney, running under the American flag. The wages of officers and men, monthly, are $3,675. Corresponding ship of the Campania, Sud Americana de Vapores, under the Chilean flag, $1,408.66, the American ship wages being considerably more than double the wages of the ship of the Spanish line. Pacific Mail steamer Peru, wages per month, $3,835; corresponding ship under the Chilean flag, $1,426.97; still in the American ship a good deal more than double the Spanish. The St. Louis, under the American flag, monthly wages, $12,004.35; same steamship under the Belgian flag, $8,250.02.

Then from the Commissioner of Navigation I have a table giving the different wages, which I will print.

It is said that it is very singular that an American ship, for instance, lying right beside a British must pay $35 a month for a fireman and the British ship only $19; and yet that is the fact. The firemen, of course, are the principal part of the crew on one of these steamships. It takes one fireman for every 3 tons of coal. A 10-knot ship will take about 40 tons of coal. It will take, then, about fifteen or sixteen men in a 10-knot ship. A 21-knot ship will take 378 tons of coal a day, and it will require a hundred and twenty-five men to handle it. The increased cost of high-powered ships as compared with low-powered ships is in geometrical ratio, almost.

Young Mr. Clyde, who is one of the most accomplished ship men I know in this country, who has been before the committees of both Houses and impressed them all very favorably indeed, told us that he chartered a Norwegian ship to run to Haiti from New York, and that he was running an American ship of exactly the same size to and from the same ports. Singularly enough, for he said it was very unusual to do so, the captain of the Norwegian ship, a pleasant gentleman and one who had been in his employ some time, gave him the exact pay roll of the Norwegian ship, and to his utter amazement he found that it was but one-half the wages he was paying in the American ship. Being young and vigorous, he made up his mind to reform it promptly. So he determined that he would not run the American ship unless he could get sailors for the Norwegian wages. He undertook it. In the course of a week he succeeded in getting four at Norwegian wages, and he got them on board ship. That night one of them went ashore and barely escaped with his life. He was immediately mobbed by the rest of the sailors because he had consented to serve under the American flag at Norwegian wages. Mr. Clyde went to the rescue of the man, and when he got back the other three had fled. He gave up the business and paid American wages under the American flag and Norwegian wages under the Norwegian flag. That is the experience everywhere.

Men say, "Suppose your American ship is in Liverpool; is she not to obtain sailors for Liverpool wages?" Not one bit of it, if she flies the American flag. Those sailors know just as much about wages as the men who run the ship, and they know the going wages under our flag just as well as the captain does. If you ask a man to go on an American ship, where he will have better living and better quarters, he will not do so in a foreign port unless he has the wages the other sailors on the American ship have. Sailorlike, he will take the poorer food, the poorer quarters, and the lower wages and sail under the British flag.

I have in my hand a statement of the wages on the St. Louis, from the captain down, under the American flag, and on the St. Louis under the Belgian flag, which I will print.

C. M. BENGLESS.

Now, take the matter of food. If you have two or three hundred sailors, that is of some considerable importance. The British have no statutory provision at all as to the food requirement, and many of the nations have not. The shipping federation provided one, but it is not followed. They agree upon the food practically between the master and the crew. Our scale requires from one-half to three-quarters more than the shipping federation of England calls for, which, as I say, is not complied with, and a greater variety. I do not believe that Senators have ever looked at the law which we passed two or three years ago as to the food sailors shall be supplied with on shipboard. Why, it is up to almost the menu of Delmonico's. I am not going to read it. With the permission of the Senate, I will print it, so that Senators may see how we serve our sailors.

By the act of December 21, 1898, which went into effect last February, a minimum scale of provisions for seamen on American merchant vessels was fixed by law. That scale is as follows:

	Sunday.	Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
Water ..... quarts	4	4	4	4	4	4	4
Biscuit ..... pound	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
Beef, salt ..... pounds			1½		1½		1½
Pork, salt ..... pound		1		1		1
Flour ..... do	½		½		½
Canned meat ..... do	1			1
Fresh bread ..... pounds	1½	1½	1½	1½	1½	1½	½
Fish, dry, preserved, or fresh, pound						1
Potatoes or yams ..... pound	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
Canned tomatoes ..... do	½					½
Pease ..... pint			½			½
Beans ..... do		½		½
Rice ..... do		½					½
Coffee (green berry) ..... ounce	½	½	½	½	½	½	½
Tea ..... do	½	½	½	½	½	½	½
Sugar ..... ounces	3	3	3	3	3	3	3
Molasses ..... pint	½		½		½
Dried fruit ..... ounces	3		3		3
Pickles ..... pint		½		½		½
Vinegar ..... do			½				½
Corn meal ..... ounces	4				4
Onions ..... do	4				4		4
Lard ..... ounce	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
Butter ..... do	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
Mustard, pepper, and salt, sufficient for seasoning.

The best estimate which can possibly be made as to the difference in food between English sailors and Americans is that it costs 10 cents a day more for the latter than for the former, and as a matter of course it costs a great deal more than in several other countries of Europe.

I had occasion myself to look into this a number of years ago, and there has been no change since, except that we have been demanding more and more of our ships. I was in Liverpool and stayed there for a week or ten days, anxious to get home. I became acquainted with Captain Russell, who was consul-general of the United States, appointed by Mr. Cleveland. He was an old shipmaster and a very accomplished man. He was a free trader and a free shipman, and of course he and I had sundry discussions on this matter of free ships.

I made the assertion to him about the difference in wages and the difference in food, and he denied it very promptly. I finally prevailed upon him out of friendship—he and I were personal friends—to make himself entirely acquainted with the wages and the food cost on shipboard of all the maritime nations in the world, and he consented to do it. He told me that he spent a year in the inquiry, and did the work with the utmost thoroughness. Then, instead of sending his report to me he forwarded it to our Secretary of State, Mr. Bayard. It is in the State Department today, and can be seen by any Senator. He wrote to me that he had dropped his free-ship theory and no longer held to it, for he said he was perfectly amazed at the result. I wish to quote from that report.

Reference to these tables—

That is, to the tables which he furnished the State Department—

Reference to these tables will show that the vessels of the United States pay the highest rate of wages, besides costing more for maintenance of the crews than those of any other nation. British vessels in domestic ports can procure crews from 37 to 32 per cent lower than are paid on American vessels, which is a serious item in the disbursement account. Then, again, the cost of maintenance on American ships is about 40 cents a man per day, against the English 29 cents, or a difference of 27 per cent in favor of the latter. It is an acknowledged fact that the living on board our vessels is superior to that of other nations, and it is generally asserted that large quantities of food are supplied to the crews, the scale of provisions laid down by Congress being rarely, if ever, resorted to. The wages paid on vessels belonging to Norway, Sweden, Russia, Germany, Denmark, Austria, Spain, and Italy average from 47 to 50 per cent lower than those of the United States vessels, and the cost of maintenance about 32 per cent less, except that of Germany, which is about 10 per cent less only.

The consul gave carefully prepared tables, illustrative of these statements. I took those statements and the tables which he furnished the Secretary of State and undertook (and I spent a great deal of time in doing it) to take one of John Roach's ships which was then running between New York and Brazil and a Spanish ship, I think she was the Alameda, of the same tonnage, which was receiving a subsidy from an act of the Cortes of Spain, and to make a carefully prepared comparison between the two ships. All the figures given were figures taken from the books. I had employed to get it from the Spanish ship a man who had lived in Spain a great many years and was on the most familiar terms with the captain of the Alameda, if that was the name of the ship.

I give here all of the items of difference between the two ships making the same voyages and of the same tonnage and of the same speed. I found that the Spanish ship had an advantage of the American ship, including her subsidy, of $10,748.95 a month, which is over $120,000 a year. I found that the American ship could carry for $7.50 a ton, and the Spanish ship could carry for $5 a ton and make just as much money as the American ship.

Now, what happened? John Roach lost money year after year; then sold out his line to Mr. Thurber and other gentlemen in New York; they lost their entire investment, and the line was withdrawn. Could any other result have by any possibility happened?

Well, now, what was true of the Spanish ship and John Roach's is true of every American ship to-day engaged in the foreign trade, though not quite to the same extent.

Take a British ship at the average subsidy of the postal lines and institute the same comparison, and you will find that she has an advantage of the American of at least $6,000 a month.

I had a carefully prepared comparison covering all these things, a statement of the difference in the three elements of cost of ocean transportation in vessels of the type of the steamship St. Louis under the American flag as compared with the Belgium flag, and with the permission of the Senate I will print that as a part of my remarks without reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be made.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Cost in the United States	$2,550,000
Cost in England	2,000,000
Difference in cost	550,000
	Per annum.
Depreciation in difference in cost, at 6 per cent	$33,000
Average interest on difference in cost, at 3 per cent	16,500
Average insurance on difference in cost, at 3 per cent	16,500
Difference in wages, based on 394 men at an average of $30 per man per month under American wage scale, as compared with $20 per man per month under Belgian wage scale	43,908
Difference in subsistence, based on 10 cents per man per day, which is a reasonable estimate of the difference in cost of American food scale as compared with Belgian food scale	14,184
Difference in cost of repairs, based on 20 per cent of average cost of repairs; this difference of 20 per cent being a reasonable estimate of the difference on cost of all repairs in the United States as compared with Belgium	9,554

The steamship St. Louis, being 11,629 gross tons and making on an average 12 round voyages of 6,200 miles per year, could earn under the full rates of compensation provided for in clause (a) of the bill $108,448 per annum. Since, as stated above, the actual difference in the cost of furnishing transportation with the St. Louis under the American flag as compared with the Belgian flag in the same service and on the same scale would be $133,646 per annum, and the amount the St. Louis would receive for this service, under the full rates provided in clause (a) of the bill, would be only $108,448 per annum, there will be a loss of $25,198 per annum that has got to be made good to the owners of the St. Louis in some other way than as provided in clause (a) of the bill.

In addition to this it must be borne in mind that while, as indicated in the foregoing statement, the American owner must charge and pay 6 per cent interest on the money used in building his ship the Belgian, or other foreign owner in good credit, can get this money at a much lower rate. It is a fact that the International Navigation Company, in the construction of its foreign-built ships, has for years been able to borrow money at not exceeding 3½ per cent, while in the United States this same company has been obliged, and will be obliged, to pay 6 per cent; therefore really in addition to the difference in the cost of furnishing transportation in the St. Louis, under the American flag, as compared with the Belgian flag already stated, there should also be charged a difference of 2½ per cent interest upon the entire original cost of the ship, which, taking into consideration the 6 per cent depreciation account, as I have done throughout this statement, would be equivalent to 1½ per cent on the original cost, or $31,875 per annum. This latter amount, together with the loss of $25,198 per annum, as above stated, makes a total loss, after receiving all the compensation that can be earned under clause (a), $57,073 per annum.

This amount, say $57,073, must therefore be carried forward to be made good to the owners of the St. Louis out of the compensation that can be earned under the (b) clause, which latter compensation must also cover the equivalent of the mail pay, admiralty, and other subventions paid by the foreign governments to their steamers of the class of the St. Louis.

The St. Louis, making an average of twelve voyages per year across the North Atlantic, if under the British flag would receive relatively the same government subventions as similar steamers of the Cunard and White Star lines receive, to wit, $12 per gross ton, which, upon the gross tonnage of the St. Louis, say 11,629 tons, is equivalent to $147,339.46 per annum. Adding this last amount to the loss of $57,073 per annum, carried forward above, we have a total of $204,412.46 per annum, to be made good to the owners of the St. Louis out of the compensation to be paid under clause (b).

The St. Louis, being a 20-knot ship, can earn on twelve round voyages of 6,260 miles, under clause (b), $173,040 per annum; therefore, even after receiving all of the compensation that the St. Louis can earn under the bill, under both clauses (a) and (b), she is worse off than her British competitor of the same type in the same service by $31,372.46 per annum.

This shows conclusively that the rates of compensation provided in clause (b) are not excessive, and it will require all the ingenuity and better management of which the American owner is capable to maintain his position, even with all the assistance rendered by the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Now, the next provision in the bill reaches another class of ships. Originally, as the bill was agreed upon, we commenced a speed premium at steamships of 14 knots, with a gradual increase up to and including the 21-knot ship. This was in addition to the sailing bounty heretofore referred to.

We did it in part because the most of those ships were liable to carry our mail, this bill providing that all of those ships shall carry the United States mail for nothing, furnish all the necessary quarters for messengers, and everything of that kind without charge. Then, again, from 14 knots and upward they are liable to be called upon in case of war as auxiliaries and transports.

Then, again, they were obliged to meet the subsidized ships of the world, and I think Senators will be surprised to note to what extent those ships are subsidized. Take 16-knot ships up to 22-knot, and in the world outside of the United States there are only six to-day which are not running under subsidies from other governments.

Mr. TELLER. To what classes of ships?

Mr. FRYE. Sixteen-knot ships up to 21 knots, both inclusive. There are only six in the whole world to-day unsubsidized by their governments. From 14-knot ships up to 21, inclusive, 80 per cent of all are to-day subsidized by foreign governments, and those are the ships with which we are obliged to compete with our American steamships, in addition to the other difficulties.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator put in a table showing what countries subsidize their ships?

Mr. FRYE. I can do so.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would do it.

Mr. FRYE. I wish first to give a recent act of the German Reichstag. They are preparing to secure the trade of Africa and at least to get their share of it as soon as the Boer war is over. I insert an article from a German newspaper:

[Shipping Weekly Summary, London, March 16, 1900—London Morning Post Correspondent.]

GERMAN STEAMSHIP PROJECT.

BERLIN, March 12, 1900.

A bill has been laid before the federal council providing for an augmentation of the German mail service to South Africa commensurate with the rapid increase in commercial prosperity of that quarter of the globe which may be expected to follow the conclusion of the war. The present contract with the German East Africa line terminates at the end of this year.

It is proposed to establish a fortnightly mail service, running alternately from the east and from the west round the Cape of Good Hope, and assisted by an intermediary line to and from East Africa through the Suez Canal. The imperial subsidy to the contractors is to be raised from 900,000 marks to 1,350,000 marks annually.

The bill also stipulates for the construction of five new large steamers at a cost of 2,500,000 marks each, and of four medium-sized steamers at 1,300,000 marks.

That became a law last May. The subsidy will pay in thirteen years the entire cost of this new fleet of nine German steamships of 12 knots and under. Or, viewed in another way, these nine German ships will draw a subsidy about 25 per cent greater than proposed in the shipping bill now pending.

That, I think, does not appear in the Commissioner's report, because it was so late that the law was passed. But the Commissioner of Navigation is one of the most accomplished Commissioners we have ever had and is very faithful in his work. I commend his report to Senators who desire to make themselves familiar with this subject—last year's report and this year's report.

THE SUBSIDIES OF OTHER NATIONS.

Take Great Britain. She does not pay so much now as she used to. She has been in the habit, if we undertook to interfere with her, of doubling her subsidies, and drove the Collins line off in that way.

Great Britain		$5,851,525
Mail contracts and mail pay, 1899[1]	$3,755,395
Colonial mail contracts, 1899[2]	765,450

[1] Government report or statute. [2] Steamship report or contract. [3] Estimate.

I wish right here to insert something else in the RECORD. Strange and wonderful criticisms have been made as to this bill, and their number will be like the sands on the seashore. The bill has enemies. The foreign lines will fight it to the bitter end. Perhaps later on in the debate I may wish to make further reply. One criticism constantly urged is that the compensation provided for is unreasonable and extravagant.

Now, I wish to give the Senate certain British lines subsidized, as compared with these which we propose to subsidize. In the Peninsular and Oriental, which is one of the first steamship lines subsidized by Great Britain, the British contract called for $1,650,297 a year. For exactly the same line of American steamships, making exactly the same voyages, under all the terms of this bill it would be $1,146,941, nearly $500,000 less than what Great Britain pays.

The totals under those corporations are tonnage, 887,262—more tonnage than we have in the United States engaged in the foreign carrying trade to-day. The contract annually with those companies by Great Britain is $3,778,982. Put our ships in their place exactly as to size, tonnage, speed, and voyages, and under the Senate bill the pay would be $3,488,834. This Senate bill proposes to offset the amount awarded under the British contracts of $3,778,982 by $3,488,834 awarded under American contracts.

The finding on the part of the general committee was that they could stand this difference in the Pacific Ocean, this advantage on the part of Great Britain, because these ships, nearly all of them, will be obliged to go through the Suez Canal and pay a dollar a ton toll, while the American ships will not be obliged to do the same thing. I will, with the permission of the Senate, insert this statement as a part of my remarks:

Some of the recent criticisms of this bill convey the impression that the compensation it provides for steamships is wholly unreasonable. On the general principle of the bill differences of opinion are to be expected, but its details are not, I believe, subject to criticism on the score of extravagance, at least when compared with the support foreign governments offer to their mail steamships.

The bill gives a uniform rate of compensation to all vessels (sail or steam), virtually 1 cent per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles traversed, to offset the increased cost of construction and operation in the United States. This has not, so far as I am aware, been criticised as unreasonable, if one accepts the theory that the Government is warranted in offsetting those differences in order to give our merchant shipping in foreign trade a start.

The bill, as it is proposed to amend it, also gives (over and above that virtually 1 cent per ton per 100 miles) a special allowance for steamships of over 2,000 gross tons and of 12 knots speed or upward. About 80 per cent of the seagoing screw steamships in the world which comply with the requirements named as to size and speed now receive and for some years have received the assistance in some form of the various governments whose flags they respectively fly. The proposition in Senate bill 5590, so far from being unwarrantable, therefore, is mere compliance with the ordinary maritime custom of years. It seems strange only to those who have not looked at the facts.

The special and additional rates for steamships of 12 knots or over, which have been condemned as extravagant and unheard of, are designed to offset the corresponding allowances given to similar steamships by foreign governments. Bearing in mind that these rates only (not the allowance for difference in cost of construction and operation) are being considered, the rates proposed are not more than enough to counterbalance contributions by foreign governments to similar steamships.

The large British mail contracts are awarded in lump sums, but I have been at the pains to ascertain the steamships by which they are performed, their size, speed, number of voyages, and distances traversed during a year. With this data it is easy to ascertain the additional rates named to which similar vessels would be entitled to under Senate bill 5590. Viewed another way this comparison will show what foreign governments pay to certain steamships and what American steamships of precisely the same size and speed running parallel to them throughout a year would receive as an offset under this bill. The detailed computations would fill several columns, but following are the summaries (including tonnage of the contract vessels):

	Tonnage.	British contracts.	Senate No. 5590.
Peninsular and Oriental	148,355	$1,060,297	$1,146,941
Pacific Steam and Orient S. S. Cos	56,305	413,100	465,531
Castle Mail and Union S. S. Co	63,676	456,840	498,410
Royal Mail	21,733	291,600	196,742
Canadian Pacific	17,715	291,600	140,586
Cunard and White Star	79,478	665,545	1,040,624
Total	387,262	3,778,982	3,488,834

Senate bill 5590 thus proposes to offset $3,778,982 awarded under British contracts with $3,488,834 awarded under American contracts. The proposition is not extravagant, nor does it mean a pot of money for the owners of fast American steamships. Were it not for two facts—that Americans will obtain advantages for operating slow cargo boats in conjunction with mail steamships, and that our Pacific intercourse with Asia is not subject to Suez Canal tolls—the bill would probably fail to accomplish its purpose.

The last item in the table, which shows a marked difference, calls for a word. The United States has been paying the Cunard and White Star lines annually $180,000, on the average, for some years ($225,000 in 1898) for carrying the outward mails. Unless this amount be added to the $665,000 paid those lines by the British Government, it ought to be deducted from the $1,040,624, which corresponding American vessels performing the same service would receive under Senate bill 5590 as being "merely mail pay," and having nothing to do with ship subsidies.

Any method of comparing facts with which I am familiar will show that such advantages as this bill gives to American shipping are as much to the benefit of cargo vessels as to mail steamships, in spite of the higher rates given to the latter class, which have been computed on the basis of efforts by other nations to maintain fast ocean mail lines.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. CULLOM. I see that the Senator is thoroughly familiar, apparently, with everything pertaining to this subject. I should like to have him state whether, under the operation of this bill, if it should pass, the South American commerce with the United States will be aided at all, and if so, to what extent, probably.

Mr. FRYE. Under the original postal subsidy bill which I alluded to a while ago, which I reported to the Senate, and which passed the Senate, if it had become a law there would have been two lines between the United States and the South American republics. That had been promised by men who are entirely competent to fulfill their promises. It is absolutely certain that if this bill becomes a law there will be two lines between the United States and the South American republics, of fast ships, because fast ships are more needed sailing south than they are across east and west, on account of tropical climates and the danger by the long voyages of the cargo becoming destroyed.

Mr. CULLOM. The reason why I asked the question is that I have heard people state that they did not think this bill, if it should become a law, would encourage commerce between the United States and the South American republics, and I think it is very important that that should be done in some way.

Mr. FRYE. It is required more between the United States and the South American republics and on the Pacific Ocean than anywhere else, and the purpose of the framers of the bill was to secure our share of the markets of South America and those of Asia. I have no doubt that the bill, if it should become a law, would accomplish those purposes.

I wish, as a matter of interest to Senators, right here to give them an idea of the difference in the consumption of coal on these various ships. A 10-knot ship will consume 44 tons of coal a day and require 15 firemen; an 11-knot ship will consume 53 tons of coal a day and require 18 firemen; a 12-knot ship will consume 65 tons of coal and require 22 firemen; an 18-knot ship will require 209 tons of coal a day and 70 firemen; a 19-knot ship will consume 254 tons of coal and require 85 firemen; a 20-knot ship will consume 305 tons of coal and require 102 firemen, and a 21-knot ship will consume 371 tons of coal and require 127 firemen. So, while the 21-knot ship makes a trifle more than twice as much speed as the 10-knot ship, the one requires 44 tons of coal and the other, instead of requiring twice the amount of coal, requires 371 tons.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Ships of the same size?

Mr. FRYE. Just the same size. I will print this statement, which is a carefully prepared one. It is a statement showing the annual cost of coal and handling coal, compared with the compensation under this bill, at various rates of speed, of a steamship of 10,000 gross tons from San Francisco to Nagasaki, 5,000 nautical miles, coal being $4 a ton, firemen costing $1 per day, and navigation at full speed for 175 days. A steamship will not be at sea more than 175 days in any year. The rest of the time she is laid off for repairs or in dock, or is taking cargo on board or discharging cargo. Consequently I think this statement will be very instructive.

I wish to explain further about this matter: I said that the bill as agreed to by the general committee commenced the speed premium at 14 knots, but before the Senate Committee on Commerce there were quite a number of gentlemen who appeared in behalf, as they said—and I suppose they did—of the agriculture of the country. They contended that what they were after were low-powered ships—freight ships. They did not care anything about high-powered ships. They wanted low-powered ships to carry freight from the Pacific coast to the East—commonly called "tramps"—especially low-powered ships running from 12 or 13 knots down to 6 and 8 knots an hour. They thought that we had given undue compensation to the higher grade ships. They persuaded the Senate Committee on Commerce that there was something in that contention, and in our investigation we found a singular fact, difficult to explain, but still a fact: A 10-knot ship, running 175 days at the speed provided for it, would pay for coal and handling it under this bill and have $15,000 left at the end of the year. That is the subvention for the 10-knot ship.

The sailing bounty for a 10-knot ship would give it $15,000 a year more than its coal and handling; an 11-knot ship would get $12,000 more; and a 12-knot ship would get only $8,000 more. The increased cost begins to become somewhat rapid when you strike a 13-knot ship. A 13-knot ship would get only $2,730 more than its coal, evidently leaving the 12 and 13 knot ships subject to the criticism of the gentlemen who were before us. Therefore we offered an amendment in the Senate Committee on Commerce to the general committee's bill commencing the speed subsidy at 12 knots instead of at 14, and as the bill is before the Senate to-day there is such an amendment pending, which, if adopted, will pay the low-powered vessels more in proportion than the highest.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Under the provisions of the bill, about how much subsidy would a 21-knot ship get? Would it not draw about $304,000 a year?

Mr. FRYE. I can tell you what it gets here. A 21-knot ship will travel 504 miles a day, and get $304,290. She will burn 371 tons of coal; she will employ 127 firemen, and she will receive as compensation, beyond the cost of handling the coal, $22,932.

Mr. CLAY. How much would she receive in gross in a year? Would it not be about $304,000?

Mr. FRYE. Three hundred and four thousand two hundred and ninety dollars.

Mr. CLAY. That is a 21-knot ship?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Does a 21-knot ship really carry any farm products?

Mr. FRYE. Of course she does not, other than fresh meats, etc.

Mr. CLAY. Now, how much will a 14-knot ship receive under this bill? Will it not be about a third as much as a 21-knot ship? Is not that true?

Mr. FRYE. No; the 14-knot ship receives over and above the cost of coal $53,508, while the 21-knot ship only receives $22,932.

Mr. CLAY. I understand; but the total amount received by the 21-knot ship, which is a fast passenger steamer, will amount to $304,290.

Mr. FRYE. That is a little over twice as much as a 14-knot ship.

Mr. CLAY. That is the total amount.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that most of our farm products are carried by ships of about 12 knots.

Mr. FRYE. Certainly they are.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that to be true, and I understand that the ships that are to convey our farm products under the provisions of this bill will not draw more than a third of the amount of subsidy that the fast passenger steamships will get.

Mr. FRYE. Certainly they will not, and it will not cost more than a quarter as much to run them. But the idea of carrying farm products, wheat, cotton, corn, bacon, and all that sort of thing, in a 21-knot ship! Why, the carrying capacity of a 21-knot ship, so far as freight is concerned, is not over 1,400 tons. Its space is taken up with machinery and with the coal in its bunkers, taking coal for its round voyage, with its passenger and post-office accommodations. Such ships were never in the world intended for freight-carrying ships, and nobody would ever dream of carrying farm products in them.

Mr. CLAY. I so understand.

Mr. FRYE. And nobody would ever dream of carrying farm products in a 14-knot ship.

Mr. CLAY. I never intended to convey the impression that a fast passenger steamship carried farm products, but in the report of the majority of the committee it is stated that the object and purpose of this bill is to increase our exports, which consist chiefly of agricultural products.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. The idea I wished to convey was simply that the passenger steamers that would draw the largest part of this subsidy do not carry any agricultural products, and that the ships which really convey our agricultural products would not draw a third as much subsidy as the passenger steamers.

Mr. FRYE. And I was undertaking to show just at the time the Senator interrupted me that, in order to aid the lower-powered ships, which do carry agricultural products, we are giving them a higher premium under this bill than we do the fast ships, which do not carry them, and it was done at the demand of the agriculturists. That is just the point I was making about this bill. I will print this table, with the permission of the Senate.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] reminds me that these fast ships do carry dressed beef, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. CLAY. I believe that is correct, and I think I have a manifest showing that they carry crockery and dressed beef.

Mr. TELLER. Before the Senator from Maine gets through I want to ask him a question regarding the bill. Can the Senator give us a statement as to what the different speed premiums would be on these steamships? If the Senator has that I should be glad to have him present it. I do not understand it.

Mr. FRYE. I have it here, and I shall print it.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator one other question. I want to ask if the committee have determined as to which is the most economic speed for carrying products like our farm products?

Mr. FRYE. From 8 to 12 knots.

Mr. TELLER. So I understand. That is my information.

Mr. FRYE. That is why the general committee commenced in the first place the speed premium at 14 knots, for vessels having that speed immediately become available as auxiliaries to the Navy in case of need.

Mr. ALLISON. If it be convenient to the Senator to complete his observations to-morrow, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, if he will yield for that purpose.

Mr. FRYE. I have taken so much time on the first two propositions of the bill that I should like to spend some additional time on the other provisions contained in the bill, and therefore it will suit my convenience entirely.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. Before that motion is put, I desire to offer an amendment by way of a substitute for the pending bill, and ask that it be read and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw his motion?

Mr. ALLISON. I do for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Amendatory of Title XLVIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to authorize the purchase of foreign-built ships by citizens of the United States for use in the foreign carrying trade.

Be it enacted, etc., That so many of the various provisions of the Title XLVIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Regulation of commerce and navigation," embraced in chapters 1 to 9 of said title, and from section 4131 to section 4305, both inclusive, as either prohibit or restrict citizens of the United States from purchasing ships built in other countries, to be used in the foreign carrying trade of the United States, or which impose taxes, burdens, or restrictions on such ships when owned by American citizens which are not imposed on ships built in the United States, are hereby repealed; and it shall be lawful hereafter for all citizens of the United States to buy ships built in whole or in part in any foreign country and have them registered as ships of the United States; and when so registered such ships so bought shall be entitled to all the rights and subjected only to the same regulations as are now provided by law for the government and management of ships built wholly within the United States and owned and controlled by citizens thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will lie upon the table and be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the election case from the Tenth Iowa district be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] asks to have the member-elect from the Tenth Iowa district sworn in.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to Judge Conner being sworn in, but the certificate submitted yesterday ought to be withdrawn, the new and proper certificate ought to be filed in place thereof, and a statement of the facts put in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] withdraw the credentials offered yesterday?

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to withdraw those offered yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The credentials of yesterday being withdrawn, the following credentials of the governor of Iowa will be read to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States of America, State of Iowa, executive department.

To Hon. JAMES P. CONNER, greeting:

It is hereby certified that at an election holden on the 6th day of November, 1900, you were elected to the office of Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of said State for the residue of the term ending the 3d day of March, 1901.

Given at the seat of government this 27th day of November, A. D. 1900.

[SEAL.] LESLIE M. SHAW.

By the governor:

G. L. DOBSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that I think the credentials addressed to the member-elect are not exactly in form, but that is immaterial. I think they should have been addressed to the Speaker of the House, but I would not make any objection to that mere informality. I desire, however, that it should go into the record that a vacancy did exist, in view of the certificate presented yesterday, and to which I felt constrained to object.

Mr. HEPBURN. There can be no question about that. Whatever defect there may have been about the written resignation of Mr. DOLLIVER, it was cured by the fact that he immediately, after the date of that, accepted another office, the holding of which would be inconsistent with his remaining a Representative.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. That is perfectly true.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am told that the acceptance was in writing and was filed with the governor long prior to the date of his ordering the election.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. But until the gentleman's statement there was nothing in the record of the House to show that Mr. DOLLIVER had accepted an appointment which vacated his seat in the House, without reference to his resignation. If Mr. Conner's right to a seat depended upon Mr. DOLLIVER'S resignation, he would not be entitled to admission as a member of the House, because no vacancy which authorized the governor of Iowa to order an election existed by reason of Mr. DOLLIVER'S resignation, and the election would have been void; but in this case it happened that Mr. DOLLIVER accepted an appointment as Senator from the State of Iowa, and thus created a vacancy, to fill which the governor of Iowa was authorized to issue a writ of election. With that statement made a part of the record it is entirely proper that the member-elect should be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will step forward and take the oath of office.

Thereupon Mr. Conner came forward, accompanied by Mr. HEPBURN, and the oath of office was administered to him by the Speaker.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, Dubuque, Iowa.

DEAR SIR: I beg to respectfully advise you that I have this day resigned as a Representative in the Fifty-sixth Congress of the United States from the Second Congressional district of the State of California.

Very respectfully, yours,

MARION DE VRIES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 20, A. D. 1900.

COMMITTEE CHANGES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following resignation:

The honorable the SPEAKER HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Very respectfully, J. W. BABCOCK.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this resignation will be approved. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The SPEAKER made the following announcement of committee appointments:

EDWARD L. HAMILTON, of Michigan, to be a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs.

JESSE OVERSTREET, of Indiana, to be chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

ROBERT W. DAVIS, of Florida, and ALLAN L. MCDERMOTT, of New Jersey, to be members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement, and then to make a request by unanimous consent. The Committee on Military Affairs has completed the consideration of the bill for the reorganization of the Army, and will make a report this afternoon. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up for consideration to-morrow——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HULL. Before my request is submitted, I want to say that under the law as it now exists we must commence mustering out the present Army of the United States in the very near future. We should commence returning them to the United States in January, and there are at least four hundred stations in the Philippines from which troops could not be withdrawn without endangering the life of every man who has shown himself friendly to the United States Government. The necessity for immediate action on this subject is, in my judgment, apparent not only to every member of the House, but to every citizen of the United States. The importance for immediate action is imperative. I therefore ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the bill I have named may be taken up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, asks unanimous consent that the Army reorganization bill be taken up to-morrow immediately after the approval of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I object. The gentleman can have a rule brought in for the consideration of the bill if the House wants to expedite it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY—SEAT OF NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report back without amendment the bill which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The bill (H. R. 12283) was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12283) in relation to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia.

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives have each appointed a committee to act with other committees appointed respectively by the President of the United States and by the citizens of the District of Columbia (in a mass meeting assembled), which committees have in charge the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas said committees have in joint session adopted a plan of celebration which has been submitted to the President of the United States and by him transmitted to Congress, such plan proposing as a feature of the celebration the holding by the Senate and House of Representatives, jointly, commemorative exercises in the Hall of the House of Representatives in the afternoon of the 12th day of December, 1900, in honor of the centennial anniversary of the first session of Congress held in the permanent Capitol: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the 12th day of December, 1900, at the hour of half past 3 o'clock p. m., and that addresses on subjects bearing on the celebration shall be made by Senators and Representatives to be chosen by the joint committee mentioned in the preamble; that the President and ex-Presidents of the United States, the heads of the several Executive Departments, the Justices of the Supreme Court, representatives of foreign governments accredited to this Government, the governors of the several States and Territories, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Lieutenant-General of the Army and the Admiral of the Navy, officers of the Army and Navy who have received the thanks of Congress, and all persons who have the privilege of the floor either of the Senate or the House be, and are hereby, invited to be present on the occasion, and that the members of the committee from the country at large, the members of the said citizens' committee, and the chairmen and vice-chairmen of the committees of the national capital centennial are hereby granted the privilege of the floor of the House during the exercises; that the said citizens' committees shall issue cards of admission to such portions of the public galleries of the Hall of the House as may be set apart by the Doorkeeper of the House for that purpose. That the Speaker of the House shall call the assembly to order and the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as presiding officer during the exercises. That the 12th day of December, 1900, be a legal holiday within the District of Columbia. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized to deliver to the Architect of the Capitol, for the purpose of decorating the Capitol, its approaches, and the reviewing stands in the Capitol grounds for the occasion, such United States ensigns and flags, except battle flags, and such signal numbers and other flags as may be spared, the same to be delivered to the Architect immediately, and returned by him not later than the 31st day of December, 1900. That admission of the general public to the southern portion of the Capitol, including the Rotunda, on the said 12th day of December, 1900, shall be by card only, under the direction of the Doorkeeper of the House. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed, for the occasion, to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure the preservation of public order and protection of life and property, and to grant authority or permits for the use of such thoroughfares and sidewalks in the city of Washington as may be necessary for parades, and that the citizens' committee are authorized to erect for the occasion a reviewing stand at the east side of or on the east steps of the Capitol.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXPENDITURES OF PARIS EXPOSITION COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, copy of a letter from the Commissioner-General of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1900, of November 17, 1900, giving a detailed statement of the expenditures of the Commission for the year ended November 15, 1900.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 4, 1900.

PRELIMINARY REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a preliminary report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, dated November 30, 1900.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 4, 1900.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I report back with amendments the resolution for the distribution of the President's message, and ask its present consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session as relates to the revenue, the bonded debt of the United States, and the treaties affecting the revenue be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

That so much as relates to the foreign affairs, the consular and diplomatic service, including appropriations therefor, together with the accompanying correspondence and documents, and to the revision of treaties other than treaties affecting the revenue, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That so much as relates to the appropriations of the public revenue for support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for pensions; for the District of Columbia, and for all deficiencies, and also for the exposition at Paris in 1900, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That so much as relates to the judiciary of the United States, to the administration of justice, and the organization of courts be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

That so much as relates to banks and banking and the currency be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That so much as relates to the mints of the United States and to the coinage of gold and silver bullion be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

That so much as relates to the commerce of the United States, domestic and foreign, except so far as it affects the revenue, to intercolonial railways, and the Nicaragua Canal be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

That so much as relates to agriculture and appropriations therefor be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

That so much as relates to the merchant marine and fisheries be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

That so much as relates to the military establishment and appropriations therefor be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That so much as relates to the naval establishment and to the construction of additional vessels for the Navy, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

That so much as relates to the post-offices and post-roads and to the carrying of the foreign mails, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

That so much as relates to the public domain be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

That so much as relates to the relations of the United States to the Indian tribes, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

That so much as relates to the Territories, Alaska, and the Hawaiian Islands be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

That so much as relates to the islands which came to the United States through the treaty of 1899 with Spain, and to Cuba (except so much as relates to the revenue and the appropriations), be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

That so much as relates to pensions be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

That so much as relates to the Pacific railroads be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

That so much as relates to the civil service be referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

That so much as relates to foreign immigration be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

That so much as relates to the census be referred to the Select Committee on the Twelfth Census.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

After the words "nineteen hundred," on page 2, insert "the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the seat of Government in the District of Columbia, and also the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo in 1901."

On page 4, after the word "census," in line 5, insert "including apportionment of representation in Congress." At the end of the resolution add the following: "That so much as relates to public buildings be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the consideration of reports to be called up by the standing committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

MILITARY JUSTICE.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up House bill No. 7571.

The bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person not belonging to the Army of the United States who, being duly subpœnaed to appear as a witness before a general court-martial of the Army, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness or to testify or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpœnaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished on information in the district court of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney, on the certification of the facts to him by the general court-martial, to file an information against and prosecute the person so offending, and the punishment of such person, on conviction, shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this shall not apply to persons residing beyond the State, Territory, or District in which such general court-martial is held, and that the fees of such witness, at the rate of 5 cents a mile from his place of residence to the place of trial and $1.50 for each day required for such travel, shall be tendered him, and that after testifying he shall be paid at the same rate for returning and $1.50 per day while in attendance on the court-martial, such amounts to be paid by the Pay Department of the Army out of the appropriation for compensation of witnesses.

SEC. 2. That article 94, section 1342, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That section 183 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 183. Any officer or clerk of any of the departments lawfully detailed to investigate frauds on, or attempts to defraud, the Government, or any irregularity or misconduct of any officer or agent of the United States, and any officer of the Army detailed to conduct an investigation, and the recorder, and, if there be none, the presiding officer of any military board appointed for such purpose, shall have authority to administer an oath to any witness attending to testify or depose in the course of such investigation."

SEC. 4. That article 83, section 1342, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"ART. 83. Regimental and garrison courts-martial and summary courts detailed under existing laws to try enlisted men shall not have power to try capital cases or commissioned officers, but shall have power to award punishment not to exceed confinement at hard labor for three months or forfeiture of three months' pay, or both, and in addition thereto, in the case of noncommissioned officers, reduction to the ranks, and in the case of first-class privates, reduction to second-class privates."

SEC. 5. That article 60, section 1342, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge," and substituting therefor the words "shall, on conviction thereof by a court-martial, be punished at the discretion of the court, subject to such limitation as may be prescribed by the President by virtue of the power vested in him."

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

At the end of section 1 add the following:

"Provided, That no witness shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any questions which may tend to incriminate or degrade him."

At the end of section 4 add the following:

"Provided, That a summary court shall not adjudge confinement and forfeiture in excess of a period of one month unless the accused shall, before trial, consent in writing to trial by said court; but in any case of refusal to so consent the trial may be had either by general, regimental, or garrison court-martial, or by said summary court, but in case of trial by said summary court without consent as aforesaid the court shall not adjudge confinement or forfeiture of pay for more than one month."

Strike out section 5 and insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That article 60, section 1342, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting, after the words 'shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge,' the words 'or by any or all of said penalties.'"

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this bill is well named a bill to prevent the failure of military justice. It was originally prepared by the War Department for the relief of the military courts and of the soldier. Every section has received very careful attention from the committee. The substance of the measure may be stated very briefly.

At present, by statute, a military court may subpœna a witness to come before it, but when that witness appears there is no provision of law by which he can be compelled to testify. Military courts have no power to punish for contempt. In the present state of public feeling it was not thought advisable to give that power to military courts, but it was thought right that in such cases, in order to prevent the failure of justice, the military court might present the facts to the United States civil court, and that the man who refuses to attend and to testify might be tried and convicted of an offense against the United States.

It will readily be seen that in cases, especially of stealing, embezzling, etc., where other parties who are not soldiers have been privy to the offense, justice will often fail as regards the soldier himself unless evidence can be compelled.

The second section is directed to a curious anomaly. In the old days it was thought advisable to provide that courts-martial should sit only between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon. The result is that proceedings are often delayed by this provision. This bill repeals that section of the Articles of War.

The third section gives to military officers who are appointed to conduct investigations the power to swear witnesses. At present officers of the Treasury Department or the Post-Office Department have the right to administer oaths; but an officer of the Army, intent on the same course of investigation, has no such power, but must go to a notary public; and if he happen to be in Alaska or in any of the Western Territories, he may be unable to find an officer to take an affidavit. This bill simply gives a military officer the same power which belongs to other officers of the Government.

The fourth section, Mr. Speaker, is one that tends most to the relief of the soldier himself; and I desire to call the special attention of the members present to it. For the past ten or fifteen years there has existed in the Army what has been called a summary court, which, in part, takes the place of a general court-martial, and has jurisdiction of small infractions of discipline and trifling offenses committed by the soldier. Under the court-martial system, a soldier who is accused of some trifling infraction of duty must wait sometimes even as long as three or four months before the court can be convened, and is subjected to great inconvenience, and often to imprisonment for the entire time.

Of course, until the question of guilt or innocence can be tried by the court-martial, the soldier is under certain restraints according to the rules of the service. To avoid this condition, and for the punishment of slight offenses, like being late at quarters or failure to respond to roll call, it is thought desirable to enlarge the jurisdiction and scope of the powers of these summary courts. By the present law the commanding officer of the post or of a detachment of troops might appoint a summary court to try small offenders and inflict punishment not exceeding confinement in the guardhouse or labor for one month and the forfeiture of one month's pay.

In the case of a noncommissioned officer, he might be reduced to the ranks in addition to the other punishment provided. The pending bill amends the jurisdiction given to such officers who are detailed to try these offenses, and is believed to be in the interest of the service as well as of the soldier himself. The amendment provides for cases that where there are several small offenses that might be tried together, or where the penalty is increased by reason of its being the second offense, under the law as it stands the accused is often kept waiting trial for months, in the more remote garrisons, and is sometimes forced to go long distances to a court-martial. To prevent these evils the jurisdiction of the summary court is extended to punishment for three months and forfeiture of three months' pay, but with the express proviso, which the committee added by amendment, that in case of trial by summary court the penalty shall not exceed one month, as heretofore, unless the accused himself, before the trial, waives his right to a trial by a court-martial and consents in writing to trial by the summary court.

The fifth section of the bill is an amendment to the sixtieth article of war, which provides for the punishment of high crimes and misdemeanors in officers and men, such as embezzlement, stealing, frauds committed against the United States, and crimes of like character. The article provides that the party convicted shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as the court-martial may adjudge. This bill adds the words "or by any or all of said penalties."

It will be recalled by members present that in the progress of a famous military trial within the last year, which involved what was believed to be the embezzlement of many thousands of dollars on the part of an officer of engineers, it was contended that only a fine or imprisonment could be awarded, and that on conviction of the fraud a guilty officer could not be punished by fine and imprisonment and by such other punishment as the court-martial may adjudge, but only by one of them, and that if both fine and imprisonment should be awarded the sentence would be illegal. It was therefore deemed necessary to add the words "or by any or all of said penalties," so that the full limit of punishment that the law evidently intended could be awarded in such cases. This new section provides that under this article of war, on conviction, any or all of such penalties may be invoked.

If, Mr. Speaker, there are any other matters requiring explanation to the House, I shall be very glad on inquiry to respond to them and give a full explanation of all the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill, in the first section to which the gentleman has just referred, relates, as I understand it, to contempt cases?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. What is the extreme penalty for contempt which is proposed by the bill?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It authorizes a fine not exceeding $500 to be imposed by the civil court——

Mr. WHEELER. Does any imprisonment attach?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey (continuing). Or imprisonment, at the option of the court. I beg pardon. I did not read all of the provisions which the bill carries; but the gentleman will see that it covers both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. WHEELER. And that is the punishment for contempt merely?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; for contempt in refusing to obey a subpœna or refusing to testify when subpœnaed. The bill provides as follows:

That every person not belonging to the Army of the United States who, being duly subpœnaed to appear as a witness before a general court-martial of the Army, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness or to testify or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpœnaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished, on information, in the district court of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney, on the certification of the facts to him by the general court-martial, to file an information against and prosecute the person so offending, and the punishment of such person, on conviction, shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

There are provisos that all fees shall be paid, and that no witness should be compelled to incriminate himself.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the phraseology of the bill. It says "if he willfully fails to attend." Suppose his failure to attend is occasioned by unavoidable casualty, such as sickness, misfortune, or something of that sort?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That would not be willful.

Mr. WHEELER. Ah, yes; but I am just about to point out to the gentleman where a whimsical court might impose that penalty.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think not. I think in a legal sense he would not be guilty of willful failure, because this is a criminal prosecution, subject to the rules of criminal law, which regards willfulness as implying intention.

Mr. WHEELER. I will not dispute with my friend about a judicial construction of the language, but I desire to call attention to the fact that in statutes of that sort the phraseology generally embraces the language "unless prevented by unavoidable casualty." Now, has there been no criticism of that exact phraseology by any member of the committee?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The phraseology of that section has been entirely changed from that originally suggested, and it has been very carefully drawn, so as to apply only to willful defaults.

Mr. WHEELER. I am quite sure that is the intention.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. And I believe that will be the intention of the House; but I am trying to point out to the gentleman how it is subject to another construction. My observation has been that in statutes of that sort, to guard against the whimsical construction of some dyspeptic judge, if such can be found, they put in the language "unless prevented by unavoidable casualty."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think any jury would take care of that, inasmuch as this is an offense that would have to be tried by a jury.

Mr. WHEELER. Do you so provide?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; but it is a misdemeanor, punishable on conviction.

Mr. WHEELER. Contempt cases are always tried by the court.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This is not a provision for punishment for contempt by the court. It refers the matter to the civil authorities, and there must be a conviction of a misdemeanor.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but contempt proceedings look to the dignity of the tribunal, and unless specifically provided that the trial shall be by jury it addresses itself to the conscience of the judge.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This is not a punishment for contempt. It says that the man who refuses to attend shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which he can be tried in a United States district court. It is not for contempt, and the judge does not have the power of punishment for contempt. A good many of us, or some of us, at least, would have liked to give the power to the military courts to punish for contempt, as they can in other countries; but that was thought inadvisable, as seeming to be an attack upon the rights of the citizen.

Mr. WHEELER. Is the penalty of $500 an arbitrary one, or is it left to the discretion of the court?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It provides that the punishment for the misdemeanor shall be in the discretion of the court, as in all other cases.

Mr. WHEELER. It shall not exceed $500.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It shall not exceed $500.

Mr. WHEELER. One other question, if the gentleman will pardon me for one moment. In that section relating to trial by what are ordinarily termed drumhead courts-martial it is provided that the soldier shall not be so tried unless he gives written consent?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. For cumulative offenses; where more than one offense is tried.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, when he gives written consent, do you authorize that drumhead court-martial to imprison him in their discretion?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Not to exceed three months.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, that is the law that you are proposing to change, as I understand it?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; the present law limits it to one month.

Mr. WHEELER. And now you propose to make it three.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Up to three.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the bill would be more acceptable if the gentleman would consent to put that expression in there "unless prevented by unavoidable casualty."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. There might be a great many other excuses.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] that as I understand it in the construction of criminal statutes the word "willful" implies moral turpitude. I think the objection raised by the gentleman from Kentucky would not be tenable, because an unavoidable detention or accident does not come under that head at all.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known rule of criminal procedure that no conviction can be had unless it is based upon criminal intent. The point I want to make on the word "willfully" is that it is subject entirely to the construction of the court. The jury passes on the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and the court decides on what the punishment shall be.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PARKER of New Jersey, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DETAIL OF RETIRED OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up for consideration and passage the bill H. R. 4742.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4742) to amend section 1225 of Revised Statutes so as to provide for detail of active or retired officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in public schools.

Whereas the national defense must depend upon the volunteer service of the people of the several States; and

Whereas those cities and towns which shall adopt a system of military instruction in their public schools are entitled to the assistance of the Government in order to secure to the United States such a knowledge of military affairs among the youth of the country as will render them efficient as volunteers if called upon for the national defense: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning the detail of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to permit the President to detail, under the provisions of that act, and in addition to the detail of the officers of the Army and Navy now authorized to be detailed under the existing provisions of this act, such active or retired officers and noncommissioned officers of the Army and Navy of the United States as in his judgment may be required for that purpose, not exceeding the limit provided for in section 2 of this bill, to act as instructors in military drill and tactics in normal schools of the several States, and in the public schools of the various cities in the United States, where such instruction shall have been authorized by the educational authorities thereof, and where the services of such instructors shall have been applied for by said authorities.

SEC. 2. That details of such active or retired officers and noncommissioned officers shall be made according to population, and apportioned as follows: Commissioned officers, not above the rank of captain, to cities of 100,000 and upward; sergeants, to cities of 50,000 and less than 100,000; corporals, to cities of 25,000 and less than 50,000: Provided, That in cities of 200,000 and upward a sergeant may be detailed for each 100,000 above 100,000 inhabitants: And provided further, That an active or retired commissioned officer may be detailed for this duty in the capital of any State not having 100,000 inhabitants. The maximum number of active or retired commissioned officers to be detailed under the provision of this act in State normal and public schools as herein prescribed shall not exceed 100, and shall be exclusive of the details of officers of the Army and Navy authorized by the section hereby amended, and this amendment shall not affect any provision thereof. The maximum number of active or retired noncommissioned officers to be detailed under the provisions of this act is not to exceed 300.

SEC. 3. That no detail shall be made under this act to any city or town unless it shall pay the cost of commutation of quarters of the active or retired officers or noncommissioned officers detailed thereto and the extra-duty pay to which the latter may be entitled by law to receive for the performance of special duty.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, upon the approval of the governors of the respective States, such number of the same as may be required for military instruction and practice by the normal school of any State or public schools of any city which shall adopt military instruction as a part of its public school system, and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case, for double the value of the property, for the care and safe-keeping thereof and for the return of the same when required.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

That the title and preamble be amended so as to read as follows:

"A bill to amend section 1225 of Revised Statutes so as to provide for detail of retired officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in schools.

"Whereas the national defense must depend upon the volunteer service of the people of the several States; and

"Whereas those schools which shall adopt a system of military instruction are entitled to the assistance of the Government in order to secure to the United States such a knowledge of military affairs among the youth of the country as will render them efficient as volunteers if called upon for the national defense: Therefore."

On page 2, line 3, strike out the word "this" and insert in lieu thereof the word "said." On the same line strike out the words "active or."

Strike out all after the word "purpose," line 2, page 6, down to and including the word "bill" in line 7, page 2.

Strike out the word "normal," line 8, page 2, and strike out all after the word "school" in line 8, page 2, down to and including the word "cities" in line 9, page 2.

Strike out all of section 2 of said bill, and change the number of section 3 to section 2.

In line 10, page 3, strike out the words "city or town" and insert in lieu thereof the word "school."

In line 11, page 3, strike out the words "active or."

After the word "duty," line 14, page 3, at the end of section 2, as renumbered, add the following:

"Provided, That no detail shall be made under the provision of this act unless the officers or noncommissioned officers to be detailed are willing to accept such position."

Strike out in line 15, page 3, the figure "4" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "3."

In line 21, page 3, strike out the words "the normal" and insert in lieu thereof the word "such." In the same line and page, strike out all after the word "school" down to and including the word "system," page 3, line 23.

Page 4, line 3, strike out the figure "5" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4."

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if this bill is on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order—first I want to know if this bill is on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order of the gentleman?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to know if this bill is on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (continuing). And if the gentleman has been authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to call it up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman so stated.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (continuing). At a regular session of the committee was he instructed to call it up?

The SPEAKER. When the bill was called up the gentleman made that statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not hear the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MARSH. I stated that I was instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill for consideration and passage.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have been unable to get a copy of the bill, and I do not know whether it has any appropriation in it or not.

Mr. MARSH. I would be glad to give the gentleman a copy of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is there any appropriation in the bill?

Mr. MARSH. There is no appropriation in this bill whatever.

Mr. Speaker, under existing law officers of the Army and Navy may be detailed to educational institutions of the country, not exceeding a hundred in number, This bill authorizes the Secretary of War, in his discretion, when requested by the educational institutions, to detail to the schools of the country officers upon the retired list and noncommissioned officers as instructors in military matters. In other words, it proposes to do for the public and common schools of the country what the Government is now doing for the great colleges of the country. There is no expense whatever to the United States Government involved in it.

The bill is carefully and thoroughly guarded in that respect. The soldier or officer can not be detailed excepting by his own consent; he can not be detailed excepting upon the application of the proper school authorities making the application, it being left finally in the discretion of the Secretary of War whether the public service will admit of the detail as asked for. If gentlemen will read the bill and the numerous amendments therein it will be seen the bill is very carefully guarded in all respects and simply provides for the detail of retired Army officers, with their consent, and of the noncommissioned officers of the Army, with their consent, to teach military tactics in the schools of the country, not confined to public schools, but including public schools, including academies, and including everything that comes under the head of schools. It is an amendment of the existing law, which provides what I have just called the attention of the House to. It also provides for the issue of ordnance and ordnance stores, and I will read the section.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion, and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, upon the approval of the governors of the respective States, such number of the same as may be required for military instruction and practice by such school, and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case for double the value of the property for the care and safe keeping thereof and for the return of the same when required.

Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is a preeminently proper one, and I ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments unless some gentleman has something to say.

Mr. ADAMS rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the previous question.

Mr. ADAMS. I would like to ask, pending that motion, if this bill makes any increase in the number of commissioned officers who can be detailed for this purpose?

Mr. MARSH. It makes no increase whatever. No commissioned officer can be detailed, except one on the retired list and with his consent. The noncommissioned officers that this bill provides for can not be detailed except by their consent; and it further provides that where the officer upon the retired list is detailed the school authorities shall provide the extra pay that the officer would be entitled to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. MARSH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that unless the House should otherwise determine as to the procedure to-morrow I shall call up this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The Clerk, proceeding with the call of committees, called the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill 10374, to amend the laws relating to the second class of mail matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, by authority of that committee, calls up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of March 3, 1879, prescribing the conditions under which periodical publications shall be admitted to the second class of mail matter, shall not hereafter be so construed as to admit to the second-class rates publications purporting to be issued periodically and to subscribers, but which are merely books or reprints of books, whether they be issued complete or in parts, whether they be bound or unbound, whether they be sold by subscription or otherwise, or whether they purport to be premiums or supplements or parts of regular newspapers or periodicals.

SEC. 2. That news agents shall not be allowed to return to news agents or publishers at the pound rate unsold periodical publications, but shall pay postage on the same at the rate of one cent for four ounces.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this bill, I submit, ought not to be on the House Calendar. It affects the revenue. It certainly relates to the postage rates. I do not see how it can be placed on the House Calendar.

Mr. LOUD. It (or a bill similar to this) has been on the House Calendar a number of years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This bill certainly affects the revenue, and under the rules ought not to be on the House Calendar.

Mr. LOUD. It does not involve an expenditure of public money.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It does involve an expenditure, because it affects the rates of postage. As I understand the rule, a bill, to be placed upon the House Calendar, must be a bill that does not affect the revenues in any way. I did not catch the full reading of the bill, and therefore do not know the merits of the bill, but we ought to adhere to the rule.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that when the original bill was on the House Calendar there was no objection raised against it. I think that was in 1896.

Mr. WHEELER. 1896? That is cut off by the statute of limitations. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have already stated that it might be a meritorious bill or I might have voted for an improper bill, but I do not think that affects the question of the point of order raised.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from California on the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. I will state to the House, Mr. Speaker, that my understanding of this bill is that it is properly on the House Calendar. The question came up some years ago. When the bill was first reported, or a bill similar in character, it was placed on the Union Calendar, but subsequently was placed on the House Calendar, as it involves no expenditure of public money. House bill No. 6071 was on the House Calendar, and was considered by the House at its last session. It was recommitted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. Whether the question as to its being properly on the House Calendar was then raised or not I do not know. The bill, however, was recommitted to the committee, and this bill has been reported by the committee in place of House bill

No. 6071. We have, in fact, Mr. Speaker, a long line of precedents showing that this bill was properly placed on the House Calendar. That is all I have to offer. It has been on the House Calendar, permit me to say, for four years. I also call attention again to the fact that it is reported by the House committee in place of the bill which was recommitted to that committee.

Mr. MOON. I ask the gentleman from California whether this is not an entirely new bill?

Mr. LOUD. Well, no; it is not a new bill. It is a portion of House bill No. 6071.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman introduced a new bill on this subject; and this, as I understand, is the bill which he introduced.

Mr. LOUD. I think so; yet it is a portion of House bill No. 6071. There is nothing in this bill that was not in that bill—not a single letter or word.

Mr. MOON. But there is more in this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Nothing more; there is not a word in this bill that was not in the other.

Mr. MOON. Nothing more and nothing less?

Mr. LOUD. There is something less, but nothing more.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word to the gentleman from California. Although this bill may have been on the House Calendar, it may have been there improperly. Now, if the point of order has been made and has been adjudicated by the present occupant of the chair, that is one question; but that is not the case as I understand it. The rule requires that the bill must not only be on the House Calendar, but must properly be there. That is the object of this inquiry—Is this bill properly on the House Calendar; and if so, how did it get there? We are now asked to consider this bill, but unless the gentleman has been authorized by his committee to call it up in this hour, it can not be considered as I understand the rule. I make that point of order also. I desire to sustain the integrity of the rule, because I believe that living up to rules in every case is our only safety.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman quote the language of the rule on which he relies?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It will be found in clause 4 of Rule XXIV.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make the point that the committee has not authorized the consideration of this bill under this call?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from California has not so stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to so state in answer to a question of the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not so understand.

Mr. LOUD. The Chair asked me that question when the bill was first presented; and permit me to say that we do not attempt to smuggle anything through the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not intimate any such thing. The gentleman must have misunderstood me. I did not understand the gentleman to have answered that question. If I had I should not have made the point.

Mr. LOUD. I wish to call attention to the language of Rule XIII, which I suppose the Chair has looked at. I call attention to the second clause, which refers to bills on the House Calendar:

> A House Calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

Now, this bill is clearly within clause 2 of that rule. It does not directly or indirectly appropriate any money, neither does it propose to raise revenue.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It deals with postage rates, and it certainly affects the revenue. The present occupant of the chair, at the first session of this Congress—I refer to the RECORD, page 2455—held that the bill must be properly on the Calendar—not simply there, but properly there—before it could be considered in this hour.

Taking the statement of the gentleman from California, which I always take as true, that he is authorized to call this bill up, I insist that the bill ought not to be here, because it is not properly on this Calendar. If it deals with revenue in any way, it can not be considered in this hour. And the rule is founded in wisdom. It ought not to be departed from.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman regard this as a bill raising revenue?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, it does not raise revenue, but it affects the revenue; it expends the revenue. Take, for instance, a bill reducing the revenue; it can not be said that it raises revenue, but it affects the revenue; so with an appropriation of any kind. This bill regulates the rates of postage, and postage is public money.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that the bills which may not be on the House Calendar are bills raising revenue—in other words, revenue bills—in other words, bills reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that such bills may go on the House Calendar?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I say such bills go to the Union Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. But this not being a bill of that kind—not raising revenue, not coming from the Committee on Ways and Means—goes properly to the House Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But does not this bill propose to expend the public revenue?

Mr. HEPBURN. Not a dollar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does it not provide how the public revenue shall be expended in the matter of postage?

Mr. HEPBURN. Not a dollar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, certainly it does; it fixes the rates of postage to be paid on periodicals, and in some cases, one at least, raises the rate.

Mr. HEPBURN. It fixes certain rates of postage; but that does not make it a revenue bill; that does not make it a bill which should come from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A bill affecting the revenue does not have to come, necessarily, from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HEPBURN. I undertake to say that the proper test would be this: If this were a revenue bill, it would necessarily go to the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Post-Office Committee would not have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; if it were a bill affecting postage rates, it would not have to go to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. But this is not a revenue bill; it does not propose to raise revenue in the sense in which that term is used in the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The object of the rule, as I understand, is that whenever you expend the people's money or whenever you dispose of public property, the matter must be considered in Committee of the Whole, and such a bill must not go upon the House Calendar. This bill provides a charge upon the people and should go to Committee of the Whole.

The House Calendar is provided, under the rule, for such bills as make no charge upon the people—bills that carry no appropriation or that provide for no expenditure of the public money—bills that do not dispose of any of the public property. I think that we ought to adhere to the rule, and that is the only object I have in view.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from California to give his attention to page 2 of the bill, which prescribes that the postage shall be hereafter 1 cent for each 4 ounces of weight. Is that an increase or a decrease?

Mr. LOUD. It is an increase, Mr. Speaker, on the present rate. That is, I should say there is a decision of the Department which fixes that rate. But I defy any man to find any statute on the statute books of the United States that provides for the return of unsold copies of the printed matter referred to in that paragraph; and I repeat that the law, as it now stands, is simply a decision of the Department, or a regulation if you please, or a custom, which has grown up in the Department, and without any warrant whatever of law. And I challenge anyone to show any warrant of law for the return through the mails of any such unsold copies of periodicals as are covered by this provision.

Section 2 of the bill fixes the rate at 4 cents per pound, postage on such periodicals.

Mr. MOON. I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question. I understand that this is the Loud bill, which was before the House and the committee at the last session of Congress?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman, of course, being a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, understands what the bill is, and is thoroughly familiar with it. It is a similar bill, from which certain provisions have been eliminated.

Mr. MOON. I understand that, Mr. Speaker. I, as a member of the committee, know the facts to be as the gentleman has stated them to the House; but I wanted the question fairly brought out before the House, and to have it understood whether this bill was or was not identical with the bill which was defeated on the occasion to which I have referred.

Mr. LOUD. I will state to my colleague on the committee that the bill (10374) now proposed to be called up simply includes—or excludes, I should say—books, serial novels, and such publications from the mails under the provision prescribed in the bill, and prohibits the return of any unsold copies of such publications, as is the custom now, at 1 cent a pound.

Mr. MOON. And that embraces the amendment which was sought to be placed on the original bill?

Mr. LOUD. This is, in substance, the language of House bill No. 6071, so far as that bill went. But there is eliminated from the bill all reference to newspapers; and the bill is confined directly to periodicals such as books and magazines.

Mr. MOON. Because, if the gentleman will permit me, that was largely the subject of contention with reference to the other bill; and as a member of the committee I desired to get the facts before the House.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is entirely correct in that. This refers, not to newspapers, but to books and periodicals, such as magazines and novels.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question of order which has been presented.

Rule XIII, referred to by the gentleman from California, prescribes the class of legislation that can go upon the House Calendar, as well as the other Calendars of the House, and the second paragraph of that rule is in the following language:

Second. A House Calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue, nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

That, of course, indicates the class of bills that may properly be placed upon the House Calendar.

Rule XXIII prescribes the class of business before the House which must be sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration, and is in the following language:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Now, it seems to the Chair that the vital question presented in this discussion is as to whether or not this is a matter affecting the revenues of the Government.

It is admitted by the gentleman in charge of the bill—and the Chair is not familiar with the rate of taxation under such conditions—that this increases the rate of postage, and to that extent increases the burdens on the people of the country. It may probably raise more revenue. As to that the Chair is unable to say; but it clearly affects the revenue. That is admitted. There can be no question as to that fact. Now, if the contention be made that increasing the rate of postage does not affect the revenue, it may be answered that the House has already taken a decided stand on that question.

In 1859, when the Post-Office appropriation bill went from the House to the Senate, that body added to the bill a proposition increasing the rate of postage. The House, under the leadership of Mr. GROW, of Pennsylvania, took the ground that that did affect the revenue, and a stubborn and long-continued fight followed between the two Houses. The House of Representatives allowed the Post-Office appropriation bill to fail before it would yield on that point.

Now, it seems to the Chair to be clear that an increase of the rate of postage does affect taxation, does affect the revenue; and the Chair is clearly of the opinion that it is a matter that should first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask how much time has expired since the beginning of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Three-quarters of an hour. Has the gentleman anything further from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. LOUD. I have not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

BUSINESS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, there are two or three matters of minor importance upon this Calendar from the Committee on the Public Lands, but the Clerk has been unable to furnish the Calendar showing the present condition of the bills before the House, and I have been unable, for that reason, since the call of committees has commenced, to get those bills ready. I ask that the committee be passed without prejudice, so that when the bills are ready they may be called up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] asks unanimous consent that the Public Lands Committee be passed on this call without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BONDS OF PIMA COUNTY, ARIZONA TERRITORY.

The Committee on the Territories was called.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8068, which is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is essential, in calling up bills in the morning hour, for the gentleman calling them up to state whether it is by authority of the committee that he does so.

Mr. KNOX. It is by authority of the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Territories, and by authority of that committee, calls up a bill, which the Clerk will now report.

The bill (H. R. 8068) authorizing the board of supervisors of Pima County, Arizona Territory, to issue fifty-year 5 per cent bonds of Pima County, Arizona Territory, to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county, was read, as follows:

Whereas under and by virtue of the authority of Title XXXI, chapter 2, county indebtedness, paragraphs 2053, et seq., of the revised statutes of Arizona Territory, approved March 2, 1887, the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., issued $250,000 of negotiable coupon bonds of said county, all dated June 30, 1887, being 250 bonds, each for the sum of $1,000, and falling due after their date as follows, to wit: One to 25 (both inclusive), ten years after date; 26 to 50 (both inclusive), eleven years after date; 51 to 75 (both inclusive), twelve years after date; 76 to 100 (both inclusive), thirteen years after date; 101 to 125 (both inclusive), fourteen years after date; 126 to 150 (both inclusive), fifteen years after date; 151 to 175 (both inclusive), sixteen years after date; 176 to 200 (both inclusive), seventeen years after date; 201 to 225 (both inclusive), eighteen years after date; 226 to 250 (both inclusive), nineteen years after date; and

Whereas under and by virtue of the provision of title 31, chapter 1, Territorial indebtedness, revised statutes of Arizona, approved March 10, 1887, and of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1890, approving, with amendments, the said funding act of Arizona Territory, and of act No. 79 of the Territory of Arizona, approved March 18, 1891, and of the act of Congress approved June 6, 1896, part of the said bonds, to wit; Nos. 1 to 103 (both inclusive), were funded; and

Whereas it will be of great advantage to Pima County to refund the remainder of said bonds, to wit, Nos. 104 to 250 (both inclusive); and

Whereas paragraph 2059 of the said title 31 of chapter 1, revised statutes of Arizona, approved March 10, 1887, has been repealed, and said bonds can not be refunded under any of the provisions of said chapter 1, or of the act of Congress of June 25, 1890, or of the act of Congress of June 6, 1896, or of the act No. 79 of the Territory of Arizona, approved March 18, 1891: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the board of supervisors of Pima County, Arizona Territory, be, and they are hereby, authorized to prepare, execute, sell, and deliver, from time to time, bonds of the said Pima County, in accordance with the provisions of title 31, chapter 2, county indebtedness, of the revised statutes of Arizona, approved March 2, 1887, bearing interest not exceeding 5 per cent per annum, both principal and interest payable only in gold coin of the United States of America of present standard, the proceeds to be used only for the redemption of the aforesaid 147 bonds of Pima County, Arizona Territory. The total amount of the bonds hereby authorized to be issued shall not exceed $147,000, and no bonds shall be issued under the provisions of this act except when it is necessary so to do in order to refund the aforesaid indebtedness of Pima County, and then only in amounts sufficient to refund such indebtedness as it falls due as hereinbefore set out. None of said bonds shall be sold or exchanged for less than their par value and any interest that may be due thereon, and this act shall be printed on the back of all bonds issued under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as I may be entitled to on this bill to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, as will appear from the preamble of the bill, a little more than thirteen years ago $300,000 of the outstanding indebtedness of Pima County was refunded. One hundred and fifty-three thousand dollars of that has been settled. There is still $147,000 of it yet unsettled, falling due $25,000 annually.

The bonds bear interest at 7 per cent per annum. The holders of those old bonds propose to exchange them for new ones, fifty-year 5 per cent bonds. The county is without authority to refund the bonds without the consent of Congress. In order that she may save about $3,000 a year in interest, and save herself from being cramped for payment of the principal at the present time, this bill has been introduced. The effect of it is to give the county fifty years' time in which to raise a sinking fund for the payment of the principal and to save $3,000 annually in interest, as a new settlement or a new contract with the holders of the old bonds, who agree to take the new ones. For that reason, of course, we can see no reason why the bill should not be passed, and I ask that it do pass.

Mr. GAINES. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. In what are these old bonds payable?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. They are payable in cash, to be paid by a tax levied by the county.

Mr. GAINES. Payable in coin—gold and silver or gold or silver, and if either, which?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. The old bonds are gold bonds, and the new ones necessarily must be.

Mr. GAINES. You are certain they are gold bonds?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I am certain of that.

Mr. GAINES. They are payable on their face in gold?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. That is specified on their face; yes.

Mr. GAINES. When were these bonds issued?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. In 1887.

Mr. GAINES. I want to record my opposition to making our obligations payable in only one of our coin monies or in any specific kind of our several moneys. We say, and by law, our moneys are all equal. Such legislation is a confession, and that, too, by law, that they are not equal or equally good, thereby discrediting the money contracted against, and crediting, and unnecessarily so if they are all equal, to the one contracted for, in this case gold. This also produces a disparity of the two coins, when our very laws say and the policy of this Government has been to keep the two coins—indeed, our moneys—on a parity. This kind of legislation and these kind of contracts break down the very thing we declare by law is our fixed policy—the keeping at least our coin, gold and silver, on a parity. This particular bill, it seems, is excused, from the fact that it carries out the original undertaking to pay these bonds in gold, protecting to that extent what the creditor would claim his right to be. The policy of such legislation is wrong and should never have been started.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CRUMP (on the request of Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH), indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BREWER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 1 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

SIOUX INDIAN OUTBREAK AND MASSACRE OF 1862.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs the history, by Samuel J. Brown, of the Minnesota outbreak and massacre of 1862. It is not long, and I think it is a very important document. It is a portion of the history that has never been written before. It ought to go into the archives of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota to print as a document the paper he sends to the desk? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered. It will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4936) to provide for the construction of a bridge by the Fargo, Duluth and Northwestern Railroad Company across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak., reported it without amendment.

CLINCH RIVER BRIDGE AT KINGSTON, TENN.

Mr. VEST. I move that the bill (H. R. 11548) to authorize the Kingston Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Clinch River at Kingston, Tenn., which came from the House of Representatives yesterday, be substituted on the Calendar for the bill (S. 4852 to authorize the Kingston Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Clinch River at Kingston, Tenn., being Order of Business 1471 on the Calendar, which I reported at the last session and which is identical with the House bill, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

CAPT. B. H. MACALLA AND COMMANDER WILLIAM C. WISE.

Mr. BACON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a bill granting permission to Capt. B. H. MacCalla, United States Navy, and Commander William C. Wise, also of the United States Navy, to accept decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany. Accompanying the bill are letters from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Navy indorsing the propriety of receiving these decorations. I am instructed by the committee to ask for the immediate consideration by the Senate of the bill.

The bill (S. 5024) granting permission to Capt. B. H. MacCalla, United States Navy, and Commander William C. Wise, United States Navy, to accept decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is instructed by the committee to ask for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read in full to the Senate for its information.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Capt. B. H. MacCalla, United States Navy, and Commander William C. Wise, United States Navy, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept, respectively, the decoration (including a diploma and insignia) of the Order of the Second Class of the Red Eagle with Swords, and the decoration (including a diploma and insignia) of the Order of the Second Class of the Royal Crown with Swords, tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany through the Department of State of the United States; and the Department of State is hereby authorized to deliver to them the decorations herein named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment fixing the salary of the private secretary to the Public Printer at $2,400 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

Mr. LODGE. If the routine business is concluded, I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make that motion now?

Mr. HOAR. I hope before my colleague makes the motion he will yield, that I may ask that the resolution called up yesterday by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], in regard to the credentials of claimants to the vacant seat from that State, may stand over until to-morrow with the same privilege that it would have to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CUBAN POSTAL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day. Did the junior Senator from Massachusetts make a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or did he only give notice of a motion?

Mr. LODGE. I intended to make the motion now. I do not know what is desired in regard to the resolution which the Chair lays before the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I shall move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Relations with Cuba. I presume that will be satisfactory, perhaps, to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I presume so, Mr. President. Of course I take it for granted that the Committee on Relations with Cuba will report or act promptly upon the resolution.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think within this week the committee will be able to furnish from the committee all the information that the Senator desires.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then, very well. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate all the information in his possession in relation to frauds in the postal service of Cuba.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4742) to amend section 1225 of Revised Statutes so as to provide for detail of retired officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in schools;

A bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8068) authorizing the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., to issue fifty-year 5 per cent bonds of Pima County, Ariz., to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county; and

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, a bill has just come over from the House of Representatives providing for the exercises of the centennial celebration here on the 12th of this month. It is important. It simply provides for the order of exercises and the use of the Hall of the House of Representatives for the celebration. I should like very much to have it put upon its passage now. There is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 12283) in relation to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read the second time in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate. Before the reading begins, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside pending the consideration of the bill from the House, which will be read the second time at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives have each appointed a committee to act with other committees appointed respectively by the President of the United States and by the citizens of the District of Columbia (in a mass meeting assembled), which committees have in charge the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas said committees have in joint session adopted a plan of celebration which has been submitted to the President of the United States and by him transmitted to Congress, such plan proposing as a feature of the celebration the holding by the Senate and House of Representatives, jointly, commemorative exercises in the Hall of the House of Representatives in the afternoon of the 12th day of December, 1900, in honor of the centennial anniversary of the first session of Congress held in the permanent capital: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the 12th day of December, 1900, at the hour of half past 3 o'clock p. m., and that addresses on subjects bearing on the celebration shall be made by Senators and Representatives to be chosen by the joint committee mentioned in the preamble; that the President and ex-Presidents of the United States, the heads of the several Executive Departments, the justices of the Supreme Court, representatives of foreign governments accredited to this Government, the governors of the several States and Territories, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Lieutenant-General of the Army and the Admiral of the Navy, officers of the Army and Navy who have received the thanks of Congress, and all persons who have the privilege of the floor either of the Senate or the House be, and are hereby, invited to be present on the occasion, and that the members of the committee from the country at large, the members of the said citizens' committee, and the chairmen and vice-chairmen of the committees of the national capital centennial are hereby granted the privilege of the floor of the House during the exercises; that the said citizens' committees shall issue cards of admission to such portions of the public galleries of the Hall of the House as may be set apart by the Doorkeeper of the House for that purpose; that the Speaker of the House shall call the assembly to order and the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as presiding officer during the exercises; that the 12th day of December, 1900, be a legal holiday within the District of Columbia; that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized to deliver to the Architect of the Capitol, for the purpose of decorating the Capitol, its approaches, and the reviewing stands in the Capitol grounds for the occasion, such United States ensigns and flags, except battle flags, and such signal numbers and others flags as may be spared, the same to be delivered to the Architect immediately, and returned by him not later than the 31st day of December, 1900; that admission of the general public to the southern portion of the Capitol, including the Rotunda, on the said 12th day of December, 1900, shall be by card only, under the direction of the Doorkeeper of the House; that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed, for the occasion, to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure the preservation of public order and protection of life and property, and to grant authority or permits for the use of such thoroughfares and sidewalks in the city of Washington as may be necessary for parades, and that the citizens' committee are authorized to erect for the occasion a reviewing stand at the east side of or on the east steps of the Capitol.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask whether the bill makes the 12th day of December a national holiday?

Mr. HALE. It makes it a legal holiday for the District of Columbia. The committee——

Mr. COCKRELL. For all time to come, or just simply for this year?

Mr. HALE. Only for this year. The committee that had it in charge at the other end of the Capitol——

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator is sure that it is only for this year?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is for all time to come, I am unalterably opposed to it.

Mr. HALE. Let that part of the bill be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that part be read again.

Mr. HALE. I know what the intention is. The provision in reference to the holiday is in the latter part of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not catch it. There were others talking equally as loud while it was being read.

Mr. HALE. Of course, it ought to apply only to the present 12th of December.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is on the third page of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the 12th day of December, 1900, be a legal holiday within the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. That is very clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the Senator from Maine, the committee, and all those interested in this matter agree that the 12th of December is not to be a permanent holiday, but only in the year 1900.

Mr. HALE. It is so stated definitively in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know it may be claimed——

Mr. HALE. It is the 12th of this December. There is no doubt about it at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to have it clearly understood, because there are a little too many holidays already.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 4742) to amend section 1225 of Revised Statutes so as to provide for detail of retired officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in schools; and

A bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes.

The bill (H. R. 8068) authorizing the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., to issue fifty-year 5 per cent bonds of Pima County, Ariz., to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE AND INCREASE OF TRADE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate now to certain limitations upon the expenditures authorized in this bill.

There is a limitation of $9,000,000; no more than that sum can be expended in any one year. So far as the cost to the Government is concerned, it is practically $7,500,000, because these ships are required to carry the mails without charge. I think last year the mail pay was about $1,400,000, and in a year or two years it will amount certainly to the $1,500,000.

This limitation was placed in the bill by the Senate Committee on Commerce. It was in response to one of the misstatements and exaggerations about this measure that it would cost us $50,000,000 a year, and I have seen a declaration that it would cost a hundred million dollars a year. There seems to be no method whatever in the madness of the critics of this bill.

The general committee of which I have spoken approved of that limitation without any hesitation, and they did it on this theory: We have been building in our shipyards the last twenty years possibly one merchant ship for the foreign carrying trade a year. I notice by the report of the Commissioner of Navigation that during the last ten years we have constructed about ten thousand of tonnage a year. Ten thousand tons would be the carrying capacity of about one low-power freight ship in modern times.

Now, Great Britain in the same time has been building these ships—low-power freight ships—by the wholesale. You would find in a single yard there fifteen or twenty merchant ships of the same tonnage, plans, dimensions, and speed. It is entirely clear that if you build ships by the wholesale you can construct them much more cheaply than you can where you have but one in your yard. For instance, take it in one of our shipyards now, one with which I am somewhat familiar. There are on the stocks a yacht, a side-wheel steamer, a barge, a torpedo boat, a schooner, and a bark. You put the mechanics upon the yacht and they must finish it as completely and as carefully in every appointment as you would one of the finest parlors in an American palace. They get into the habit of that finish. You put them immediately on a tramp ship, which is finished in the rough, practically, and half of their time for weeks is wasted in adapting themselves to the new work.

I was talking with a shipbuilder a few days ago, and he told me that in building two ships instead of one he could afford to make a discount of 10 per cent. He said that the same plans for the ship and the same patterns for all machinery could be used for the two, and that that would be a saving of nearly 10 per cent. Now, these skilled men on the general committee said they had no doubt at all that if this bill became a law and was the success they expected, in five years from now, with our immensely increased shipyards, with the increased competition, and with the building by wholesale instead of by retail, we would construct these ships as cheaply as Great Britain.

This $9,000,000 limit will not be reached before five years from now. When it is, the Secretary of the Treasury is instructed in this measure to reduce pro rata the bounty sailing and the premium speed pay. The result of the limitation will be undoubtedly that in five years, the following years of five—because the bill limits the power of the Treasurer to make contracts to ten years—the five following years there will be annually a reduction in the amount which the Secretary is authorized to pay to these ships. So, no friends of the bill feel that there is any danger whatever in this limitation of $9,000,000.

The American ships which are to receive the advantage of this pay are those to be registered and to engage in the foreign carrying trade. They will be required to file with the Secretary of the Treasury a satisfactory bond that within the next five years they will build in our own yards 25 per cent more of tonnage than they register and engage in foreign trade. They will receive no pay on the extra tonnage until it is completed and ready to carry.

Later on in the bill there is a provision admitting certain foreign-built ships to an American registry. There is a limitation upon the amount of the pay to be made to them of 50 per cent, and the Secretary of the Treasury is instructed to pay to them no part of the subsidy until they have duplicated the tonnage so admitted in our yards. The Secretary of the Treasury is to retain all those foreign-built ships, after they are registered here, would earn each year until they have made that duplication. Of course, when one ship is brought in under the registry and one of the same size, speed, and tonnage is constructed here, then they will receive their 50 per cent pay on the foreign-built ships and the full pay on the one which is constructed here.

Mr. HALE. Will my colleague yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to his colleague?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. Will my colleague tell the Senate what were the considerations moving the committee that led them to put in this provision for the admission of foreign-built ships?

Mr. FRYE. I will do that with pleasure a little later on when I come to that section.

There is another limitation contained in the bill that no ship shall be paid for more than 16 entries—that would be 16 trips—in any one year. I wish just here to call the attention of the Senate now to this fact. Senator Edmunds drafted this bill, and it may be unnecessary for me to say that he protected with steel armor the Government of the United States against all chances for fraud or evasion, as Senators will find when they read the bill in full.

There is an amendment proposed here touching American vessels. It is that those registered prior to January 1, 1900, shall not be paid the subsidy for more than ten years. Those built and registered after January 1, 1900, the Secretary may make contracts with for twenty years. The reason for that is this: Many of these ships have been in business for five, six, eight, and ten years, and the practical life of a ship is twenty. It was not deemed by the Senate Committee on Commerce that it was wise to take a ship, for instance, ten years old, and authorize a contract to be made with it extending over twenty years. The only division that could be made, entirely logical, was to take the ships which were in existence before this bill became a law or before January 1, 1900, and draw the line there.

There is another amendment on page 3, to which I will call the attention of the Senate. It requires these ships to carry as freight, sailing from a port in the United States to a foreign port, 50 per cent of their gross tonnage. The reason, if there is any reason for such an amendment as that, was that it was asserted, broad and large, that these ships would run, under the subsidy provided for, with a couple of barrels of flour and one passenger from a port of the United States to a foreign port and back from a foreign port to the United States—a mere sentimentality, the absurdity of which can be seen in one moment by just one ship which I will take as an example. I have quite a number of them, but I will take only one—a ship of 3,500 tons, a low-powered freight ship, running in ballast across the Atlantic Ocean and back.

The expense charged up against that ship for that voyage would be $18,805. The subsidy paid to the ship would be $3,344. The balance against the ship and the loss on that single voyage would be $15,461. So Senators will see that it would not take many trips of such a ship as that to conclude her ship existence.

The amendment which has been offered by the committee, in my opinion, requires still further amendment, and for this reason: This requires 50 per cent of the gross tonnage in freight. Take a low-powered freight-carrying ship, The Pleiades, about a three or four thousand ton ship, and this requirement here would simply compel her to take an outgoing cargo of 20 per cent of her carrying capacity. Take the ship St. Louis, and the same requirement would compel her to take a cargo to the extent of her entire carrying capacity.

Now, the ships from 16 knots speed up to 21 knots, inclusive, will all undoubtedly be mail ships. The St. Louis, for instance, would, of course, be a mail ship. She would be compelled by the Government to sail at stated times, whether she had any cargo or not; and this requirement of the low-powered ship to take but 20 per cent and of the highest powered ship to take the entire cargo capacity is clearly entirely unjust and indefensible.

I shall submit to the Committee on Commerce to-morrow morning at its meeting an amendment to be substituted for this—an amendment which will provide that all ships shall take 50 per cent of their cargo capacity when leaving a port of the United States for a foreign port. That will increase the amount of cargo which must be taken, but it will so distribute it amongst the various ships that there will be no inequality or injustice; and I hope the Senate Committee on Commerce will adopt the amendment.

There was an amendment to clause E proposed by the Senate Committee on Commerce where the limitation of $9,000,000 was contained. The amendment reads:

Of which $9,000,000 not more than $2,000,000 shall, in respect of any one fiscal year, be paid as compensation to the vessels described in parag raphs 8 and 9 of clause b of this section—

That is, to the two higher powered ships—and of which $9,000,000 not more than 70 per cent shall be expended in any one fiscal year in respect of vessels engaged in the Atlantic Ocean trade, except in case the Pacific Ocean trade shall not require, in respect of the vessels engaged in said last-mentioned trade, the expenditure of the whole amount of 30 per cent of said $9,000,000 in any such year.

That amendment was agreed to by the committee in answer to certain criticisms, which were raised by friends of transportation in the Pacific Ocean, that there was danger that the Atlantic trade, which to-day so much exceeds the Pacific and has so many more ships in it, would consume the entire $9,000,000 and leave nothing for the Pacific. The Senate Committee on Commerce was very desirous, indeed more desirous, of building up the transportation in the Pacific than they were in the Atlantic. They regard it as now of more importance than the trade in the Atlantic, and they very readily agreed to this amendment providing that no greater sum than is mentioned here should be expended in the Atlantic in any one year.

Section 2 is also an amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Commerce, which provides that no ship shall receive any of this pay, either bounty, sailing, or speed premium, unless it is rated A1; in other words, unless it shall be a first-class ship in every respect.

Section 4 contains a provision by which, if a ship is lost, another of like tonnage and speed may be substituted in her place.

Section 5 provides that at least one-fourth of the crews of all these aided ships shall be American citizens; and we have a law, to which reference is made here in this bill, which requires that all the officers of American ships shall be American citizens.

Section 6 provides for the usual naval tests as to the speeed of these vessels.

Sections 7 and 8 provide bounties for fishing vessels and for fishermen. I do not think it is necessary for me to argue to the Senate that this is a valuable provision. In all of the wars this country has ever been engaged in on the ocean I think that the fishery fleet have furnished more and better sailors than have been found anywhere else. I remember that General Knox applauded the Marblehead fishermen in a speech he made for the wonderful ability, courage, and fidelity they displayed in the war of the Revolution.

The bill simply gives a bounty of $2 a gross ton on the vessel which is engaged for three years.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does that come out of the $9,000,000?

Mr. FRYE. No; I do not think so. It pays, also, to each American sailor on a fishing vessel for three months' service $1 a month during the time necessarily employed in the voyage of such vessel. That will take about one hundred and seventy or one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars a year. I am sorry to say to the Senate that our fishing fleet is gradually being reduced year by year.

Mr. HALE. What does the Senator understand the scope of the phrase "deep-sea fisheries" to be?

Mr. FRYE. I understand it to refer to fishermen on the Banks. It is used to distinguish it from inshore.

Mr. HALE. To those on the Banks, and not to the mackerel fishermen?

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. HALE. Although that may be deep water. But this refers to the Newfoundland Banks?

Mr. FRYE. I am inclined to think if the mackerel fishing was pursued on the deep sea it would receive the bounty.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what other nations are doing in this regard. Canada's judicious use of the Halifax award of $5,500,000, paid by the United States in 1878, is shown by the latest report of the Dominion department of marine and fisheries. That report shows that from 1882 to 1897, inclusive, Canada has paid $2,521,909 in fishing bounties. The value of the catch in 1897, the last year reported, was $22,783,546, the largest recorded in the report. The bounty paid was $157,504, fishing vessels receiving $1 per ton, and fishermen $6, or about $1 a month of actual service.

Of Germany's efforts, the British commercial attaché at Berlin has reported this year:

The large falling off in the sailing tonnage of the German mercantile marine is considered to be unsatisfactory from the point of view of training crews for sea service, and it is partly on account of this consideration that the Government now does a great deal to develop the fishing fleets of the Baltic and North seas.

The French consul at Dusseldorf reports that in about ten years Germany has spent upward of $3,000,000 in opening up fishing harbors, and that at the Geestemunde Harbor the sales increased from 5,864 hundredweight in 1888 to 274,950 hundredweight in 1895. France in 1897 spent 620,935 francs directly in encouraging fishing vessels, besides more liberal bounties on the exported catch, and Japan last year voted $75,000 per annum to develop deep-sea fisheries, an incident to maritime strength.

This bill proposes to expend about $170,000 annually on American fisheries by precisely the same method Great Britain has employed for years in supporting Canadian fisheries. It must be remembered that our fishing vessels are compelled to pay a fishing license to purchase bait in Canadian waters.

I have forgotten exactly what that license for our fishing vessels is. Does my colleague remember it?

Mr. HALE. No; I do not now remember just what it is.

Mr. FRYE. My impression is that it is quite large, but I have forgotten the amount.

Section 9 is a section of exclusion. It excludes all vessels not in trade. Of course, that means yachts. It excludes vessels which under our statute have been wrecked on our shores and have been admitted, after an expenditure of three-quarters of their value has been laid out upon them here, to an American register. It excludes a vessel employed in the coasting trade, as a matter of course, because coasting vessels are protected absolutely now against any intervention from foreign ships. It also excludes—

A vessel on a voyage during any part of which she shall have carried passengers or cargo which under the laws of the United States could not lawfully have been carried by a foreign vessel, or a vessel employed in the fisheries.

That peculiar language there is used because we found some few years ago that foreign ships were evading the coastwise law by carrying material or freight from one port of the United States to a foreign port and bringing it back to a home port again. Congress passed a law prohibiting that, and that is a reference to that law.

"D" excludes vessels between ports on the Atlantic coast and ports on the Pacific coast. They are coastwise, and coastwise whether they land the cargo at Panama and transport it across the Isthmus by rail and then reload and take it to San Francisco or elsewhere on the Pacific coast. Also—

(e) a vessel owned by a citizen of the United States which shall not be entitled under the provisions of section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The statute referred to is that which requires certain officers to be American citizens—all watch officers, etc.

"F" excludes all vessels sailing not more than 150 miles. That applies to all the vessels upon Puget Sound from Tacoma up to Vancouver or Victoria. They are not much more than ferries. Also to vessels, for instance, in Maine from Eastport to St. John.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What about vessels plying between Habana and Key West?

Mr. FRYE. It excludes those.

(g) A vessel on a voyage less than one-half of the whole length of which, on her outward and homeward voyages, respectively, shall have been on the sea, between a port of the United States and a foreign port.

That excludes vessels from the Great Lakes through the Welland Canal to Montreal.

Now I come to section 10, which admits foreign-built ships to American registry. There are three classes. The first is, ships engaged in an established freight business before January 1, 1900, that business being from ports of the United States to foreign ports, a majority of the ownership being in American citizens; second, also ships actually under construction by American citizens in foreign shipyards January 1, 1900; third, ships actually contracted for by American citizens in foreign yards before January 1, 1900; and it provides that all these ships must be rated A1, as first-class ships.

The reasons for that may be possibly partly sentimental. It has been utterly impossible for an American citizen, under existing conditions, to invest his money in American ships to engage in the foreign carrying trade. I think I must have satisfied Senators yesterday in that very long speech, which I wish to apologize for, that it was utterly absurd for an American to think for a moment of putting any money, under present conditions, into a ship which was to sail from our ports to foreign ports. The only way we have lived at all in this trade is that we have a few sailing ships engaged in it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FRYE. In a moment. These ships have taken cargoes of coal from the Atlantic side around the Cape and up to San Francisco, and then have registered and gone on voyages to foreign ports, being part coastwise and part foreign. Now I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Perhaps the Senator was going to allude to it, but I wish to inquire why was the date January 1, 1900, fixed?

Mr. FRYE. We were obliged to fix a date in order to be at all certain of how many ships this would include. If the bill was an invitation—and I am afraid it will not prove to be much of an invitation—if it was an invitation or a temptation to place these ships under the American flag with an American registry, then there might be a great many contracts made, of which we have but little knowledge, and we could make no real, genuine calculation as to what the requirements of the bill would be.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But suppose a contract had been made in good faith by American citizens for the building of an American ship in a foreign yard, and concluded on the 1st of April last. Why would not that ship be just as much entitled to these advantages as if the contract had been made before the 1st of January, 1900?

Mr. FRYE. Suppose it was three months later, or four months. You might have made it the 1st of April, to be sure, but here was the bill pending. Everybody in the country knew what the bill was and what its terms were, and we desired to have a fixed limit, as nearly as it could be fixed, of the ships built in foreign ports which would be admitted to an American registry.

I was saying that perhaps part of this is sentiment. These men have been compelled if they wished to engage in shipping—and many men think that they can do nothing except on the sea—to go abroad to buy their ships, and, on account of operating expenses, to run them under foreign flags. We thought it would do no harm to admit such ships as those of the highest class to an American register.

Then again we were desirous of obtaining within the next five years as many ships under the American flag engaged in the foreign trade as it was possible to do. The requirement upon these shipowners is that they shall build here an equal amount of the same kind of tonnage for every ship which is registered here. They shall have ten years in which to do it. The best calculation that we could make was that about 350,000 tons would be so registered. If there were, that would require in ten years the expenditure of about $50,000,000 in our American shipyards by American citizens. It would more than double the present capacity of our shipyards; it would employ many thousands more men, and it would create an enormous industry of infinite value in all the future to our country, both in times of peace and in times of war.

The objection has been made to that since, or it has been asserted since, by men of intelligence that 500,000 gross tons of ships will come in under that provision. That would be a carrying capacity of about 700,000 tons. I shall submit to the Senate Committee on Commerce to-morrow a substitute for this provision. One can be drafted without difficulty which shall make it absolutely certain just how many ships will come in under this provision.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator please, I should like to ask why the committee reduced the ownership in corporations operating foreign-built ships from 80 per cent to a bare majority. One of the strongest features of the bill is that it encourages American shipbuilding. If you permit foreign ships to come in, there will be no necessity for us to build any more ships.

Mr. FRYE. But they are compelled to build just as many more in our shipyards. As I said a moment ago, under this bill if 300,000 tons come in, they must build within ten years at least $40,000,000 worth of ships in our yards, or else they will not get a dollar of this subsidy, and the registration under the terms of the bill will be revoked. That is provided for.

Mr. PERKINS. Those vessels were built by foreign mechanics.

Mr. FRYE. I will tell the Senator why I was willing. I think a majority is more logical than any particular per cent—80, 90, 70, or any other which might be named. Nearly all of the lines that would come in under the provisions of this bill are owned entirely by American citizens, with the exception of what little is required to be owned abroad in order that they may be able to sail under foreign flags. But I know of one line with a few very fine vessels where it was not certain that 60 per cent or 70 per cent would cover it. I was certain that 50 per cent would. So far as I was concerned, I was entirely willing that that line should come in and build four ships like the ones they have now in use.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator leaves this most interesting feature of the bill I desire to say to him that while I am in entire sympathy with him on the general purposes of the bill, as so completely stated by him yesterday, I am troubled by the feature of introducing into the bill the provision for foreign-built ships. The Senator says that the provision for admitting foreign-built ships is accompanied with another provision that an equal amount of tonnage shall be built by the owners of the ships in our shipyards.

With the provisions that have been so carefully incorporated into the bill to equalize the difference, as he stated yesterday, between the cost of building and the cost of running, does the Senator think that without this provision for foreign-built ships there will not be in the next five years a very large addition to our marine of American-built ships? If he does, then the bill fails of its original purpose, and I want to call his attention to this point. I should like to have him state, because he has made himself master of this question, whether what is set forth in the memorial I have here is true:

We, the undersigned builders and owners of American vessels, respectfully petition that the provision for the admission to American registry of and payment of bounties to foreign-built vessels be stricken from the shipping bill now before Congress, being unqualifiedly opposed to the depletion of the United States Treasury in aid of foreign shipbuilders.

Accompanying that protest is a statement which perhaps the Senator has heard, and I should like to have him tell us whether he believes it is correct. The statement is that already, in view and expectation of the passage of this bill, parties who are urging this provision for foreign-built ships are engaged in building a great many ships in foreign yards which will come in and get the benefit of this bill the moment it passes. I am going to turn these papers over to my colleague, because I want him to have them before the Committee on Commerce to-morrow morning. They represent to me that the bounties that will be paid under the bill for the foreign-built ships which are now being constructed in view of the passage of this bill will amount to more than $3,000,000.

Now, I do not think my colleague, who has most faithfully studied this question and who believes not in free ships, but in American-built ships, would urge upon the Senate the passage of a bill that would result in the great bulk of the subsidy being turned over immediately to foreign-built ships. As I said, I am going to turn these papers over to him unless he already has copies of them, in order that when this matter comes up, as he indicates it will be up in the morning, before the Committee on Commerce it may be thoroughly looked into.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Maine tell the Senate from what paper he has read?

Mr. HALE. I read from an original petition of shipbuilders, this particular one being signed, I should think, by forty or fifty, perhaps sixty, shipbuilders. Then accompanying that is a document giving the figures I have indicated of the amount that will be paid to these foreign-built ships, and in that reference is made to the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1899, in which lists are given of these vessels now being constructed in foreign yards to come in and take this bounty as soon as the bill passes. That is a new feature to me, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. All that would be of interest to the entire Senate as well as the Committee on Commerce, and I hope the Senator from Maine will let it all be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MONEY. Now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Now.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him for information whether or not these foreign-built ships, which he says are being built with a view of getting the advantage of this bounty, are to sail under the American flag by some act admitting them to registry?

Mr. HALE. The provisions of the bill cover that.

Mr. MONEY. They do?

Mr. HALE. They are admitted to the privileges of our flag.

Mr. MONEY. How does that encourage American shipbuilding?

Mr. HALE. The Senator can answer that better than I.

Mr. MONEY. I will ask the Senator to do so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the document referred to by the Senator from Maine will be printed in the RECORD. It contains information which would be valuable to the entire Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I do not regard it as of any particular value.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the Senator proceeds, may I ask the senior Senator from Maine if the document referred to by him will be printed?

Mr. HALE. I have not got this in form. I have the big document here. I do not know what I should want to put in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not refer to the report of the Commissioner. All I ask for is for the printing of the document from which the Senator from Maine quoted.

Mr. FRYE. I think Senators opposed to the bill will be flooded with all such documents before the debate is closed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to have this printed now.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to ask, if the Senator from Maine will state it, what is the amount of the tonnage referred to in the communication he has?

Mr. HALE. It says:

The International Navigation Company, for example, is now completing in English yards 44,000 tons of high-class steamships (the Zeeland, Haverford, Merion, and one not yet named), and these results of the expenditure of millions of American money in foreign yards will be ready to begin drawing American bounties as soon as this bill becomes law.

Mr. FRYE. It is not true at all.

Mr. HALE. That is what I want the Senator to state to the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Under the provisions of the bill they can not draw a cent of bounty until after they have built an equal amount of tonnage in American shipyards.

Mr. HALE. The provision is that the money shall be held in the Treasury until they build the ships.

Mr. FRYE. Until they build the ships; and, so far as I know, there are now two freight ships of 20,000 tons each building in American yards, the largest ships ever built in the world, which will come under the provisions of this bill undoubtedly, and ought to come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HALE. They are being built here.

Mr. FRYE. In American shipyards.

Mr. TELLER. Where?

Mr. FRYE. New London, Conn.

Mr. HALE. They ought to come in.

Mr. FRYE. Of course they ought to come in, and my judgment is that this foreign tonnage referred to here ought to come in to enable us within five years to have a respectable and encouraging fleet of our own to carry our commerce abroad. We have about 800,000 tons, or a little more than that, now. You admit 300,000 tons from abroad. They must build 300,000 tons here. That gives us 600,000 tons of first-class ships, which, added to your 800,000, makes 1,400,000 tons. Add to that 300,000 tons, built in your own country, and you are getting a very respectable carrying fleet for our country under the provisions of this bill.

If you simply call upon the United States to furnish these vessels, under the provisions of the bill they are required to furnish only 25 per cent more of tonnage for each vessel that receives pay under the provisions of the bill, and you would be ten or fifteen or twenty years in getting what would be an encouraging fleet of vessels, which would be an inducement to others to invest their capital in this sort of business. American capital has been slow and will be slow to invest. It has been investing in railroads and all that sort of thing. You can not hire a dollar here on ship security short of 6 per cent a year.

The International Line go to Great Britain, build a ship there, and hire for 3½ per cent interest. They must pay in this country 6 per cent. Why? Because we have been entirely out of the habit of having anything to do with ships on the ocean, and we must induce Americans to take an interest in this kind of investment. My judgment is that the building of $40,000,000 worth of ships in our own shipyards, doubling their capacity, and more, too, will attract the attention of American capital, and that we will go on and make the bill ultimately a profound success. That is what I am after. It will not be a success—that is, you will not get fleet enough to carry all your exports in the next five years or ten years.

I desire a bill which, through its provisions, shall in twenty or thirty years place us on the ocean where we legitimately belong, carrying all our exports to all the foreign ports of the world. I said before the Senator interrupted me that I proposed to bring this matter to the attention of the Committee on Commerce tomorrow morning, not that we should decline to admit any foreign-built ships to American registry, for I do not believe in that, but in order that we may draft a provision by which there will be no guesswork whatever as to the amount of foreign-built ships which shall be registered in our country. I have already stated that the foreign-built ships are to receive only 50 per cent of the bounty.

Now, I wish to say right here that, being in favor of registering these ships, I have great fears that we will not succeed under the terms of the bill in doing it to any great extent. There is the Grace Line between New York and Chili, a valuable line to American commerce, owned entirely by American citizens—Mayor Grace, of New York. His son is engaged in business with him. He was over here two or three days ago, and informed me that they had investigated this subject with great care and that they could not afford under the terms of the bill to register their line of ships in America, and that they should not do it.

Mr. Baker, of the Atlantic Transport Company, told me a few days ago that he could not possibly, under the terms of the bill, register all of the ships in his line, because they get only 50 per cent, and, in his judgment, the whole amount paid here does no more than to equalize foreign and American ships.

Mr. HALE. That is the Atlantic Transport Company?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; the Atlantic Transport Company. The American Line informed me that at least ten of their ships would never be admitted to American registry; that about six, I think, or seven, under the terms of the bill, would be, and that the amount admitted would compel them to build $14,000,000 worth of ships in our yards.

Section 11 requires an inspection of the foreign-built ships.

Section 14 requires all of these ships to—carry on each foreign voyage as a member of the ship's company one American boy, under 21 years of age and suitable for such employment, for each 1,000 tons gross registered tonnage, which boys shall be taught in the duties of seamanship, or engineering, or other maritime knowledge, as the case may be, respectively, and receive such pay for their services as shall be reasonable.

Mr. HALE. What section is that?

Mr. FRYE. Section 14.

Mr. HALE. What page?

Mr. FRYE. Page 20. That, in the course of five years, if the bill was a reasonable success, would result in at least a thousand of our boys being trained and educated on shipboard.

Section 15 provides for the employment of these vessels as auxiliaries of the Navy under the usual terms. There is a proposed amendment at the close of this section.

Mr. TELLER. What print has the Senator? It is different from mine.

Mr. FRYE. This is the last print of Senate bill 727.

Mr. TELLER. The print of February 26?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is at the bottom of the page.

Mr. FRYE. The last clause of that section is a proposed amendment, as follows:

In case of any taking or employment as provided in this section the shipping obligations of the officers and crews existing at the time shall be deemed to have terminated.

Of course, such a provision was entirely unnecessary, but the seamen's attorney, who has been in Washington for the last ten years, in a published statement declared that the bill provided for the impressment of sailors, and that amendment was proposed to take from the bill all such fear.

Section 17 provides that all of these vessels when required shall carry the United States mails without pay, and furnish all the necessary accommodations, carrying messengers, and all that sort of thing.

Section 19 provides for a forfeiture in the event that the contracts upon the part of the ship contractors are not faithfully carried out.

I believe I have now said all I desire to say in relation to the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Maine, I should like, before he passes from his explanation of the bill, to call his attention to a criticism I have heard upon it, and I call the Senator's attention to it in order that he may make answer to it in connection with his remarks. As I understood the Senator to say a while ago, one of the apprehensions he has as to the operation of the bill is that it will not bring into American registry foreign-built ships to the extent that has been expected or contemplated, reciting some facts in that connection.

The criticism I have heard upon the bill would seem to be a proper one to be considered in that connection. It is that there is a limitation and restriction in the provisions of the bill as to the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry, of this character, namely, that none shall be admitted except only those which are foreign built and American owned at the time of the passage of the bill or at a date named in the bill, or such as are actually under construction, coming within that description, at the date named. It is contended by those who criticise the bill on that account that it stands in the way of the development of our merchant marine.

I call the Senator's attention to it because I have seen that repeatedly in the newspapers and because quite recently a gentleman from Boston, Mr. Henry W. Peabody, has been going about over the country making some addresses. He made one at Cincinnati and he made one at Chicago. I heard the one at Cincinnati, and this was the point upon which he particularly dwelt. It may be that the Senator on yesterday, when I had the misfortune to be absent from the Chamber, commented upon this point. If so, it is unnecessary for me to have him do so again; but if he has not paid particular attention to it, I should be glad if he would do so. While it does not trouble me particularly, I know it has troubled some people who are very warm friends of the proposition, stated generally, to restore the merchant marine.

Mr. FRYE. I have been all my public life contending against the doctrine of free ships. I fought most vigorously every proposition for rehabilitating our ships that were practically compelled to go under a foreign flag during the civil war. I never yielded until the dead failure of a subsidy bill, on which I had spent an immense amount of time and as to which, and an accompanying bounty bill, I had great hopes that they would, if they became law, be a great success, and that we would once more occupy the position such a nation as this ought to on the ocean.

When I found that it was a dead failure, caused by amendments without reason or rhyme, the proposition was made to admit the New York and Paris. First the proposition was made to admit the entire fleet, with an agreement that they would build corresponding tonnage in the United States. I finally consented to favor the admission of two of the best of their ships, with the agreement that they would complement them here with two more of like speed, etc. In that way we succeeded in having a line between our country and Europe by which, if we wished to go abroad, we could sail under the American flag, and it removed to some extent my prejudices and induced me in this measure, in my anxiety to have it a success as early as possible, for the reasons I stated just now, to consent to a certain fixed number of ships which should receive an American register.

I would not dare follow Mr. Henry Peabody. I have known him; I have heard all of his arguments; I have had all of his pamphlets; he has been before our committee; I know everything he says, and I do not at all yield my judgment to his in this matter. He is, I believe, a free-ship advocate. I do not myself pretend to have great knowledge of shipping affairs, but for twenty-five years my attention has been very largely absorbed in commercial questions, and especially in those relating to shipping, and I am happy to say that I never yet have reported from the Committee on Commerce a bill to the United States Senate touching ships that has not passed this body.

I regard that as a very great compliment to what little knowledge the Senate may think that I have about shipping matters. I do not believe in Mr. Peabody's proposition. I do not believe it would be safe or wise to adopt it. I believe it is the next thing to free ships. I do not suppose there ever will be, under this bill, another foreign-built ship admitted to American registry——

Mr. TELLER. How is that?

Mr. FRYE. I do not believe there will ever be another foreign-built ship admitted to our registry, if this bill becomes a law, other than those which are provided for in it.

Mr. TELLER. Oh! That is what I did not understand.

Mr. FRYE. I believe that the result, if this becomes a law, will be such a picture to the American people that with the enormous capital we have now in this country, with nothing hardly for it to invest itself in, it will flow toward the ships of the ocean, where it has refused absolutely to go up to the present time.

Mr. TELLER. Why?

Mr. FRYE. Because their attention is drawn now largely away from the railroad investments and——

Mr. TELLER. What I meant to ask the Senator is why capital has refused to flow toward the building and running of ships?

Mr. FRYE. Because there was more money in other things. There was money in coastwise ships and lake ships and capital flowed thitherward freely.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask if it will not be necessary that we shall make some arrangement by which money can be made in building and running ships before money will flow there.

Mr. FRYE. The men who are building and running ships, and who ought to know, believe that under the provisions of the bill capital will go into the business to the full extent that it is needed. They believe that the bill will do what it professes to do—restore the American merchant marine to the ocean. They are willing to take their chances and to come under contracts to build this enormous amount of American tonnage. They know where they can get capital. They are willing to establish lines to South America and across the Pacific to the Orient. They know perfectly well that at any rate for three or four years it is to be one of the fiercest fights—I mean a commercial fight—that has been seen upon the ocean; that Germany and Great Britain and Norway and other countries are not going to surrender to us if they can help it.

You know perfectly well that when we subsidized the Collins Line Great Britain immediately doubled the subsidy to the Cunard Line, and the Collins Line in eight years was driven away from the ocean. That attempt is to be made here. But these men, who ought to know, and who are going to invest their money, are the men who are willing to take the risk of undertaking to restore the merchant marine under the conditions of this bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask, if the Senator will let me interrupt him, whether he does not think when that financial competition begins between the shipowners of Europe and the United States, and they double their subsidy, as he says they did, and as very likely they will, that they may drop their freight rates and their passage rates to such an extent as to make the investment unprofitable; and if these people will not then come here and ask us to double their subsidy too. Will we not be in the position of having induced them to go into it, so that they can appeal to us to give them a remuneration for their capital by giving them an additional subsidy; and are we not likely to get into a good deal of difficulty about this matter?

Mr. FRYE. We are not establishing in this bill, if the Senator please, one line from New York to Liverpool. We are hoping to establish lines to all the commercial ports of the whole world. When Great Britain had the Cunard line running between Liverpool and New York, and it was the only line there, and we put on a line which jeopardized it, she could well afford to double that subsidy. But when we are having lines running to all the commercial ports Great Britain will never dream of doubling the subsidies which she is paying now, and making them ten or fifteen million dollars instead of what she is paying to-day.

Our safety lies in that. It is in the multiplicity of the lines. If we under this bill were going to establish only one line, like the Collins, I should agree entirely with the Senator. They would drive us off the ocean; I have no doubt about it at all. But under the provisions of this bill, if it is successful, as we hope it will be, and as these gentlemen believe it will be, I have not any fear of that at all.

I said yesterday, and I fully believe it, that in less than three years the competition which will result on account of the provisions of this bill, if it becomes a law, will reduce freight rates across the ocean to the world 25 per cent. They can stand a 25 per cent reduction to-day on the Pacific. There is where the profits are made to-day in ship sailing and carrying freight.

Mr. TELLER. How about the Atlantic?

Mr. FRYE. On the Atlantic ships are carrying, or two years ago were carrying, as low as they could profitably; but these rates have increased very largely since the Spanish war.

Mr. HANNA. One hundred per cent.

Mr. FRYE. One hundred per cent, I understand. The withdrawal of so many ships, first by the United States for sea transport and collier service in the Spanish war and then by England of her transports for the Boer war, has made us short of ships. We were exporting coal, but we had to stop. The freights went to that extent of increase we could not afford to do it. That there will be a reduction of freight rates of 25 per cent in two or three years I have not the shadow of a doubt, and I argued yesterday that the producer would get the entire benefit of that reduction, while in a bounty paid to ships he will get absolutely nothing.

Mr. TELLER. The reduction that you prophesy is from present rates to 25 per cent?

Mr. FRYE. No: I prophesy it from the normal rates.

Mr. TELLER. The former rates?

Mr. FRYE. The former rates; the normal rates.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FRYE. I shall be delighted to hear the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to ask a question. He was asked if the English Government would not double the bounty in order to still further compete. The Senator replied that when they had a single line they could afford to do it; that when an American line was put on which jeopardized the interest of the Cunarders, then the British Government doubled its subsidy.

Mr. FRYE. It was the Collins Line.

Mr. MONEY. But the Cunard Line was threatened?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. The Collins Line was put on. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that the British Government discriminate in favor of some lines of their own against other lines of their own as well as of other nations, and to such an extent that they have even doubled the postage from the home countries to the Australian colonies on some lines in excess of that over others? They have not only continued these discriminations as to foreign ships but as to their own, and as a matter of fact they have charged doubled postage on a route over the postage on another route in order to build up a certain route. Of course, we are not going to follow the example of Great Britain in a matter of that sort.

Mr. FRYE. I am persuaded now that while the policy pursued by Great Britain, and commenced many and many years ago, was a good policy for her, establishing certain lines to her colonies and elsewhere and paying them large subsidies, and while I think that policy worked admirably for her, I do not think it would work well in this Republic.

I think the law here should give every man the same chance that any other man has. Any man who has money should be permitted to put it into a ship and establish a line if he pleases. Any corporation should be permitted to do it. Take our American Line from New York to Southampton. That receives $750,000 a year for carrying the mails. It is a losing game for the ships. While the company receives that amount of money, and no other company could receive anything because the contract is with that company, of course you never will have another line established.

Under this bill there is the same invitation to all men and to all corporations. Nobody is selected as England selects them and then adjusts the subsidies as she pleases, as the Senator from Mississippi says. I know that she does it. I know when she wishes to establish a line in order to gain commercial opportunities in certain directions she will increase it, or if one is established she is satisfied and is inclined to let well enough alone.

Mr. President, I wish to apologize to the Senate for taking the time I did yesterday and have taken to-day in discussing this bill, and I thank Senators for the patience they have exercised and the attention they have given me. My only justification is my intense interest in this matter, the importance of the subject, and the wild and insane criticisms and misrepresentations which have been made about a bill of which the people who made them knew absolutely little or nothing.

The bill has not been sent over the country. It has been represented to the country as these foreign lines and their agents desire to represent it. No amendment has ever been alluded to. It has been talked about as the Hanna-Payne bill, which was introduced in the Senate two years ago. It has been changed in very many material particulars, seriously changed, too, and yet the same old criticisms and misrepresentations are repeated day in and day out about the Hanna-Payne bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Has it been improved?

Mr. FRYE. I think it has been improved decidedly. I beg the Senate's pardon for talking so long.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Maine need apologize for the speech that he has made. I think that he might go on and help us out in some features of this difficulty. I followed the Senator very carefully, and I do not see that he has really told us what is the cause of the decadence of American shipping. If he has done so, I was at lunch for a few moments and lost it. Now, that is what I want to know. If I knew the cause, I should think I knew something about the remedy; but I have been unable to find any adequate cause for the decadence which began, I think, about 1860 or 1861.

I know the Senator from Maine has given a great deal of attention to this matter, and I should like, either now or at some time while he is speaking, to have him tell us, if he can, what are the difficulties. He told us yesterday that we had removed several obstacles, which we have done, as I know, and yet the decadence continued; it was rather accelerated, I think, after the effort which was made in some way.

I should like to have his opinion on that question either now or at some time before the debate is over. I join with him in the desire to restore the American marine. I have not got a bit of encouragement from what the Senator has said. Really it seemed to me, after he got through, as if he had put us in a position where we have to bolster up this business for all time or else the decadence is to go on. If I knew that that was so, I should not vote for this bill. If that is to be the case, I am not going to vote for it.

Mr. FRYE. The bill provides that no contract shall be made after ten years.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that; but what is the use of our attempting to establish the American marine for twenty years and then go back? They will come to us then and say, "Why, we built these ships, and you must keep us afloat." Are we to do that always? I believe we will do it always until we find out what the difficulty is. If it is a difficulty which can not be overcome except by subsidy, let us accept the situation and say that for some reason we are denied the privilege of carrying our products abroad in our own ships, as we did carry them to the extent of 75 per cent from our earliest infancy clear up to 1860 and 1861.

Mr. FORAKER. Ninety per cent.

Mr. TELLER. It was 90 per cent at one time, but when the decadence began we were carrying 75 per cent of all our imports and exports in our own ships.

Now, that is what I want the Senator to address himself to, if he will. I do not care if he takes two or three days to do it. I believe it would be profitable for us if he could give us any information on that subject.

Mr. FRYE. I could repeat one of my old speeches on ships and the decline in shipping, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] could repeat one of his old ones on free ships. There would not be the slightest difficulty about it. I could do it now, but in my remarks yesterday (I do not know that the Senator heard me; I doubt if he did) I think that I gave very directly and distinctly my opinion as to what the cause was.

Now, what I have said will be published to-morrow morning in the RECORD, and if the Senator is not at all satisfied, later on in this debate, when I have heard from the opposition, I shall be very happy to indulge, if the Senate will permit me, in some more remarks on the shipping question. But I would rather not do it now.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] reminds me of a very learned lecture delivered by the late John Roach, the celebrated American shipbuilder, in which he undertook to compare the cause of the decline of American shipping and shipbuilding, and used a very splendid Irish bull. He said that the civil war and the discovery that iron was better than wood was the twin mother of the decay of the American marine. That bull carried as much of truth in it as it did of wit; and it was very nearly the exact truth at the time he uttered it, which was about eighteen years ago.

Since that time, however, we have got in the habit of exporting iron to Great Britain, and we have in one locality that I have in mind iron of the best quality of ore, coal of the finest kind, unlimited quantities of both, and the limestone for the flux, all in such juxtaposition that it seems that nature intended to make us the cheapest producer of iron in the world. We are not only selling steel rails to the North, but we are selling iron to England, and we are selling iron all over the world. I think that Mr. Cramp, if I am not very much mistaken, admitted some year or two ago that he could build a ship as cheap as it could be built anywhere in the world.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not want to defeat this bill, but I want to challenge the statement, if I may, so that the Senator may look it up, that there is a difference between the cost of building a ship in the United States and Great Britain of 25 per cent. I know that as long as six or eight years ago the shipbuilders of this country declared that there was not to exceed the difference of 10 per cent. Since that time there has been a very great reduction in the price of iron, if we go back to the normal condition. Perhaps just now that may not be the case, but the rise in iron is probably temporary. However, there has been a rise in iron and steel, of course in Europe as well as here. I believe that to-day all the material which goes into a ship of iron can be produced in the United States cheaper than in any other place in the world. The timber that goes in is certainly cheaper here than it is in any other place in the world, and all the material you may say that goes into a ship ought to be produced and is produced in the United States as cheap as anywhere else.

Mr. FRYE rose.

Mr. TELLER. But it is possible that there is some difference in the labor.

Mr. FRYE. I was going to ask the Senator what percentage of the first-class ships is the material.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the labor is, of course, the larger cost.

Mr. FRYE. But what percentage of the entire cost of the ship is the material itself?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know about that.

Mr. FRYE. It is only 45 per cent. That is where the trouble comes in.

Mr. TELLER. I know labor enters largely into it, and there is probably some difference there.

Mr. FRYE. There is the trouble; it is in the labor.

Mr. TELLER. But if the statement the Senator from Mississippi made is true, that they declared they could build them as cheap here in a few years as they could in Europe, there can not be that difference. However, if that difference exists now it will continue to exist, undoubtedly, and that is one of the difficulties we shall have to meet. In my judgment, the greatest difficulty that we meet with in running American ships is what the Senator himself presented, which I know of no way to avoid, and that is that we can not hire American seamen for the same rate that other countries hire theirs.

Until conditions change in that respect, or we assume the position that we are going to level up by subsidy the difference between the labor in foreign countries, or the cheapest labor and ours, as well as the difference in the cost of building ships, this condition is going to exist until money gets cheaper in this country than in Europe. When it does that, I suppose capital will turn its attention to ships. A Senator in front of me says it is cheaper now. At times undoubtedly it is. There is plenty of money here to build ships. There is not any question about it. We do not want to go abroad to seek investment, and will not, simply because it does not pay. We will not put money there, because it does not pay.

Now, if we can find some way to make shipping pay without a subsidy, and I do not know but that we can, that is the thing we ought to do. If we could give shipping some preferentials, some advantages that we do not give to everybody else, that we did give for many years in our history, I believe we could return to some of the old conditions; perhaps not entirely, for we had 90 per cent; but we could at least increase the number of ships carrying our flag abroad.

I can not for myself feel very kindly disposed toward this present proposition, although I am willing to say that if I believed it would bring a return within a reasonable time with a reasonable outlay of money I should not object to it. That is all I want to be convinced of. I am not at the present time convinced that that will be the case.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 6, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 5, 1900.

ASSISTANT SURGEONS, MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Louis P. H. Bahrenburg, of Ohio, to be an assistant surgeon in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States. Mr. Bahrenburg is now serving under a temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 5, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes the following announcement: Mr. SHAW of New York to be a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that he has received a communication from Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, or his family, resigning his place as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs; and, without objection and with the consent of the House, that resignation will be approved. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

ARMY BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House Resolution No. 306, has had the same under consideration and herewith report the following substitute therefor:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and consider Senate bill 4390, "An act increasing the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States;" this rule not to interfere with other special orders.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, under existing law the Army on the 30th day of next June will consist of only about 26,000 men, or less than one-half of the number that are now at Manila. It is perfectly apparent, therefore, to every one that legislation of some character must be had with respect to Army reorganization. We are advised by the War Department that there is necessity for haste. It takes some considerable time to recruit a new army and to get it ready for action, hence this rule. It will be observed that the rule simply provides for consideration of the bill, leaving to the judgment of the House the time to be occupied by general debate and the time to be occupied in debate under the five-minute rule. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] ten minutes, and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we recognize the fact, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that it may be necessary that there shall be some legislation with respect to the Army, but we do not agree with him that this bill ought to become law. The bill that we are called upon to consider is a bill which is intended to provide a permanent military establishment for this country, a military establishment, Mr. Speaker, which is to exist permanently, in time of profound peace. If you say that we are not in a state of profound peace to-day, then this bill ought not to pass, for it does not contain the remedy for present conditions. We ought to consider this bill, or any bill providing a permanent military establishment, as if we were considering it in time of peace, because that is the natural condition of the United States.

In legislating for the Army, when we consider a bill making a standing army, we ought to legislate as if we were legislating for our country upon a permanent peace basis, not an emergency. If an emergency exists, as intimated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it ought not to be dealt with in this bill, or any bill making a permanent military establishment. This, in brief, is the position we take on this side of the House. We are opposed to this bill because of a number of its provisions. I can not attempt in the few moments that I shall discuss it to refer to all the obnoxious features. The first and fundamental objection to this bill is that it provides a standing army of not less than 58,000, speaking in general numbers, nor more than 100,000.

There is a margin, Mr. Speaker, of 42,000 men that this bill provides for or allows in the permanent military establishment of the country. Whether you are to have a standing army of 58,000 or 100,000 depends upon the option of one man. I care not how able, or patriotic, or good that man may be, nor whoever he may be, I am not willing to say any one man ought to control in a matter of that importance. It is the duty of Congress, Mr. Speaker, to say what the standing Army of the United States shall be. We have not the right to abdicate our powers in a matter of so grave importance as this. We ought not to leave it optional with any man—and I say it in no disparagement of the gentleman now in the Executive Mansion, but I would not be willing to leave it to any man to say whether we shall have permanently 58,000, 100,000, or any number between those two numbers. Congress should say exactly how many men the standing Army shall consist of, and that number, Mr. Speaker, ought to be fixed with the idea that it is permanent and not an emergency, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

I undertake to say that this country has never fought her battles with a standing army. There is patriotism enough left in the country now, and always will be, I trust, to fight our battles with volunteers. That is the way we managed to get along successfully in the most stupendous war of modern times. We did not depend on the Regular Army then. The Regular Army in existence when we had two million and a half soldiers in the field in the greatest war of modern times was not equal to the standing Army that we propose now in this bill to create for the Government of the United States. I am opposed to it for that reason, I am opposed to it for the other reason mentioned, and still other reasons which I will not now take time to discuss.

I say, Mr. Speaker, upon the question of a permanent army at this time, it is not necessary to deal with it now; but if I am mistaken in this, and if there is an emergency upon us, let us provide for it with volunteers. I am willing to give the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army, every dollar and every man necessary to put down rebellion against the established authority anywhere and everywhere, but I am opposed to putting a provision for an emergency into a bill intended to provide a permanent military establishment. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the bill as brought before the House for consideration under this rule does not purport to be a bill for the continuation of the Philippine army in the Philippine Islands or to strengthen the Executive to carry on that war, but it is a bill brought here to establish a permanent army in the United States, no matter what may be the ultimate condition or ownership of those islands. The bill itself contemplates that it may not be necessary for the police force of this country. It carries on its very face the fact that it can be reduced to 58,000 men.

Now, what does that demonstrate? This bill does not receive its birth in the House of Representatives. It comes here under the approval of the Secretary of War; it comes here vouched for by the Executive of this nation. Does that mean that the Executive of the National Government mistrusts the legislative body of this country, and believes that a time may come when the legislative portion of the Government, the Congress of the United States, will not respond with men in order to maintain the dignity and preserve the peace of this country? For what other reason can this sliding scale be put in this bill? There has never been a time in the history of the Government of the United States, from its very foundation up to the present hour, when the Executive of the country called on the Congress for men to sustain the flag and uphold the Government that the Congress has not responded. And why should we in this day and hour be met at the very beginning of this legislation with the distrust of the representatives of the people of the United States—a distrust believing that the men here on the floor of this House, who represent the people of the country, would not respond and provide a sufficient army to protect and maintain peace in this country if conditions require it?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] such time as he may require.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, there has never been a moment of time in the history of this country, from the days of George Washington down to the present time, when we did not have a standing army. The word "standing army" is not a scarecrow to the people of the United States. They have heard that word a good deal during the last four or five months, and they seem to have lived and got along very well up to the present time. There has never been a question, until it was made here this morning, in opposition to a standing army. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] understand that that is an open question in the history of the United States? George Washington provided us, with the instrumentalities of his mighty influence, with a standing army more than four times greater per capita to the people of the United States than is proposed in this bill, and that army was maintained until the days of Jefferson, when it was reduced, and at that time, under the reduction which Jefferson made, the standing army was twice greater than is proposed under this bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Ohio will allow me to say that he did not understand what I stated. I stated that under this bill there is provided for the first time a sliding scale whereby the Executive and not the Congress of the United States can regulate how many men shall be in the Regular Army.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it is a play upon terms to say there is a sliding scale in this proposition. For myself, and speaking, as I believe, in behalf of the sentiment of a majority, a very large majority, of the people of the United States, I would favor a permanent establishment of 100,000 men. The people of this country are not frightened when a demagogue says that the Army is to be located at places where they can suppress labor riots. The people of the United States are not frightened by the cry of the demagogue who undertakes to make citizens of a Republic, such as we have, fearful of the subversion of their liberties. The "sliding scale" is simply this: It is proposed to authorize the President of the United States, when a proper emergency shall arise, to fill up the skeleton companies from 60 to the maximum of 100 men. Is not that in line with the duties of the Chief Magistrate of the country?

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to this fact: The President of the United States has had power from the foundation of the Government down to the present time to use the Army of the country practically without limitation except in the law of the land, with a broad discretion given to him under all circumstances as to when, where, and how he shall use the Army. Is it a great deviation from the established policy of the Government to give the President also this discretionary power as to the number of men to be enlisted when already he has the discretionary power as to the use of the men of the Army? And let it be said to the glory of the American Republic—going back to its foundation and coming down through all the exigencies of party change—there never was a time when the President of the United States made use of that power which has been given to him to the discredit of his office or the disturbance of the happiness and peace of the country. Only on one or two or three occasions from the foundation of the Government down has this discretion ever been used. Why, Mr. Speaker, there is no record of the public acts of men in the United States that discloses such hesitancy, such unwillingness, such a determination not to act, as is shown in the whole record of the President's action in the matter of the troops.

There is one great, magnificent act to the credit of Grover Cleveland that will stamp upon his Administration, even under the condemnation of his own party, a glory that will always shine—when, upon the advice of his Attorney-General, he assumed authority to keep the peace and protect property in a Commonwealth of this Republic, when the governor not only did not call for it, but protested against it. And in that instance, and perhaps in two others, you have the whole history of the intervention by the Executive through the agency of the armed forces of the United States in the matter of suppressing riots or anything of that character.

Now, then, I take it for granted that we must have a new organization of the Army. While the voice of the country is still echoing in the ears of our friends on the other side, I do not believe that they are willing that the armed forces of the United States shall be cut down to 25,000 men on the 1st day of next July. And I do not believe that the gentleman from Tennessee is in earnest when he talks about a volunteer force to meet an exigency such as is claimed we have at our doors to-day. For how long a time would the gentleman enlist that volunteer force; and what would he do with it after he got it? Would he send a volunteer regiment organized for one year over to the Philippines, or would he not himself—party politics being entirely excluded from his judgment—would he not organize a force sufficient for the present emergency, but looking forward to the possibility that a greater force might be demanded?

We had at the beginning of the Spanish war something like 20,000 available troops. We organized under the votes of this House a force of 250,000 men. That force in that emergency would have been equaled by the presence in an armed organization of 50,000 regular troops of, say, two years' service. And if we had had 50,000 regular troops we would have saved away up into a host of millions of money that we expended on that volunteer force. The gentleman will understand—he does understand as well as I do—the impossibility of suddenly meeting such an emergency by an organization of volunteer troops.

A gentleman sitting near me to-day, who had some experience during the war, has said to me—and I think he has said exactly what we all believe—that if the old United States, the United States under the unamended Constitution, had had, on the day of the first Bull Run, 50,000 regular soldiers, officered by loyal men, favorable to the upholding of the Union, the rebellion would not have lasted thirty days following the memorable 2d day of July, 1861.

Mr. HOPKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the gentleman think that if in the war of 1812 we had had a regular army, our Capitol would not have been burned?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt of that. Proud as I am of the record of the volunteer soldiery, proud as I am of the little participation that I had the honor to have in those great events, I yet recognize what I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee will duly appreciate, that volunteer regiments, organized under the most favorable circumstances, are absolutely worthless in a great emergency until they have been at least one year in the field under competent organization and competent officers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio will permit an interruption, I wish to suggest to him that volunteers in our Army are enlisted for a period of two years. Now you enlist men in the Regular Army for a period of three years, and I fail to find any necessity for making such a radical change as the bill proposes, or why we can not secure sufficient efficiency in the Army by the two-year enlistment plan in place of the three years now proposed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, by the time the volunteer regiments have served one or two years, under proper officers, they would become, practically, regular troops, I would state in answer to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then let me see if I understand the argument of the gentleman from Ohio. If he insists that an emergency exists at the present time—and I suppose he refers to the condition of affairs in the Philippine Islands—if he insists that an emergency requires an army of 100,000 men for the country, then I would like to have that clearly stated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I will say very frankly to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not know anything about it. I know no more than he does about it. That is one of the few things that the gentleman from Tennessee and myself put together know nothing about. [Laughter.]

But it is well enough to provide for any emergency, and to provide this small army of 100,000 men if it should be necessary to use them. It is well enough to have the machinery provided by law for such organization if we should need it. And I say to the gentleman from Tennessee, what I believe he will reecho, that I have no fear, and I think that he has none, that the present President of the United States, or any other President of the United States who may succeed him, will blur, blot, disgrace, or obscure the magnificent record which has been made by their predecessors in that high office.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio another question. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stated that there was never a time in the history of the country when the President of the United States had the discretion which you now propose to confer upon him, of using a sliding scale with reference to the number of troops in the Regular Army. Now, I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether that is true or not. Was there ever a time in the history of the country when the President of the United States had, in respect to the military establishment, absolute discretion to increase or decrease the standing army at will?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that there never was a time when the President of the United States did not have the power to use the sliding scale.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then let the gentleman point out the law.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will give us full information upon the point that he has just suggested.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So far as the gentleman from Alabama is concerned, his statement is radically wrong and is precisely the reverse of the facts.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then will the gentleman from Ohio point to the law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have stated that there was no law which authorized an increase or diminution of the Army at the will of the President; and I challenge the gentlemen from Ohio to point to any such law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am going to do so as I proceed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (continuing). I ask him to show any law which authorizes the President of the United States to increase or diminish the Army at will. Of course, I know that he would have discretion to enlist men up to the full number authorized by law; but I ask the gentleman to point to any statute of the United States which authorizes an increase or diminution of the Army at the will of the President.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The point of the gentleman from Alabama as to the finding of the law which authorized this practice is, of course, well taken. The law covers the statute books of the country during all our history.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is precisely what I stated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But, let me continue, the very fact of the organization of an army in the United States necessarily gives the President power of administering the sliding scale with reference to the number of troops, as I have stated. The present organization of a regiment of infantry, for instance, authorizes the formation of three battalions of four companies each and 100 men to each company. There is no law that compels the President of the United States to maintain that maximum up to 100 men in a company, and in practice it has not been the case. Practically, no Administration in time of profound peace would maintain the maximum of the companies at 100 men each, although authorized by the law. The only difference between the action of the long line of Presidents and the uniform policy of the Government heretofore with the present bill, now pending before the House, is to give to the President of the United States by law a right which has been exercised practically heretofore to increase the Army above the maximum of 58,000 men in case of necessity. So that the power has always been there, and if it was a dangerous power it has always been in the hands of the President; and my point is that it has never been used to the injury of the Republic nor the disgrace of the Army or the country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, if the gentleman will allow me for a moment, I wish to call his attention to the fact that so far as the skeleton companies were concerned that existed before the Spanish war, it took the legislation of Congress to fill those companies, and the only place where any question of a sliding scale came in was where the Executive allowed the enlistments to fall below the number of men authorized by Congress, and that was only a temporary matter of a few months until the enlistments were picked up again; but it was not an authorized act.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My point is this: Practically there has always been a sliding scale in the matter of the minimum and the maximum of the Army. I assert that it has never been misused or abused by the President; and, furthermore, with regard to this bill, I assert that it is not any derogation of the principle and policy upon which the Government has hitherto always acted.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, before going into the bill, I should like to know if we can not arrange some time when general debate may be closed, and when we may proceed to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Iowa will agree to two hours on a side, and then that the bill shall be taken up under the five-minute rule, with general leave to print for ten days, the time on that side to be controlled by the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the time on this side to be controlled by myself.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to agree to that proposition, that the general debate shall continue for two hour on a side, the time to be controlled equally, as suggested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] proposes that general debate be limited to two hours on a side on this bill, after which discussion under the five-minute rule shall be proceeded with, with general leave to print for ten days, the time on the Republican side to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the time on the Democratic side to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. Is there objection to this arrangement?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, there is a special order set for to-morrow——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, before the discussion begins, I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall offer a substitute for the majority report.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order at the proper time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, there is a special order for to-morrow. That special order was made some months ago, and I hope by agreement it may be set down to follow this bill. We hope to pass the bill to-morrow if we can have the opportunity to continue the consideration of it. I ask unanimous consent that what is called the oleo bill—I really do not know the number of it—made the special order for to-morrow, may be made the special order to follow the passage of this Army bill; that the special order setting the oleo bill down for to-morrow may be vacated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, pending the granting of unanimous consent, I should like, as a member of the Agricultural Committee, to have it definitely understood when the oleo bill is to be taken up, and how much time for debate is to be granted.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I understand it, Friday is private bill day and Monday is District of Columbia day. I simply mention that fact. I am not particular as to the day on which the oleo bill shall be taken up, but I want it settled on what day it is to be taken up before the granting of unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that if this request is granted, providing that the oleomargarine bill shall immediately follow the disposition of this bill, and the consideration of it be continued until it is disposed of, there can be no misapprehension.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is understood, then.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. A parliamentary inquiry. Pending that request, I desire to know, if the request was denied, if the military bill would displace the oleomargarine bill, and if it should fail to be taken up to-morrow, if it would lose its place as a special order.

The SPEAKER. A second assignment can not displace a first assignment or first special order.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that there is a clause in the rule that saves the oleomargarine bill its place.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I did not attend the meeting of the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that even without that rule the first order would not be displaced.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understand the request of the gentleman from Iowa, it provides positively that a vote shall be taken upon the military bill to-morrow?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no. I said "I hoped" to have a vote to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You "hoped." I do not want to have any understanding that we are to fix a time to take a vote on the military bill before reading it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HULL. My understanding is that general debate is to run for two hours on a side—four hours; and that then the bill is to be considered under the five-minute rule; and I hoped by proper attention to business that we may conclude the consideration of the bill to-morrow without much doubt, and have a vote on it before we adjourn to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Following my parliamentary inquiry, the only result of an objection to this request will be, then, to simply lay the military bill aside and begin the consideration of the oleomargarine bill to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. And to be continued until completed.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Yes. Well, nothing can be gained by that, and therefore I have no objection to the request. I would like to object to that bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the Military Committee occupied a portion of to-morrow in the consideration of this bill, and the order of the House was by unanimous consent that we commence immediately the consideration of the Grout bill, to be continued until concluded, would that displace the special order for Friday, or the rule in regard to the District of Columbia on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Iowa, as he understands it. The gentleman asks that the special order made for December 6, for the consideration of House bill 3717, be so modified that it will be postponed until the disposition of the Army reorganization bill, the one which has just been passed upon by the House, and then that this special order on the bill just referred to will be taken up immediately and that the consideration thereof shall continue until that is disposed of. Is that the request of the gentleman?

Mr. HULL. That is the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask if it is intended to modify the rule already adopted at the first session of this Congress for the consideration of the Grout bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. That will be the effect of it, whether the intention or not.

Mr. PAYNE. How will it be?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not want to tie our hands any tighter than they are.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if he does not think it possible to conclude this bill in three hours to-morrow?

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to make any determination of that. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], representing gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, in talking with me this morning, said he had no question but what we could conclude the bill to-morrow; but whether we conclude the bill to-morrow or not depends upon the action of the House. I shall myself quicken that all I can without being unfair to any parties who desire to be heard.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota if I understand him to say that if this request for unanimous consent be given that it will place the oleomargarine bill in a position that it does not now get under the rule?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Minnesota's inquiry was as to the beginning of the discussion or consideration of that bill. It merely postpones the consideration of it until the conclusion of the consideration of the military bill.

Mr. DALZELL. And does not affect it in any other way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not desire to object to the consideration of this request if it does not affect the oleomargarine bill; and I make this parliamentary inquiry—whether this unanimous consent now asked will give to the oleomargarine bill a place on the Calendar that it would not have under the rule already adopted?

The SPEAKER. That is a question that the Chair would be unwilling to decide at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because if it does, I am constrained to object. I am unwilling to give that bill a position by unanimous consent that it could not otherwise have occupied under the rules, and to such a request for unanimous consent I desire to object.

The SPEAKER. It is a question, the Chair will state, whether under this rule more than one day can be given to the consideration of the oleomargarine bill. That is a question that the Chair does not desire to decide.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, the request for unanimous consent covers merely the completion of the Army bill, and on the completion of that the oleomargarine bill comes up precisely as it does now under the special order.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand that, Mr. Speaker, was practically the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. My understanding was that this oleomargarine bill would come up to-morrow and occupy the time until completed, and we wanted to displace it for the time being, provided that we did not displace it altogether.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, why can not we take up the military bill to-day and to-morrow take up the oleomargarine bill, in accordance with the special order, and then let the military bill, partly finished, follow that?

The SPEAKER. That will be the order, unless unanimous consent is given.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think that is the better way to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If this request——

The SPEAKER. Will the House please be in order? An effort is being made to reach an agreement, and that can not be done unless the House is in order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, let me modify my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] has the floor.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I want to make an inquiry. No one cares to antagonize the Army bill. We are all in favor of it, at least on this side of the House; but gentlemen representing the Agricultural Committee are anxious to know how it will affect the special order for to-morrow. We have a special order for one day only; and now if we agree to this request of the chairman of the Military Committee, can we have time on Friday? As I understand, there is a general order giving the Committee on Claims the first Friday of each month. Now, if we agree to this request of the chairman of the Military Committee, can the oleomargarine bill have the right of way on Friday?

The SPEAKER. The oleomargarine bill has the right of way on Friday under the order previously made.

Mr. GROUT. It is assigned for Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair intended to say Thursday.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that, in order to obviate this trouble, we let the consideration of the oleomargarine bill begin on Monday next.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I propose to object to any unanimous consent that includes the oleomargarine bill. If that is not included in the request, I shall not object.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, what is the request that is made for unanimous consent? I was not on the floor at the time.

The SPEAKER. The latest request is that made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], namely, that the special setting of the oleomargarine bill on the 6th—Thursday of this week—be changed to Monday of next week, reserving the same rights, no more and no less, that it now possesses.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Under the order of the House, the House now resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army reorganization bill, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair, for the consideration of the Army reorganization bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 4300, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 4300. An act to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the result of the action of the Committee on Military Affairs is to present an Army bill going both to the line and staff of the Army and making a permanent establishment for the United States. It does not make a permanent establishment of 96,000 men. It really creates a permanent establishment in round numbers of 58,000 men, eighteen thousand and some hundreds being in the artillery branch of the service, and in that branch it provides that but 20 per cent of the increased number provided for the artillery, something over ten thousand men, shall be recruited from year to year for a period of five years, so that at the present establishment, if there are no exigencies demanding a larger force, a permanent establishment of the United States by this bill would be at less than fifty thousand men. And when the bill works out its full provisions during the next five years for the permanent establishment of the force provided in the bill, exclusive of the artillery, for all other branches of the service is less than forty thousand men, so that the talk of a great army is not well advised.

The bill does provide for 96,000 men at this time.

Section 31 is as follows:

That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

This gives the maximum in the bill now—authorizes the President to enlist the full number. He can reduce the Army or Congress can act at any time.

In other words, Congress next year, if it shall determine that the Army shall be reduced, has the absolute power to say whether the additional men shall be maintained or not, and it would have that power without this provision in the bill. It gives no additional power to us and it takes nothing from it. During our entire history the Regular Army has been the subject of constant legislation. And there has never been a question but that we, the representatives of the people, have the right, at any session, to determine whether the Army is greater or less than the needs of the country demand.

This bill in its organization lines follows practically the same lines of organization adopted by this House on two separate occasions. It does give battalion commissioned officers where the first bill passed by the House did not. It gives a commissary and quartermaster combined for each battalion, in addition to what was given by the original House bill passed two years ago. Outside of that, it is practically the organization passed upon favorably by this House on two separate occasions.

And, Mr. Chairman, the only criticism that I have heard on the bill, so far as it relates to the line, is with regard to the fact that the proportion of cavalry regiments is larger than ordinarily obtains in the organization of an army. The bill gives fifteen cavalry regiments to thirty regiments of infantry. There is this reason for that, which influenced the minds of a majority of the committee, that the different States of the Union, in their militia organizations, do not provide cavalry organizations. They can multiply the infantry regiments almost without number in every crisis. And there is the further reason that in the operations in the Philippine Islands cavalry will be more useful in scouting the country, in suppressing lawlessness, and in overcoming the brigands that now infest the islands than would infantry regiments. These are the arguments that have induced the committee to recommend fifteen regiments of cavalry, as provided in this bill.

The main contest in the committee and before the country has been in regard to the staff organization of the Army. Members of the House are familiar with the recommendations of the present Secretary of War in favor of an unlimited detail of staff and changing what is now the fixed or permanent staff into one of detail in nearly all of the departments of the Army, making even the chiefs of the staff corps a matter of detail. So far as I am concerned I can see no special harm in a detailed staff applying only to the military branches of the Government, which would be the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's departments. The officers of those departments are educated in their duties all the time during their service in the line; but the great supply departments of the Government, or the technical departments of the Government, must have more than a temporary detail to render an officer efficient. Take for instance our Engineer Corps. The officers of that corps are engaged in special work; and while the matter was left out of the recommendations of the Secretary of War, the hearings before the Military Committee in the past showed that this corps was placed on all fours with the Ordnance Bureau, and was only left out of the recommendations of the present Secretary of War because of the fear that it would endanger the passage of the measure.

There has been criticism of our staff, and there always will be criticism of the staff and the organization of an army in this country when the time comes that we must multiply the military force of the United States ten or more times in less than three weeks.

Mr. COX. In this connection I would like to ask the gentleman a question in order that we may get at the points of this bill.

Mr. HULL. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. COX. By the exercise of the President's power under this bill, what will be the number of your standing army?

Mr. HULL. If the President sees fit it will be ninety-six thousand and a few hundred men.

Mr. COX. Then the President can enlist a standing army of 96,000 men. Is that right?

Mr. HULL. The bill specifically authorizes him to do so.

Mr. COX. Now, suppose the President does not exercise that power, what will be the number of our standing army?

Mr. HULL. Fifty-eight thousand, in five years from now. It will be less than 50,000 now.

Mr. COX. So the President can increase the Army to 96,000 men upon his own volition; is that true?

Mr. HULL. The bill specifically provides that the President, in the present exigency, shall have the right to recruit the Army to a maximum of 96,000 and a few hundred men.

Mr. COX. I hope my colleague on the committee will yield a moment or two further. We want to get a few facts in this matter. It appears then that you are proposing to confer upon the President the power to increase the Army to 96,000 men?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir; and two years ago the Senate——

Mr. COX. I do not care what the Senate did.

Mr. HULL. Two years ago the Senate proposed to confer upon the President the right to expand the Regular Army from 27,000 to 65,000, and also proposed to give him the right to organize 35,000 men into 30 provisional regiments, to be used in his discretion. That was done by the Senate and concurred in by the House—a much larger discretion than conferred by this bill.

Mr. COX. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, let me ask one more question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. I am anxious to yield to the gentleman all I can; but this debate is limited to two hours, and there are others who want to talk.

Mr. COX. I am not going to indulge in any debate. I am going to let the gentleman make the debate.

Mr. HULL. The five-minute rule will let all these gentlemen in. I will yield once more, and then I hope I shall not be further interrupted.

Mr. COX. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman. As I understand, this bill confers upon the President the power to increase the standing army to 96,000 men.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes.

Mr. COX. Now, let us settle that.

Mr. HULL. That is settled. And that being settled, I hope my colleague will let me go on.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman objects, I will not say another word; but I may say something before we get through with this bill.

Mr. HULL. I hope so. I shall be delighted to hear from my friend from Tennessee, as I always am; but at present there is only a short time at my disposal. I think there is no difference between the gentleman and myself, or between any members of the House, as to what the bill does in that respect.

I was discussing the staff, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Tennessee interposed his inquiry, and I desire to say that the committee was divided in opinion as to the matters suggested by the Secretary of War, whether they would accept the entire recommendation made by that official or not. But a large majority of the committee determined that in certain departments of the staff of the Army details might be made in the lower rank, and that when a man had reached the position of a major on the staff, then that he should be fixed in that rank. In the more technical corps of the Army no detail system was thought advisable.

The provision of the bill also proceeds to modify existing conditions to the extent that no man can be detailed who has not passed an examination, and no man can come up and take this examination—that is, no officer of the line—until he has been so recommended by his commanding officer. The committee, of course, recognize the need of the most careful selection of staff officers, and have provided for details in the lower grades in the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Judge-Advocate's, and Pay Departments and Signal Corps.

We believe that we have so guarded these and also provided for final promotions as to give the most efficient officers the rewards to which they are entitled and give the Army an efficient staff for time of war, so far as the numbers authorized will permit. This allows each officer who is recommended for detail upon this service to stand absolutely upon his own merits. In this regard it provides for efficiency just as is provided in the other departments of the Army. It applies to the Quartermaster's, Commissary's, and Judge-Advocate's Departments and the Pay and Signal Corps, but does not apply to what may be called the more technical corps, like the Engineers, the Ordnance, and the Medical Corps. Now, by the operation of this law a man must give some indication of his aptitude for the position before he is fixed on the staff in the corps where details are allowed and as now provided by law in the three, and I think that the result, and that is the opinion of the committee, is to give the very best service to the country when the service of the Army is needed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word as to the criticisms that have been made on the line and the staff. Since 1838 the staff has existed substantially as it is now established. Previous to that we had the detail system throughout the staff.

The Seminole war, which has been frequently referred to during the previous investigations on the subject, demonstrated the utter inability of the staff, as then organized, to grasp existing conditions, and Congress changed to present organization. Since then, however, since the adoption of the change to which I was referring, we have educated men in all the lines of duty connected with the Army, so that the entire world recognizes the fact that never was an army so well cared for, fed, or clad, or provided with all that was necessary to make it effective, as the Army of the United States since the beginning of the late war with Spain; and the same can be said as to the civil war. The 2,000,000 men then in the service were thoroughly cared for in all respects by the present staff organization, and no general of experience then has ever advocated a radical change.

Our Quartermaster's Department in the late war not only met all of the conditions which were forced upon it in such an emergency, but at the same time has organized a transport service, entirely new to our country, that stands to day without a rival in the armies or navies of the world. Our Ordnance Department is recognized as being managed by men of the highest technical skill, men who administer upon property of the United States year after year involving more than $40,000,000 and in capacity stand, I may say, without a rival amongst the nations of the world. The Corps of Engineers have shown the highest skill and are entitled to the confidence and admiration of our people; and when you come to the Signal Corps, crippled as it has been, organized upon a system of detail, which was after years of trial abandoned, you will find a corps of regulars and volunteers working in harmony, whose skill in technical electric work compares more than favorably with that of any army in the world.

The head of it was a signal officer of the Regular Army. We all recognize the fact that through the excellent system organized by him the first line connecting the world and making communication between the world and the old city of Pekin possible was due to the enterprise, skill, and work of our Signal Corps, and it has been recognized throughout this war that it has kept pace with the movements of the troops and with the requirements of the service under all circumstances and in all places where war was progressing, so that the people of the United States have been informed day by day what has been going on in different parts of the world where its Army is stationed. This chief believes in selection and a permanent corps, and opposes the detail system.

And, Mr. Chairman, we believe the system which carried the country through the great wars of recent years should not be abandoned, but that we should broaden it at the bottom, improve it if it is possible to improve it, and make such changes as have been demonstrated to be necessary; and that we shall avail ourselves of all the information and of all of the facts which a trial of the system in actual service has demonstrated to be necessary and desirable. The committee, I think, have no difference of opinion on that point now. No one from civil life can be appointed to the lower ranks of the staff corps after these vacancies have been filled. The committee have struck out the age limit in all these corps, with the proviso that men who are now serving in the volunteers, holding commissions in the Volunteer Army, shall be eligible to these appointments, regardless of their age; after original vacancies are filled and all places are filled from the line of the Army, no age limit is necessary.

Mr. MARSH. You mean now serving.

Mr. HULL. Now serving or who have been commissioned since the 21st day of April, 1898. This opens the Pay Department, the Judge-Advocate's Department, the Quartermaster's Department, and the Commissary Department to those who have served the country during this war, without regard to age. They are left with the record they have made, and that matter is left with the President of the United States, with the exception of a provision of two lines that I do not regard as of importance enough to keep in the bill if any member of this committee objects to it. That provision is—

> Who shall establish their mental and moral fitness to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

I see nothing in that one way or the other. It has been objected to by some, but, so far as I am concerned, I regard it as of no consequence, because these men have their records made of actual service. They are to be appointed by the President. They must be confirmed by the Senate; and if they run that gauntlet, I have no fear as to their mental and moral qualifications.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to section 19, with regard to the establishment of a nurse corps, and to ask him if that section does not in substance embody the bill that was defeated by a very overwhelming vote in the House at the last session of Congress?

Mr. HULL. No.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. What is the difference?

Mr. HULL. That bill provided for a separate corps of nurses and a more elaborate programme. This is sent by the War Department, and is simply what they have adopted and what is now in force in the Department.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It is not the old bill?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; not at all. It is recommended by the Surgeon-General, and the only reason that we put it in this bill is this: There is an old law, I think nearly fifty years old, which provides that nurses in the Army shall have 20 cents a day. This regulation of the War Department now gives these nurses exactly what this bill provides. The Comptroller of the Treasury has notified the War Department that unless this Congress fixes the pay of these nurses he is going to reduce them to 20 cents a day, and everybody knows you can not get nurses at any such figure.

It is an anomaly to put a nurse corps in an Army organization bill, but this provision was sent by the War Department. The Surgeon-General and the Secretary of War believe that this provision ought to be passed with this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word. An attempt has been made during the last campaign to make it appear that the Republican party, as a whole, were in favor of a great standing army and that they would not depend upon the volunteers in the future. I want to say to this committee and the country that there is no man on this side of the House who believes in a great standing army; but I hope there is no man on this side of the House who does not believe that we should have an army large enough for the needs of the country from year to year, in time of peace as well as in time of war; in time of peace, because the volunteer soldier will not enlist and remain in the service to perform the duties performed by the Regular Army.

The volunteer is a man who leaves his home and business, under the temporary necessities of the Government, from a high sense of patriotism to fight its battles. The volunteer has been the great fighting arm of this Government in all of its past, and the volunteer will remain the great fighting arm of this Government in all of its future. There is no question about that. But the volunteers will not remain in the service in times like these, because they do not desire to make the Army their permanent business. We need a regular army large enough to take the first fighting line until our volunteers can be organized in every great war. This bill gives that in a small measure, and in a small measure only. It does not create an army that can be for one moment compared with any army of Europe.

My good friends of the opposition went through all of our districts in the North in the last campaign saying that we were adopting the German system, and almost every opposition paper had a picture of every citizen carrying a soldier. A discussion of the bills which had been before Congress convinced the people of the falsity of such charges, and the result of the discussion can be read in the election returns from almost every district in the North.

Germany, with only a little more than two-thirds—hardly two-thirds—of our population, has an army of over 600,000 men all the time. It has an army of more than 3,000,000 of trained soldiers, with their organization in every neighborhood, with their arms and accouterments ready to put on in twenty-four hours, has these trained soldiers all the time. We have nothing of the kind and ask nothing of the kind. A man who would deal fairly with this question as a patriotic American citizen will concede the fact that this Army is the very lowest number that this great nation should provide. I know that it will be said, in criticism of this measure, that we have too many officers.

Gentlemen, this nation has never had a trained corps of officers sufficient to meet its demands. In this last war there was a scarcity of officers; there were cases where there was only one man commissioned commanding companies. We depleted the Regular Army to provide for the volunteers, and it has continued to be depleted since the beginning of the war. To-day in the Philippines and in Cuba and Porto Rico and in the United States a large number of companies have with them but one commissioned officer. This bill does increase the commissioned force, making it a permanent increase, which ought to be done.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will it interrupt my colleague to ask him a question right here at this point?

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to know what provision, if any, has been made in this bill for retaining in the permanent service those volunteer officers who have distinguished themselves in the Spanish war or the Philippines, or what grades it will be possible for them to attain.

Mr. HULL. You mean in the line or staff?

Mr. HEPBURN. In the line and staff.

Mr. HULL. In most staff places held by regulars the same is open to volunteers on the staff without regard to age. In the line of the Army there is no age limit; but, Mr. Chairman, there is a limit as to where they go in. They go in as first or second lieutenants in the line and in the lower grades of the staff.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a further question? Under the provisions of this bill, for instance, take the case of Brigadier-General Funston, now in the Philippines, or Lieutenant-Colonel Miller, of the Fifty-first Iowa, officers who have distinguished themselves—is there a possibility under the terms of this bill of either of those distinguished officers attaining any grade above that of first lieutenancy?

Mr. HULL. No; there is not, unless they shall be appointed brigadier-generals.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him still another question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would you object, at the proper place, to the insertion of an amendment of this character—I do not know just where it should come in:

Provided, That any and all officers below the grade of colonel authorized by this act may be filled by appointment from the list of volunteer officers, either of the line or staff, that have been commissioned since the 1st day of April, 1898, it being the intent and meaning of this act to place the volunteer officers commissioned since April, 1898, upon a complete equality with any and all other persons as to their eligibility for appointments authorized by this act.

Mr. HULL. Yes, I should object to that for this reason, that you would put men in that way over those who have served in the same war, and who have in addition to that served, some of them, twenty years and more, some of them thirty-five years, without having yet reached the grade of major, men who have served on the Indian frontier, risking their lives in all the battles that have pushed our civilization forward as the frontier has been pushed backward during the last thirty years, and make a man who has served but two years in the same battles these men served in their ranking officers. It would not be just.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would it be unjust to these gentlemen when you remember that you are increasing the number? You do not disturb the possibility of promotions as they now exist for these officers you have named, but you have increased the total number of officers. Would it be unjust if you increased the eligible list from which the officers should be drawn?

Mr. HULL. We have increased the number of officers in the Regular Army from civil life, during the last two years, to such an extent that the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa would displace all of them as well as the regulars. For instance, each regiment from my State had certified to the President one man for a commission in the Regular Army under the bill that we passed two years ago. That same thing applied to other States. I do not believe that it is fair to give a man who served two years a field officer's rank.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me? Have not all these officers been provided for upon the basis of an Army of 65,000 men? Now, with this addition of 35,000, you are increasing the number of officers?

Mr. HULL. Yes, but that is not the point with me.

Mr. HEPBURN. And you are leaving all the places for these officers in the Army of 65,000 as they are now substantially. They are not in any way affected as to the rapidity of their promotion beyond what they now have.

Mr. HULL. They are affected because there are more men in the lower grade. But not only that; I do not believe it is fair to say to the man who has served two years that he can rank a man that has served twenty-five years. I believe that it would destroy the efficiency of the Army. I believe that the officers who have served through all the lower grades so slowly ought not to be outranked. Some of them who served through the civil war are now only captains in the Regular Army and are only waiting to get one more promotion before retiring. It would be an injustice to give a man who participated in the same battle, because he happens to hold a higher temporary rank than the other, a place in the permanent establishment way above those who have fought for years to attain their rank. But this can come up under the five-minute rule, and I wish the gentleman would take it up at that time.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Section 36 provides as follows:

That any officer of the Army on the active list below the grade of brigadier-general who served during the civil war shall, when retired, be retired with the rank and pay of the next higher grade, except such officers as may be retired under section 34 of this act.

Now, that is a similar provision to the one in the naval personnel bill, and I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that that provision aroused very great feeling and resulted in a bill in the Senate to make it retroactive.

Mr. HULL. The committee considered that and refused to take up the question of a retired list. As far as I am concerned, I do not think there would be any injustice in doing it, but this bill confines it to grades below that of brigadier-general, taking in the grade of colonel. In my judgment this section does as small an amount of justice to the old soldiers of the civil war as it is possible, if we do anything for them.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It is justice with discrimination. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes. But if we can not do full justice let us do what we can. Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman from Iowa takes his seat I would like to ask a question.

Mr. HULL. Very well.

Mr. HEPBURN. Can you give the grade of that officer who in 1866 was in the civil war and who occupies the lowest grade now? Are there any of them who are not field officers?

Mr. HULL. I was told at the Department yesterday that there were one or two who are yet captains. I can tell by looking over the Army Register, but that is something of a job.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is in the artillery?

Mr. HULL. I did not ask what branch of the service.

Mr. MARSH. It is in the cavalry—Captain Chase.

Mr. HULL. I can give the names of a great many who are majors.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask the chairman a question.

Mr. HULL. Very well.

Mr. GAINES. At the bottom of page 22 of the bill, section 19 provides, among other things, as follows:

That the nurse corps (female) shall consist of one superintendent, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, and whose term of office may be terminated at his discretion, whose compensation shall be $1,800 per annum, and of as many chief nurses, nurses, and reserve nurses as may be needed. Reserve nurses may be assigned to active duty when the emergency of the service demands, but shall receive no compensation except when on such duty: Provided, That all nurses in the nurse corps shall be appointed or removed by the Surgeon-General, with the approval of the Secretary of War; that they shall be graduates of hospital training schools, and shall have passed a satisfactory professional, moral, mental, and physical examination.

Now, suppose the nurse is already in the employ of the Government, say in the Philippine Islands, what provision is made for taking care of that efficient nurse who has passed the examination and is not a graduate of one of these schools?

Mr. HULL. There is no provision on that subject other than that in the bill. The bill conforms to what the War Department is now doing.

Mr. GAINES. Will you turn out all those nurses?

Mr. HULL. Those who are now in have come in under provisions similar to those in this bill.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask another question. It relates to the question of compensation. On page 23 the bill provides:

That the pay and allowances of nurses, and of reserve nurses, when on active service, shall be $40 per month when on duty in the United States and $50 per month when without the limits of the United States.

Where does that apply? What do you mean by the term "United States" differently used here?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman can answer that question just as well as I can. That is the same old question that we have already gone over. I decline to yield further to these questions, because it is taking up time which should be devoted to general debate and is not for real information. When we come to discuss the bill under the five-minute rule I shall be glad to answer any question that any gentleman may desire to ask.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would like to ask a question in relation to section 40. Does my friend understand that that section abolishes the canteen? Will that be the effect?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will read the section, and then read the provision of the existing law, he can answer that question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am assured that it does not abolish the canteen, but I would like to have an assurance from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HULL. Well, I do not want to give any assurance on that subject. The language is something which the gentleman can construe for himself.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask this question because there was a good deal of discussion as to the intent of the legislation enacted in the last Congress on this subject.

Mr. SULZER. That is a very tender subject. The gentleman ought not to press his question upon the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Iowa is familiar with this bill, and I am not. I would like him to indicate at what point the matter, which I read some time ago, will properly come in.

Mr. HULL. I do not remember the section exactly, but I will inform my colleague when I look it up.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HULL. The only objection I have to yielding is that this is not really general debate, but matter which should come in under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CORLISS. I wish only to ask this question: What effect will the provisions of this bill have upon volunteer officers holding the position, say, of captain in the Commissary or Quartermaster's Department?

Mr. HULL. It leaves such officers eligible to appointment.

Mr. CORLISS. To what position?

Mr. HULL. To the position of captain in the Commissary or Quartermaster's Department, without regard to age.

Mr. CORLISS. So that a captain in the Volunteer Commissary Department in the Spanish War may be continued by the President permanently in the Army without regard to age?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir. We give that concession to the volunteers.

Mr. MARSH. The chairman ought to state, perhaps, that there is a limit to that process. The limit is when vacancies are filled that are provided for in this bill.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. When they are once filled, that ends the promotions from the volunteer force?

Mr. HULL. Yes; I supposed the gentleman from Michigan understood that.

Mr. CORLISS. Take, for instance, a captain in the Commissary Department now serving in the Philippine Islands. As I understand, he will serve until July 1, 1901. Without action on the part of the President would he, under this bill, be retired from the service?

Mr. HULL. Without action on the part of the President recommissioning him he would be. But the President has authority to commission him in the regular service as a member of the permanent staff corps if he desires to retain him in the service.

Mr. CORLISS. But is he not given a preference over one who has not served in that capacity?

Mr. HULL. He is given an absolute preference, by being the only man not in the Regular Army who can be appointed; and the bill gives him a positive preference, which, in my judgment, is almost a direction, that when these vacancies occur, if there are suitable men in the volunteer service they shall be appointed to these places. The provision of the bill is an expression of opinion by Congress as to that matter, and that is just as far as we can go, because the President has the right of appointment. We can not take it from him, and should not if we could. I now reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER obtained the floor.

Mr. SULZER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

[Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SULZER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, it will be impossible in the short time allotted to me to go over a vast field and discuss the questions presented upon an issue of this kind, and I shall have to content myself mainly with a general protest against the passage of this measure.

I would, however, call attention to the House of the undue haste with which this measure is being foisted upon the consideration of this House.

I can not see the necessity of the haste. Five or six months yet remain before the temporary force now in the field will have to be discharged because the time of their service will expire. Is it because, Mr. Chairman, that a decision of another branch of this Government is anticipated which would possibly make it unnecessary that there should be a large permanent or temporary military establishment created?

In a short time, we are informed by the public press, this great question, this question involving the validity of constitutional government in our foreign possession, will be decided, and it is known to the public mind everywhere that the highest court must soon pass upon this question, and may probably decide against the constitutionality not only of the Porto Rican bill, but of the anticipated similar legislation with reference to the Philippines. Then, I presume, it will be unnecessary to have any army for the Philippines, and the Republican Administration will make post haste to withdraw its jurisdiction and control from the Philippines. Can it be possible that the Republican party anticipates such a contingency and is therefore attempting to forestall such a decision and to provide for a large standing army at all events?

But, sir, I am opposed to any material increase of the Regular Army, either temporary or permanent, for purposes of conquest, because it strikes at the fundamental principles of our institutions. It is a departure from American traditions. It is in the face of constitutional government, and it is in the face of local self-government. Everyone knows, although not disclosed in this measure, that this army is intended for a military government over the Philippines; that it is intended to inaugurate a species of government in those distant islands which is foreign to every constitutional precedent in this country.

Military governors and commissioners, backed by the strong arm of the military, are to rule and are to be the future government of these people; and when that is done, as it is declared in this bill, although indirectly it will be done, I say it flies in the face not only of constitutional government, but of such government as is vouchsafed by our Declaration of Independence, which provides for a government by the consent of the governed.

We can not maintain a republic here and inaugurate a colonial government in the Philippines. We can not maintain here the principles that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that governments are instituted to secure these rights, and that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, and at the same time force a government, however beneficent, upon the people in the Philippines against their consent, without doing violence to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Such a course must end sooner or later in absolutism and destroy our free institutions. This, if no other reason—and there are many others, such as the enormous expense which the great increase of a large standing army would entail, the injustice of a war of conquest, etc.—compels me to oppose this bill.

It is said by gentlemen that it will be policy to vote for some increase in the Regular Army, and that it is policy to bow to the inevitable; that the American people have spoken and by their voice have pronounced for an increased Regular Army and a colonial form of government.

Mr. Chairman, when the mad passions of the hour shall have subsided, when the people, before it may be too late, upon sober second thought, shall have restored this great Republic to its pristine strength and glory, or perhaps when it is too late and this Republic shall have crumbled into the dust—in either event, when the calm historian shall record this sad chapter in our country's history, let it be said that the Democratic party, through its chosen representatives, stood with unflinching courage by the Constitution, by the Declaration of Independence, by local self-government, by civil liberty, and, like the faithful mother, amid the deadly blasts of the storm, drew its children closer in its loving embrace, ready to perish with them rather than to desert them in the hour of their peril. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I can not bring myself to vote for this bill, for there is a great deal of good in it. The sections that refer to reorganization contain many excellent provisions, and did the bill have no other object in view but the reorganization of the Army I should vote for it. The reorganization features are by no means perfect, but if enacted they would work great improvement in the efficiency of the service.

I concede that we need a large increase in the artillery, as we are far short of the number required to man our seacoast guns now in position. I also concede that for tactical purposes we need an increase in our field army.

While opposed heart and soul to militarism, I am not one of those who has fixed upon an arbitrary number for the size of the Army and has declared that one private more than that number means militarism and oppression, while one private less means liberty. I have always maintained, since I have been a member of this House, that the standing Army in time of peace should be large enough, and no larger, to be expanded in time of war so as to constitute a first line of defense behind which volunteer regiments may be raised. For this purpose, and for this purpose only, I am willing, and always have been, to vote for a reasonable increase of the standing Army in time of peace. I do not think, however, that in time of peace, for tactical or for any other reasons, the Army need be 100,000 strong.

This bill fixes a minimum skeleton Army. While I think that that minimum is possibly larger than tactical considerations require in time of peace, it is merely a difference of opinion; and did the bill stop there I might be willing to waive my opinion in deference to that of the Committee on Military Affairs. But the bill goes further than this in an entirely new and unthought-of direction.

It authorizes the President, whenever he may see fit, to increase the Army to 100,000 men. It is conceded that if this bill becomes a law, because of present conditions in the Philippines the President will forthwith increase the Army to its maximum.

Article 1, section 8, of the Constitution empowers Congress "to raise and support armies." There is no constitutional authority in the President to raise armies; it is a power distinctly limited by the Constitution to Congress; it is a trust power that we as trustees can not delegate to another. It has been said upon the floor that this power can never be exercised by the President without an appropriation to support the increased establishment; but the moment the President increases the establishment under this bill a charge has been created upon the Treasury, and if Congress fails to appropriate, then every enlisted man provided in this bill and not appropriated for can go to the Court of Claims and recover his pay. I have the greatest personal respect for the present incumbent of the White House, but I do not believe that any man, be he never so wise and never so good, should be intrusted, or can be intrusted under our Constitution, with the vast power that this bill proposes to confer upon the Chief Executive. It would make him the most independent and supreme war lord on earth, with the exception of the Czar of Russia and the Sultan of Turkey.

It is said that the conditions that require an army of 100,000 men are only temporary in their character. If this be true, why not provide temporarily to meet them? If present conditions in the Philippines are, in the opinion of the majority, permanent, why not say so and prepare to meet them? In the face of an emergency it is proposed to entirely reorganize our Army on a permanent basis for all time to come, and with the reorganization to incorporate provisions to meet an emergency that ought only to occur in war. In time of war I believe that powers ought and can be constitutionally conferred upon the President, as commander in chief, that can not be so conferred in time of peace. If the bill had limited the President's power to increase the Army to time of war, then my position would have been different, for under our Constitution Congress would first be obliged to act in declaring war before the President would have the right to raise the Army to its maximum.

I recognize the existence of the emergency with which we are confronted in the Philippines. I am unwilling to deprive the President of a single man deemed by him to be necessary at the present time; but I am equally unwilling, in the face of emergency, to yield powers to the President which I feel we have no constitutional right to give him. I shall, therefore, at the proper time, move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report back forthwith a substitute continuing the present Army law for a further period of two years, or until the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

If my substitute is agreed to, it will give the President all the men he wants to meet the emergency, and then, during the next session, with ample time at our disposal, we will be able to enact a law intelligently and scientifically reorganize the Army. If at the end of two years there is still need of an Army of 60,000 men in the Philippines, we can then determine if conditions now called temporary have become permanent; and if so, we can legislate to meet them.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat whether he, in common with the gentleman who addressed the committee before him, thinks that this provision giving the President the power to increase or diminish the Army in a time of emergency is unprecedented?

Mr. McCLELLAN. What does the gentleman mean by the term "emergency?" There can only be one emergency, the time of war.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I mean danger of war.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Not without Congressional action—certainly not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to several acts of the Congress of the United States with respect to that matter. Practically everyone knows that the time to increase an army is not after you have war, but before. In peace prepare for war.

Mr. McCLELLAN. But that would necessitate the maintenance of an army of war strength, which even this bill does not contemplate.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It necessitates only what ought, perhaps, to have been definitely expressed in this bill—the giving of power to the Executive of the United States, in case the situation proves dangerous, to increase the active force of the Army, at his discretion, within certain bounds.

Now, this is not unprecedented. On the contrary, acts which give that power are many, and they begin with the fathers of our country. In the year 1798 there was difficulty, but not war, with France. By an act of May 28 of that year the President of the United States was authorized——

Mr. COX. Will my colleague on the committee allow me one question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will be glad if the gentleman will wait until I have finished the statement of these statutes.

The President of the United States was authorized, "in the event of a declaration of war against the United States, or of actual invasion of their territory by a foreign power, or of imminent danger of such invasion, discovered, in his opinion, to exist, before the next session of Congress, to cause to be enlisted and called into service a number of troops not exceeding 10,000," etc.

On July 16 of that year—remember, there was no war then—the President was given a general authority—a discretionary authority—"to raise, in addition to the present military establishment, 12 regiments of infantry and 6 troops of light dragoons, to be enlisted for and during the continuance of the existing differences between the United States and the French Republic, unless sooner discharged."

In March, 1799, it was declared lawful for the President of the United States, among other things, "in case imminent danger of the invasion of their territory by any power shall, in his opinion, be discovered to exist," to organize 24 regiments of infantry, besides riflemen, artillerists, and cavalry.

And he was allowed, when it appeared expedient, during the session of the Senate or in their recess, to appoint their officers.

Again, in the year 1800—May 14—when we were not at war, the President was authorized to suspend further military appointments.

Again, March 16, 1802, he was authorized, when he should deem it expedient, to organize a corps of engineers.

Again, in 1803—March 3—he was authorized, whenever he should judge it expedient, to require the executives of such of the States as he might deem expedient, and from their local situation most convenient, to take effectual measures to organize, arm, and equip, according to law, and hold in readiness to march at a moment's warning, a detachment of militia not exceeding 80,000, officers included.

Again, January 2, 1812, he was authorized, when he should have satisfactory evidence of actual or threatened invasion of any State by any Indian tribe or tribes, to raise, either by the acceptance of volunteers or by enlistment for one year, as many companies as he might deem necessary, not exceeding 6, as rangers.

Again, January 29, 1813, it was provided by Congress that there be raised such number of regiments of infantry, not exceeding 20, as, in the opinion of the President, may be necessary for the public service, to be enlisted for one year, unless sooner discharged.

Again, in 1832—June 15—the President was authorized to raise, by the acceptance of volunteers or by enlistments for one year, 600 mounted rangers, as the nature of the service may, in his opinion, make necessary.

Again, May 23, 1836, he was authorized to accept volunteers, either infantry or cavalry, not exceeding 10,000 men, to serve six or twelve months after they arrived at the rendezvous.

Gentlemen may say that these provisions merely give authority to enlist volunteers, and that the enlistment of volunteers is in accordance with precedent. But that is not all. In the year 1846—May 13—it was enacted——

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized by voluntary enlistment to increase the number of privates in each and any of the companies of the existing regiments of dragoons, artillery, and infantry, to any number not exceeding 100, whenever in his opinion the exigencies of the public service may require the same; and to reduce the same to 64 when the exigencies requiring the present increase shall cease: Provided, That said enlistment shall be for the term of five years and no longer, unless sooner disbanded by the President.

A subsequent act, June 18, 1846, extends that power of enlarging or diminishing the companies to the volunteers already in service. Why, my friends, why? This is exactly the principle adopted by the present bill.

Gentlemen say this is a time of peace; or they ask us whether it is not a time of peace. It would be a time of peace except for such speeches as we have heard all too recently, declaring the right of the Philippine insurgents to hold their islands, notwithstanding the treaty with Spain. Every word of that sort speeds a Mauser bullet on its way; every word of that sort prolongs the time when the maximum of the Army will have to be maintained, and puts off the time when, by the provisions of this bill, the President of the United States is authorized to decrease that Army. It creates more danger of foreign complications and more difficulty of internal management. It makes more necessary the provisions of this bill in order that the Executive, whom we trust, shall have full power to increase or diminish the Army as may be necessary to meet any emergency which might arise. And how is it to be done?

Mr. Chairman, two years ago we had a bill before the House, which was known as the Hull bill, for the increase of the Army. It was a bill that very slightly enlarged the number of regular officers to be provided for the companies serving in the Regular Army; it contained provisions for increase of each company, which gave a total of about 85,000 men, in the discretion of the President. But that bill was not enacted into law. Congress chose to do otherwise. It chose to enlist an independent volunteer force of 35,000 men. We had passed the Hull bill through this House, and were forced to accept another bill for a volunteer army, and as a consequence there is not a member of this House who does not know some officer coming home from the Philippines——

Mr. SULZER. I know a large number who will never come home.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey (continuing). And some who are not coming home, who do not intend to make an army life their profession, who do not have the benefit of the retirement provision under the general law, who have served their country faithfully but have not the benefit of belonging to the Regular Army because they are men who served in a temporary army organized for a temporary purpose, who have given up their business affairs, but who will have no claim upon the Government in any shape after their present service expires. There is not a member present who does not know officers who are coming home in this condition and who will necessarily ask relief at their hands.

Now, with that condition of affairs before us, gentlemen propose to organize another volunteer army and repeat the mistakes which have already been made, and at the end of the two years' enlistment (or, as we hope, within less time) they will be coming back, not as officers of the Regular Army, but simply as citizens, to find their employment gone. That is not our proposition, Mr. Chairman. That is not the condition of affairs which we seek to promote by the pending bill. Our proposition is that the Army of the United States shall be officered by men whose duty is there for life, and so organized as that it shall not be bound by hard and fast rule as to the number of men in each company, but capable of enlargement as occasion may require, so that if an emergency arises we should be in such condition as that the Executive of the Government might have the power to enlarge and diminish the Army from time to time as may be deemed expedient and necessary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to meet such an emergency as that we do not propose to add another thirty-five regiments of infantry, but only five of infantry and five of cavalry. The artillery is recognized by all to be upon a peace basis and only for the protection of our coasts; and we only enlarge the present army to be sent to the Philippines by ten regiments instead of thirty-five. The bill gives places as a reward to the most deserving of all our Philippine volunteers, and does not attempt to enlist a new volunteer army, because it is not intended to enlarge the Army of the United States by thirty-five regiments of infantry and cavalry, but only by ten regiments altogether. That is the purpose of the bill, and that is the principle upon which it is based.

To continue your thirty-five regiments another two years would enable the officers to say that they had had four years' of active service, and the claim would then come from these same gentlemen on the other side of the House that these men have done such service that they will be entitled to have the Regular Army enlarged enough to make places for them all—that this is the pledge now made to them. That pledge has not been yet made. They were enlisted for two years only. Some of them have proved fit—fit to take rank with our Regular Army officers in the Regular Army; but (I say it with all deference) some of them have not had as much active service and have not shown their fitness so thoroughly, and some, perhaps, are not in good enough condition of health to remain in the Army.

The ten new regiments of infantry and cavalry will give room for the most deserving of these officers of volunteers to take their places in the Regular Army, whereby in the end they will receive the reward of a grateful country, in the ranks of retired Army officers, with retirement on three-quarters pay, when they are unable to continue longer in the service of the country.

The bill, therefore, enlarges the Army as a whole but little when at its minimum in time of peace; while, on the other hand, it gives to us in time of war, or when there is threatening of war, the right to increase these ranks from within, so that we can put forth as the first line against any attacking force, in case of sudden invasion, an army, not of 25,000 men, but of 100,000 men, under good officers, well armed, well equipped, and well organized, leaving time for the volunteers to come to the front afterwards.

Let no man tell me that these views are engendered by the difficulties in the Philippines. They were expressed in a bill which I introduced over four years ago, a bill to provide that regiments should be recruited locally, and that in time of war or expectation of war the members of every troop, battery, and company might be doubled in the discretion of the President. Those views were then supported by a report upon that line. They were supported on the floor at the introduction of the Hull bill. They are before this House. Experience has proved that this plan of organization, the one followed by the chief military nations of the world, giving the power to expand the line in time of war or threatened war by calling in new men to serve in old companies under tried officers, instead of by calling in new companies and new officers who know not their men—I say that this is the only plan upon which any nation can thoroughly rely in these days of great armaments, when attacks may come suddenly, and when we must provide in time of peace a system so elastic that it will respond immediately to the wants of the country in time of war.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] occupy some of his time now?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

[Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman on the other side use a part of his time?

Mr. HULL. I do not know that we have anybody else that wants to participate in the general debate. If the gentleman from New York has no one who wants to speak, why can not we proceed under the five-minute rule?

Mr. SULZER. We have several gentlemen on this side who want to use up our two hours.

Mr. HULL. The gentlemen on this side seem more anxious to get on with the bill than they are to talk.

Mr. SULZER. Then, if there is no one on that side who wishes to speak, I will yield one hour to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds I would like a statement as to the time which is left for each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has one hour and three minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has one hour and twenty-two minutes.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to judge the pending bill by the newspaper reports, because it has been so recently reported to the House that there has been no opportunity to study its details; but as I understand them it fixes the minimum limit of the Regular Army at more than twice the number of men that it contained at the beginning of the Spanish war and gives to the President authority to increase the number by 66 per cent, or to make it nearly four times as large as it was at the outbreak of the war. Undoubtedly some increase is needed. Sufficient men should be provided to man our coast defenses. But taking into account every probable demand, it seems to me that a military establishment of 50,000 men should be ample for all needs of the country upon this hemisphere. This estimate is in harmony with the message of the President, which puts the number required for the Philippine Islands at from 45,000 to 60,000. There should undoubtedly be reform in the organization of the Army. We have had too many officers in proportion to the number of men, and the cost per soldier has thus been greatly increased. One objection to bill is that for a minimum army of 60,000 substantially the same number of commissioned officers are provided as would be needed for the maximum number of nearly 100,000. It is to be regretted that the bill does not give us the efficient and economical organization in the smaller army.

I am unable to accept the principle which would confer upon the Executive the discretion to multiply almost by two the regular standing Army of the United States; and I say this without regard to the present Executive, who would exercise the discretion, I believe, as patriotically and wisely as it could be exercised. The objection is one of fundamental principle. Congress should fix the number of men in our military establishment. The importance of an army in any government, and most of all in a republican government, is so great that it is a dangerous grant of power, and I believe one that can not be paralleled even in the constitutional monarchies, to bestow upon the Executive such authority in fixing the number of the Army. This extraordinary discretion is not conferred for an emergency or with any limitation as to time. The power is his, not for a day or a year, but it will require to terminate it a law which must pass both Houses of Congress and be approved by the President, or be passed by a two-thirds vote of both Houses over his veto.

It may be said that money must still be provided by Congress to maintain the Army. But after a charge upon the public Treasury has been created by law, an appropriation becomes merely a matter of form. In fact, a soldier for whose pay an appropriation should be denied might proceed in the Court of Claims and recover judgment against the Government. We propose by this bill, therefore, to confer upon the Executive the power to raise the Regular Army from about 60,000 men to about 100,000 men, and also the power of creating a charge upon the Treasury equal to the difference in the cost between those two armies. It strikes me that this is a violation of most essential principles. Congress should not confer such a responsibility upon the Executive; but, as the great political organ of the Government, and the direct representative of the people, it should always maintain control in a matter of such importance.

Furthermore, I do not believe that it is necessary that Congress should authorize a permanent military organization of 100,000 men. I believe that such an organization is vastly in excess of the permanent need of this country. I do not say that that number is too great if we are to decide to maintain perpetually an empire over those 1,300 islands in the tropics of Asia. I fear we shall need them all as long as we shall maintain our government there. I am firmly convinced that the honor and interests of the United States demand that we should make it the goal of American statesmanship to extricate ourselves from responsibility for the government of those islands and to return again to the historic policy discerned by the eagle eye of Washington more than a hundred years ago, and which was marked out by the location of this country, by the character of our Government, and by our obvious interests.

It seems to me the time has arrived at last when the question of the ultimate relations of this country to the Philippine Archipelago should be considered and our position as a nation declared. Before the treaty we were told that the question could not with propriety be discussed; that we were at war with Spain, and that a discussion of that character should wait the return of peace. After peace had been declared and we had bought from her the civil war which we had at least encouraged against her, we were told that it would not do to discuss the ultimate relations of the Philippine Islands with us while they were in what was called a state of rebellion against their purchasers. We have been told, however, with a good deal of iteration by our generals and commissioners and other civil officers that the organized rebellion was broken up; that an appearance of war was only kept up by the hope of a political occurrence in this country which has not taken place.

If the question can not with propriety be discussed to-day, if we must wait until the Philippine Islands are as peaceful as Ohio or Massachusetts, I fear that it will never become proper for us to discuss what our duties and our interests demand, but we shall be thrust along to one ill-considered step after another until our position shall become irretrievably fixed. In my opinion our policy in the Philippines should have been declared at the outset and should have been a similar policy to that which we declared for Cuba. Unfortunately our course was consistent with no other theory than that the Filipino had been fighting simply for a change of masters and that the yoke of the United States might be substituted for the yoke of Spain. If we had practiced a similar policy in Cuba, which some influential gentlemen seem to regret, who can doubt that we should have had a war in Cuba as we have one in the Philippine Islands?

The Filipinos had an army more thoroughly organized than the army of Cuba. They had been treated more nearly as our allies, and had conducted themselves bravely and efficiently in battles in which our own soldiers were engaged. Would it not have been beyond the bounds of all belief that we should not have had war if, under these conditions, we purchased and endeavored to assert the title over them which we ourselves had encouraged them to resist? But whether or not there should have been a definite declaration of our policy two years ago, I believe that to-day, when we are proposing a military establishment to deal with that problem, it becomes of the greatest importance to consider whether the problem itself is to be perpetual and what is the ultimate purpose of this nation with reference to those people.

If we shall decide that it is for our interests not to remain permanently in the Philippine Archipelago—if our statesmen shall apply their ingenuity, not to the discovery of difficulties in the way of our getting out, but to find some means by which we can honorably recur to our ancient policy—a solution of the problem will more certainly be found consistent with that view. If, on the other hand, it shall be found for the interest or the honor of this country to embark permanently upon a colonial policy in the tropics of the Orient, it will be a thousand times better to embark upon that policy understandingly and having beforehand carefully weighed its disadvantages.

I do not propose to discuss at any length the unfitness of our system of government for the colonial policy, because that proposition has been so often and so thoroughly discussed. There is undoubtedly an irrepressible conflict between the principle of that policy and the great lesson of our history. I believe that nothing is more strongly established by experience than the general wisdom of the principle as applied to communities that governments "derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." The power of the strong state to make laws for the weaker state without its consent, to impose taxes according to its own will, disguised, as such a power has always been, under the sounding terms of freedom and civilization, has usually been productive of a national slavery as bad in principle and practice as individual slavery.

There is no community of interest between the people of the Philippine Islands and the people of the United States. We and they are geographically and ethnologically almost as far apart as the poles asunder. No advocate of retaining them (however he may have asserted as a reason for taking them that we had annexed contiguous territory, destined to become a corporate part of the United States) has been daring enough to maintain that we should make them a part of our political system. In fact, the argument against treating the inhabitants of an island which is geographically part of this hemisphere and may well some day enter into our political system as entirely outside the Constitution, without any of the fundamental human rights safeguarded there and subject absolutely to such laws as Congress might see fit to impose, was that if the people of Porto Rico were put upon a different basis, we should therefore be compelled to extend the same rights to the people of the Philippine Islands. The able lawyers and orators who defended the principle of the tariff upon Porto Rico were unable to discover a stronger argument for their position than that if we did not have the power to impose it, we could not retain the Philippine Islands. From the notion that the people of those islands should have constitutional rights they recoiled with a species of horror. I am making no extravagant assertion, therefore, when I say that no responsible public man in this country dreams of having the Philippine Islands become a part of the United States, as Louisiana and Florida became a part of the United States, and having them participate jointly with us in making laws for a common country.

Since, then, they are to have no share in our country's government—since we do not propose to "benevolently assimilate" them to the point where they shall become an integral part of ourselves—upon what theory are we to remain there, and for what purpose? I believe that the underlying motive, and in fact the motive that has been most widely proclaimed upon the stump and in the debates in Congress, is that it is broadly for the advantage of the people of the United States, and especially for their pecuniary advantage, to remain there. I propose, therefore, to present briefly some of the reasons which lead me to believe that it is not for the interest of the United States permanently to occupy those islands. This is a view of the question which has not usually been discussed; and I discuss it to-day not because I think it of more importance that or of equal importance with the great question of principle, but because I consider it material to meet as fairly as I can the underlying argument which is presented in support of the policy. I do not claim novelty for my argument. It will only be upon a different line from that which is commonly pursued.

As a portion of the cost of retaining the Philippine Islands we are to include the maintenance of the greater part of the army established by this very bill. This measure is the firstborn and legitimate offspring of that policy. The cost of our Army is, on the average, about $1,000 per man. With 27,000 men our war bill has been about $27,000,000. With 100,000 men it has been about $100,000,000. Those who are comparing our standing army with the armies of other nations are usually careful not also to compare the relative cost. On the basis of 100,000 men you will find that the direct cost of our Army is nearly equal to that of the great and overburdened military nations of Europe. The French army cost in the year 1899 $125,000,000; the German army in the year ending March 31, 1900, $130,000,000; the British army cost in the year 1900 $100,000,000, and the Russian army in the year 1898 $153,000,000. I understand these figures include the cost of pensions and fortifications. On the basis of this bill the estimate of the War Department calls for $113,000,000, putting us fourth on the list of the five great powers I have named. But these figures by no means tell the whole story. There is another expense, not included in a direct military appropriation, which is a necessary incident to our Army and as much a part of its cost as the pay of a soldier. That is seen in our pension system. The American people have generously declared the policy of liberal pensions for their soldiers. The poorhouse is no place for the deserving soldier who has fought for his country. We are appropriating for pensions at the rate of $145,000,000 a year. We have, then, from these two sources—from the direct war bill and from the pension appropriations—a total of about $260,000,000 a year, which is vastly greater than the similar charges of any other nation, and greater even than the combined military expenses of France and Germany, those two great enemies who are armed to the teeth against each other. It has been supposed that we enjoyed an immunity from the warlike burdens which curse Europe; but the point is already reached where we have far outstripped any other nation in the element of military cost, and where, at the speed with which we are forging ahead, it is not unreasonable to expect that our annual outlay will equal that of three of the four greatest powers of Europe combined.

The pension charge of the system which we are now embarking upon is liable to be a heavy one. The American soldier born and brought up in a temperate climate is most certain to develop some weakness in his system by any protracted service in the Philippine Islands, or in any other tropical country. There are already nearly 40,000 applications for pensions growing out of the Spanish war, a greater number than that of the soldiers who actually participated in it. A pension roll has some of the elements of immortality. We still have a pension list growing out of the war of the Revolution which ended nearly a century and a quarter ago, and the policy of maintaining an army of 60,000 American boys in the Philippine Islands, that will be constantly decimated by disease and have to be fed with fresh supplies, will entail upon us and upon our posterity an enormous burden.

Let us look at the practical effect of this policy upon the actual expenditures of our Government. During the fiscal year which began more than twenty months after the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain our expenditures were $120,000,000 greater than during our last peace year; and for the next year the estimates call for $70,000,000 more than this enormous sum, which is an increase of $190,000,000 over what the expenses were during the last year prior to the war. The effect of this policy is to bring with it a certain extravagance of expenditure in all the Departments of Government; and its cost is not measured simply by the money that is paid out for the greater Army and the greater Navy, although the extra charges for these two items undeniably account for the greater part of the increase. I have indicated to you, then, something of the actual cash cost of this policy; and it seems to me that a continuance of it is likely to increase rather than diminish that cost. But from a financial standpoint the expense is likely to be far greater than this. Great wars are most expensive things, simply from the money standpoint and disregarding the vastly greater expense incurred by the loss of human life. If a country is liable to such a war, the insurance cost to meet the expense should be proportionately great.

Consider for a moment this element of expense to us. By our purchase of Louisiana we got rid of one powerful neighbor upon this continent. By the Spanish war we got rid of another neighbor that was once powerful. We have to-day only one great neighbor, and we are likely under present conditions to continue at peace with her, unless from the lack of something to take up their minds or to demonstrate that we are a great world power some of our enterprising statesmen may find it necessary to set us up in a war with Great Britain. We are therefore to-day in the possession of a continent with those inestimable possessions for a nation—two immense oceans for our boundaries. We have only one great neighbor, and with her we are not likely to go to war. But when we take the Philippine Islands, and force ourselves as a political power into the Orient, we do two things: We divide by two the ability of this country for offensive or defensive war, and we multiply at least by two our liability to war with some great power.

Under the condition of things that existed up to two years ago, we were practically invulnerable against attack except by a single nation. We had these two great scientific natural frontiers. With ordinary prudence we were beyond all question safe from attack, and it would be entirely for us to decide whether we should pursue any adversary where we could suffer material damage. But with 1,300 islands 10,000 miles from our capital city, and on the other side of the greatest ocean in the world, if any nation should see fit to take advantage of anything in our internal condition or our relations with other nations to deal us a blow, all that it would be necessary to do would be to seize some sand reef in the Asiatic tropics, run up its flag, and then the honor of this nation would demand that we should expend billions of dollars and the lives of tens of thousands of our boys in order again to get possession of that strip of sand.

We have thrown away our invulnerability, therefore, and have weakened our power in war for all its justifiable purposes by the adoption of this policy. And that we have increased the liability of war follows, necessarily, from the fact that we are thrusting ourselves among great and hostile neighbors and are taking a position which will invite an attack where war can be made upon equal terms, whereas under our old policy it was practically useless for other nations to attack us.

After you shall have fastened upon the country the policy furthered by this bill, it will be the merest theatric and spectacular display to declaim about economy. You may make some miserable savings by cheeseparing; you may check the construction of great public works demanded for our development at home in order to continue abroad a policy without profit and without glory. But if you continue this policy of Asiatic empire, you will lay broad and deep the foundations for a system of expenditure which will rest heavily upon future generations. This country was happily placed in a position making possible an exemption from foreign war. If we are deliberately and wantonly to throw away this advantage—if we are to adopt a policy which shall tax and burden two-thirds of our people in order that the other third may wear uniforms or be borne upon pension rolls, we shall be rejecting the most precious gift that Providence ever bestowed upon a nation.

Let us consider, then, possibilities of profit. We have seen prominent gentlemen upon the stump weave from their imaginations glittering fabrics of trade, and airily draw checks for $100,000,000 of commerce each year with the Philippine Islands. Let us see if these drafts are liable to be paid when they are presented. When it was first proposed to set up an Asiatic empire the Treasury Department, with a commendable willingness to give members of Congress all possible light over this new pathway, presented to us the report of a commissioner who had investigated the question of trade. It appeared from that report that the yearly imports into the Philippine Islands amounted to less than $20,000,000 on a silver basis, or about $10,000,000 on a gold basis.

Assuming that we did not propose to adopt the Spanish system of colonial government, and that one of our methods of taking freedom to the people of those islands was not to compel them to buy American goods if they could purchase similar goods elsewhere at lower prices, we could not, of course, expect the whole of this trade. As a matter of fact, we have thus far secured only a small percentage of it. During the two years that we have been there that percentage has not materially increased. Most of the few things which these people want they apparently are able to purchase from other nations at cheaper prices; and so far as trade is not governed by price, but by sentiment, it is difficult to see how our trade prospects have been advanced by a policy which, according to the report of our commanding general, has produced for us a hatred that is widespread, and, I fear, will soon become ineradicable. Those islands, from their climate and situation, are never likely to become centers of trade; and the average inhabitant is not likely to be a better customer than the North American Indian. The latter at least requires, from his situation, clothing to supply that warmth which the Filipino gets from his climate. Their own soil supplies them with food which is better adapted to them than our own products. The increase of our trade during the last two years is of slight importance in volume, and that increase has been mainly in those articles which it does no great credit to this nation to send there.

It must be remembered, too, in connection with the growth of trade, that we are maintaining 70,000 soldiers in the Philippines, or six times the total white population which was there at the time we occupied them, and who are consumers of our products. You may increase the foreign purchases of these people more than three times, and increase by as many times the percentage of the goods we sell them. These estimates are fanciful, and I believe improbable; yet, even upon that basis, and allowing 20 per cent of our sales as profits, you would not have $5,000,000 per year. What is this paltry sum, which will go to a few individuals, compared to the enormous burden put upon the American people in order to secure it; and I have said nothing about the loss of thousands of American lives, for which there can be no recompense whatever in trade.

But in some mysterious way, by having the Philippines, we are to secure the trade of untold millions in the East. The Treasury Department, at the time it issued the report to which I have just referred, also put forth another document, holding before us the great aggregate of a billion dollars or more in trade with seven or eight hundred millions of people in the Orient. The bare scrutiny of the details of that trade, however, will disclose very little that we can gain. A great portion of it consists of the exports and imports of India and Australasia, colonies of Great Britain, many of whose products we shut out from our own markets because we can not compete with them in our own home. Does anyone imagine that the Philippine Islands can be a factor in securing us that trade? The great open field is China. The total imports into that country from the various nations appeared to be $170,000,000, and one-half of this amount was in the products of India, that great contiguous country. Another large portion was from Hongkong, which, although it belongs to Great Britain, is a natural part of China. We will need something more than imposing columns of figures to demonstrate how even the possession of the Philippine Islands is to enable us to compete in China with the products of Hindostan or with the trade from Hongkong. The imports from the United States to China, as appears from the document to which I have referred, are about equal in value to the imports to that country from the whole continent of Europe. In the natural course of things you would naturally expect that the 250,000,000 or more people in Europe would sell China as much merchandise in value as the 70,000,000 in the United States.

The only chance for us to gain materially in China is from Great Britain, a country which was exceedingly anxious for us to enter into the competition, if it is considered that our going to the Philippines made us a competitor in any different sense from what we were before. If the exports to China from the United States and from Great Britain, not including Hindostan and Hongkong, were equally divided between the two countries our exports to that country would aggregate something over $30,000,000. How many war ships or how many soldiers would the profit on that trade, which would go to a few individuals, pay the American people for maintaining it? And what reason is there why we should not have substantially all of it if we had nothing whatever to do with the Philippine Islands beyond at the most maintaining a naval station there? We can manufacture no more cheaply in the United States with the Philippines than without them. We shall have to go to China in competition with the other nations. The Philippines have had no immediate trade relations with China which by becoming their possessors we have secured the advantage of. You will find from the document to which I called your attention that the total trade between China and the Philippine Islands, going both ways, was an absolutely insignificant item.

There is no possible advantage that the possession of the Philippine Islands can give us in securing the trade with China, unless it should be that the other powers might shut us out from our natural rights of trade and that the possession of the Philippines would afford us a place from which we could send our ships of war to threaten the Chinese coast. That is the sum total of the possible advantage of the possession of the Philippine Islands in preserving the Chinese trade. A coaling station would, as I have said, give us the same advantage in this regard that we should derive from the whole group, although no nation has ever yet attempted to abridge our trade. Certainly our recent experience has not very forcibly demonstrated the value of the Philippines with reference to China from the war point of view. The attention of our 65,000 men seems to have been so thoroughly engrossed with the internal affairs of those islands that it was only after a considerable time and most painful efforts that a few thousand men were available for the movement in China. Assuming that we possessed the transport facilities, we could have landed in China about the same time about the same number of men from San Francisco and taken them from our small ante-bellum Army.

But we are not treading upon new ground. The recent history of other nations is rich in the experience for which we are about to pay. The experience of England with the tropical colony of Jamaica is well known to all. Jamaica was a losing venture for England on any other basis than the contract-labor system, which meant practical slavery. Take the experience of Italy in Abyssinia. The financial statement of the minister of the treasury to the Chamber on May 5, 1896, showed that 160,000,000 lire had been actually appropriated for the African expedition, and that the expenditures for the fiscal year 1895-96 amounted to 124,738,000 lire, or nearly $25,000,000. The war was abandoned because General Recotti, the minister of war, calculated that to succeed would require the employment of an army of 150,000 men for two years, at a cost of 1,000,000,000 lire. In about six months the Italians lost nearly 11,000 men, not counting prisoners; and this does not include the number who succumbed to the climate. The death rate among the troops from disease reached the enormous figure of 167 in 1,000. The total trade for that same year, in which $25,000,000 were expended, amounted to 15,000,000 lire, or $3,000,000, which is higher than the average annual trade. The average cost to Italy of maintaining her east African possessions for thirteen years was more than $4,680,000 each year, or more than 50 per cent in excess of the total trade; and it is notorious that the official reports of the Italian Government do not show the full extent of the cost. The result was not merely most adverse to Italy, so far as the loss of men and the expenditure of money was concerned, but a revolution was produced in Italy and the throne itself was shaken.

The experience of France in Tonkin is directly in point. Tonkin, including Cochin China, has about the area of the Philippine Islands. They do not approach by many hundred miles so near the equator as the Philippines. The population is almost exactly the same. From the enormous cost of the war in 1885 France has not yet fully recovered. Her men perished by thousands; she expended in less than a year 470,000,000 francs. The cost of Tonkin to France for the eleven years from 1883 to 1894 amounted to 534,000,000 francs, or a yearly average of 45,000,000. France, as is well known, pursues a most rigorous closed-door policy, making the most favorable possible conditions for the importation of her own products. The total trade between France and all her colonies with Tonkin amounted in the ten years 1883 to 1892 to $12,642,000, a yearly average of $1,264,000, as against a yearly average cost to her of $8,908,000. Notwithstanding France's efforts, other nations have traded with Tonkin during that period to the amount of $3,876,000 per year, or more than three times the trade of France. In other words, in ten years France spent 476,000,000 francs on Tonkin, in order to dispose of a total of 59,000,000 francs of products. I imagine that no one would contendthat we should govern the Philippines more economically than France has governed Tonkin. We are a Republic more than in name, and republican governments are not cheap governments. The death rate of the French soldiers was enormous—almost equal to that of the Italian soldiers in eastern Africa.

The returns in the Statesman's Year-Book show a very similar condition in Madagascar, another French tropical colony. In the last two fiscal years for which reports are available the cost to France for running that colony has been about 15,800,000 francs for each year, or more than $3,000,000. On the other hand, the total trade with France, including both imports and exports, amounted to about $800,000 a year. Notwithstanding the discriminating French laws, the trade of Great Britain with this colony was more than double that of France. I believe that the Philippine Islands, from their location, from the character of their population, and from the wants of their people, would be less profitable in trade to us than Madagascar or Tonkin were to France, or Abyssinia to Italy. And what, during the last half century, has been the experience of Spain with tropical colonies? Surely no one will contend that we made her any the less strong by taking the Philippines from her.

The study of modern colonial history will dispel the illusion that colonies are usually a source of profit to the mother country. The chief exception is England. By reason of her contracted natural limits and her location the colonial policy was inevitable to England, and after she has with more or less success scoured the earth for two or three centuries in pursuit of her colonial policy very few things that are desirable in the way of colonies are left. England has shown judgment in the colonies which she has refused to keep as well as in those which she has taken. She once captured the Philippine Islands in war, and yet such was her idea of their value that she gave them up to Spain upon the payment of a small indemnity. The fact that they alone were substantially the only colonies which remained in the hands of Spain after three or four centuries of decay, except such colonies as she held in this hemisphere and which were practically saved to her by the Monroe doctrine, is some evidence of the estimate put upon their value by the great powers. It is a doubtful question whether the trade of India compensates Great Britain for the enormous obligations that she is under. But no comparison can be made between India and the Philippines. The former had a great development of civilization more than two thousand years ago. Much wealth had been accumulated, and the consumption of her 300,000,000 people is infinitely greater than we could ever expect the consumption of the Philippine people to be. Great Britain has a colonial system which has been developing for hundreds of years. The cost to us of acquiring her efficiency and experience would be enormous; and as to the effect of colonies upon the trade of a nation, tell me, if you can, how it happens that while Great Britain is the greatest colonial power in the world the two countries that have been going by her with rapid strides in the matter of commerce are the United States, which until yesterday had no colonies, and Germany, whose scattered possessions are an admitted drain.

With reference, however, to the expansion of England, the expansion which has added to her strength and to her wealth has been mainly that which has occurred in vast and empty territories within the Temperate Zone. Those territories were fitted in character and climate to become the homes of Englishmen; and they have gone to them, bearing with them the institutions, laws, and habits of their native land, and have thus added strength to the mother country. India, for the reasons I have referred to, has probably been a source of profit to England: but when you take into account the serious problems which she has presented in England's foreign policy, and the wars to which her possession has given rise, she has come far short of being of unmixed advantage to England.

The Philippine Islands are lacking in the primary requisite of a colony, and that is the fitness to become the home of the people of the colonizing power. In the first place, those islands are not empty and unoccupied, but they are as densely populated as New England. The present population will have to be cleared off with the forests in order to make room for any great number of our own people. But, in the next place, the climatic conditions are such that they are not fitted to become the home of the Caucasian. The fact that after several centuries less than 20,000 whites are found living there, not counting the soldiers, is pretty strong proof that they are not fitted for the white man. The northernmost point of the islands is south of Calcutta, and from that point they extend for about 1,500 miles toward the equator.

It is urged that the possession of the Philippines will open new fields for the investment of capital, such fields being nearly exhausted at home. Possibly the limit is nearly reached for the exploitation of franchises in this country, but when vast tracts of land shall have been reclaimed, when the wooden stage of development shall have given place to stone and iron habitations built for 300,000,000 instead of 70,000,000 people, it will be time enough then to consider the exhaustion of our home field for investment.

The barest survey of the question convinces me that the cost to this nation in money of Philippine colonies will be greater than any pecuniary benefits it will receive; that while a few fortunes may be made by exploitation, a vastly greater burden will be imposed upon the nation as a whole than the benefits which any individuals may secure; that the islands are not likely ever to become a corporate part of this country; that they are not fitted to be the home of Americans; that they will greatly weaken the country in time of war and expose it to liability to war; that, worst of all, their retention will involve the destruction of tens of thousands of American lives, and that it will involve the departure from the traditional policy which has made this nation great.

The assertion of a policy of Asiatic domination will bring the Monroe doctrine tumbling about our ears, for we shall make ourselves the laughingstock of mankind if we say to the overcrowded nations of the other hemisphere, "Keep your hands off the empty and unoccupied portions of this continent," and then at the same time, having a sparse population, embrace a thousand islands in the other hemisphere. Such a course would deprive the Monroe doctrine of the last appearance of justice, and thenceforward it would have to stand upon force alone. In my opinion, in no proper sense of the word can this policy be called expansion. It is no more expansion or growth than is the cancer or the horrible tumor which swells the bulk of the human body, but saps it of its vitality and strength.

Then comes the accumulation of horrible race problems, of which we already have our full share in this country. Let me call to your attention the testimony of Lord Elgin, who was governor-general of India, and who could speak with the greatest authority upon this question. The quotations I make were cited in a pamphlet entitled "Commonwealth or Empire," written by one of the greatest scholars and writers in the British Empire, a man who has shown himself a sympathetic friend of American institutions—Prof. Goldwin Smith.

It is a terrible business, however, this living among inferior races. I have seldom, from man or woman, since I came to the East, heard a sentence which was reconcilable with the hypothesis that Christianity had ever come into the world. Detestation, contempt, ferocity, vengeance, whether Chinamen or Indians be the object. There are some three or four hundred servants in this house. When one first passes by their salaaming, one feels a little awkward. But the feeling soon wears off, and one moves among them with perfect indifference, treating them, not as dogs, because in that case one would whistle to them and pat them, but as machines with which one can have no communion or sympathy. Of course, those who can speak the language are somewhat more en rapport with the natives, but very slightly so, I take it. When the passions of fear and hatred are ingrafted on this indifference, the result is frightful; an absolute callousness as to the sufferings of the objects of those passions, which must be witnessed to be understood and believed.

—— tells me that yesterday, at dinner, the fact that government had removed some commissioners who, not content with hanging all the rebels they could lay their hands on, had been insulting them by destroying their caste, telling them that after death they should be cast to the dogs to be devoured, etc., was mentioned. A reverend gentleman could not understand the conduct of government; could not see that there was any impropriety in torturing men's souls; seemed to think a good deal might be said in favor of bodily torture as well! These are your teachers, O Israel! Imagine what the pupils become under such leading!

The newspapers of this country have frequently contained reports (whether true or false I do not know) of cruel treatment of the Filipinos by American soldiers and of Americans by Filipinos. But we can accurately predict what will take place if we permanently remain in that country. We shall have the race problem, and race hatred in general, in its bitterest forms.

But what shall we do with the Philippines? We are told that we have already taken them, we have already expanded. It is said, "You are arguing a question that is already closed." I insist, however, that we are not to submit to the perpetual drain which this policy will impose, because what was never an American problem has been treated as an American problem. Why should not the Philippine Islanders govern themselves? If they are not fitted to become the abode of Americans or a part of the American commonwealth, for what righteous purpose are Americans there? Let us treat the Philippine Islands according to American precedents. I would have no loosely defined protectorate. But it seems to me, from all the testimony, that if those people were permitted to govern themselves, after their own rude fashion, but still a fashion that fits them better than does our fashion, they could after a brief time walk alone as well as the people of many of the South American countries or the people of Haiti or of Cuba. I said let us treat them according to American precedents. What are those precedents?

How did we treat Mexico, that had only recently been a Spanish colony? After a checkered experience as a nation of hardly a generation, in which were seen disorder and governmental chaos, and all things that, it is predicted, will take place in the Philippine Islands, the people of the United States conquered that country and subjugated it as completely as a conquest can ever be effected by arms. Our flag was over the City of Mexico. A movement was made in this country, as general and widespread certainly as the movement for the annexation of the Philippines before the ratification of the treaty, in favor of our annexing the whole of Mexico. There was this to be said at least for that policy, that it was complicated with no delicate question of an alliance, that the territory was contiguous, and that it some time might become an integral part of the United States. Professor Bourne has reviewed, with a good deal of learning, a discussion of that subject. President Polk resisted the policy of wholesale annexation. Some of his advisors favored it, and among them James Buchanan; and the course of the latter curiously brings to view the cant with which it is invariably sought to conceal the felonious designs which a strong nation sometimes entertains toward a weak one. Buchanan desired to take the whole of Mexico. Polk resolutely opposed this policy, and in his message proposed to encourage the friends of peace in Mexico to establish "a republican government able and willing to make peace." Buchanan piously proposed to substitute for this the declaration that "we must fulfill that destiny which Providence may have in store for both countries." This submissive Christian spirit was not destined to have sway, and Mexico was not completely crushed under the heel of the victor and stripped of her last possession, even of her existence as a nation. We aided her in setting up a government that could meet some of the ends of government, although imperfectly. She was established under our protection. When our attention was engrossed by civil war, a foreign power, ostensibly in the interest of liberty and civilization, took possession of Mexico. We had no sooner terminated our own struggle than we massed our troops along the Rio Grande and gave France notice that she must withdraw, and she withdrew. After years of struggle and revolution, Mexico has to-day a stable government, and I think no one would contend that it was not fortunate for her—fortunate, too, for the United States—that the extreme policy of extinction was not accomplished.

We have held up Haiti, although no other portion of the world has come so near not having a civil government as the Republic of Haiti. When such an enlightened governing agency as Great Britain claimed a strip of Venezuela a few years ago we gave her notice to keep her hands off, to submit her claims to arbitration, although we were keeping out this high governing agency from a considerable portion of the country of South America and were maintaining a power which had government by revolution. There is at least one thing in government worse than government by revolution, and that is government by brute force. The government of one community by another community, of one race by another race, contrary to the customs and ideas of the governed, is something worse than government by revolution. I say, then, let us follow the American precedents, the policy that we have followed in the case of Haiti, Mexico, and Venezuela, and that we have proclaimed for Cuba. I say let us follow the dictates of justice; for this great nation, after favoring a people who were struggling for independence and encouraging them in that struggle, can never stand before the bar of history, having purchased that people, and having endeavored to crush those aspirations which not merely our own glorious example but our own direct incitement had aroused. The Filipino does not, perhaps, come up to Anglo-Saxon standards, and should not be judged by them. He may not make war according to civilized precedents, although if we are to judge from the statements of one party to the controversy, there is nothing barbarous that he has committed in this war that can not be duplicated by the conduct of Great Britain in South Africa. He seems advanced enough, however, to fight for his freedom. Give him the benefit of that.

I have seen this spirit called somewhere, and I think admirably called, the "unconquerable spirit." It is the spirit that kept George Washington fighting after Valley Forge. It is the spirit which animates De Wet to-day in South Africa after the organization of the republican armies has been destroyed and they have been broken up into bands of roving patriots. It is the same spirit which, according to the reports of our own generals, has broken down tribal lines and made the people of the Philippines unanimous in their hostility to this nation. It is the same spirit which would have shown itself in Cuba had we turned our war of deliverance in that country, as we did in Asia, into one of conquest. Those who think that the Filipinos continue to wage against us the war we purchased from Spain because of some speech made by somebody against the treaty have read history to but little purpose, if, indeed, they have read it at all. They are inspired by that same unconquerable spirit which is the noblest heritage of the human heart, which I am glad to believe is universal; it is man's best title to freedom, and that is the spirit to wage unrelenting war in behalf of liberty.

The Empire of Great Britain never attained a loftier moral stature than when, after Majuba Hill, she showed herself willing to do justice to the Boers. Standing almost peerless in physical strength among the nations, she displayed that nobler and more essential quality of greatness when after a reverse she yet listened to the demands of that weak little republic in South Africa. That act of Gladstone's strengthened his country in the hearts of men the world over; and it will shine in history all the more brightly in contrast with the brutal and merciless policy of extermination which is now shocking the sensibilities of Christendom. But how much easier is it for us to-day to pursue a policy of justice? We have suffered no reverse, or none indeed unless it be a moral one which our own conduct has inflicted. The organized armies have been dispersed. The Filipino leader, whom we bore to Luzon with arms in one of our own ships, has been driven by us to the caves of the mountains, if indeed he yet lives. The time has come when we should frankly declare to those people our ultimate purpose toward them. Let us give them that assurance which all our history inspires. Let us tell them that we will aid them for one year—for five years if need be—in setting up a government of their own, symbolized by their own flag, and that we will leave with them all that is most glorious in the meaning of another flag—liberty, independence, self-government. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HULL. There is still some time remaining, I believe, for debate on the other side.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman from Iowa will now consume some of his time.

Mr. HULL. The chances are that we shall not want to consume all our time. We want the right to close this debate.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman will take some of his time now.

Mr. HULL. Are there not some gentlemen on the other side desiring to occupy the floor?

Mr. SULZER. Oh, yes; but the gentleman who wanted to speak just now is not in the Hall at present.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that we shall want on this side more than ten or fifteen minutes. I think the gentlemen on the other side, if they desire to speak, ought to proceed now. We certainly have the right to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is entitled to close the debate.

Mr. HULL. I think so. I have not had any applications from gentlemen on this side desiring to speak. I do not wish to occupy, myself, any great amount of time. For this reason I would like gentlemen on the other side to conclude their remarks or yield the floor, in order that I may close the debate.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman will consume some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa says that he only wants to close the debate, which he is entitled to do.

Mr. SULZER. How much time will the gentleman occupy in closing the debate?

Mr. HULL. I should say twenty minutes at the outside.

Mr. SULZER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, after a casual reading of this bill, it seems to me that in its preparation the interests of the seaboard States have been entirely overlooked. We have appropriated and expended nearly $100,000,000 for the construction of coast defenses and for making guns with which to repel attack and defend them. I understand that to properly man these defenses the artillery branch of the service must be increased to 18,000 men. This bill fails to make the required increase. It proposes to increase the number of our cavalry regiments from ten to fifteen. It seems to me that the proper method of providing for an increase in the Army at this time is to promptly provide for the manning of our coast defenses. Billions of dollars in property are at stake in the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, and San Francisco. The looting spirit is abroad among the nations, and we can not take action too soon. It seems to me that it would be prudent to carry out the system already adopted of building coast defenses, of supplying them with the most formidable guns, and of manning them with a superior force of artillery.

I would like to vote for this bill if it provided for a proper increase of the Army by the adoption of measures putting the artillery, and not cavalry, to the front. The cavalry ought not to be increased at the expense of the artillery. Even the infantry regiments have no corresponding increase with the cavalry.

This ought not to be a bill drawn up in the interest of horse dealers. I hope, sir, that before the bill is brought to a vote the proper increase in the artillery will be made. Then the people and property on our coasts will be comparatively safe, and the nation itself bid defiance to the armies and navies of Europe.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. SHOWALTER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 1358. An act to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases;

S. 2399. An act to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of Washington;"

S. 4284. An act to authorize Capt. N. M. Brooks, Superintendent of Foreign Mails, Post-Office Department, to accept a decoration tendered to him by the Emperor of Germany;

S. 4439. An act to authorize Hon. George D. Meiklejohn, Assistant Secretary of War, to accept a decoration tendered to him by the Government of Sweden and Norway;

S. 4673. An act to encourage the holding of an interstate and West Indian exposition in the city of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, in the year 1901;

S. 4830. An act to correct the military record of Ira J. Paxton;

S. 21. An act for the relief of Clara H. Fulford;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12283) in relation to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia.

ARMY BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SULZER. I yield the balance of the time to my colleague on the committee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, what I may say about this bill will be of a general character. In the few minutes which I shall occupy I am not going to enter into a discussion of the details of the measure. When the last Army bill was passed through this House, calling for a volunteer force of 35,000 men, I foresaw what would be the end. What is your proposition now? Let it be distinctly understood by the country. It is to increase your standing army to about 96,000. If any gentleman on the Republican side thinks that I am making a mistake in my figures, I will thank him very kindly for a correction. You propose to increase your standing army to 96,000 men. Now, I want to ask, what is that done for?

What is the object? What is the point that you expect to accomplish by making a standing army of 96,000? Why, sir, but a short time ago our Regular Army was down to between 20,000 and 25,000 men. I desire to emphasize the question, and I call upon some one to answer it, What do you want with a standing army of 96,000 men? The question is unnecessary; we do not need such an army.

But let me go one step further on this matter; and I am surprised that the chairman of our committee is not at this moment on the floor, for he is generally ready to answer everything, whether he answers it right or not. [Laughter.] I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I want the country to understand the position of the gentleman. I have no politics in this matter myself. What would you want with an army of 96,000 men? I wish the chairman of the committee would tell me.

Mr. HULL. I suppose the country will understand, Mr. Chairman, that we want an army to enforce the authority and maintain the power of the United States of America over every foot of soil that belongs to the United States and is under its jurisdiction.

Mr. COX. I am glad to hear the gentleman. Then, you must have an army, let us say, of 96,000 men to enforce the authority of the United States over every foot of territory that you assume to control. I hope the question is squarely put now before the House and before the people. Now, in this connection, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if, under a former bill, when he called for 35,000 volunteers, he did not say that it was plenty to assert the jurisdiction of the United States and to enable it to exercise control over every foot of territory that Congress claimed jurisdiction over. I want to meet this face to face. I do not want any sophistry about the matter. Let us come down to the plain question. What do you want with such an army?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have waited for a reply, but the gentleman seems to acquiesce in what I have just said, and he does not give me much trouble in his responses. But let us understand the question squarely and honestly. Do you intend to increase the standing army of the United States to 96,000 men—we will call it hereafter 100,000 men, for that is more like the number, and that is what you mean by the bill—do you intend, when you increase the standing army—and I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to answer me—to go into war with anybody? What do you want with the increase? Who are you going to fight? [Laughter.] Why, Mr. Chairman, I get no response. Our chairman, always so ready on the floor, seems to be in trouble.

Mr. HULL. I did not understand the inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee, my attention having been temporarily attracted.

Mr. COX. Well, I will make it so plain that you can not misunderstand it.

Mr. HULL. Well, you will have to be very plain indeed.

Mr. COX. I intend to be. I do not deal in sophistry. I make the inquiry plainly. If you increase the Army to 96,000, what are you going to increase the Army to 96,000 men for? What are you going to do with them?

Mr. HULL. Well, I will state to the gentleman that they will largely take the place of the hundred thousand men our friends on the other side aided to give us in the last two or three years.

Mr. COX. Oh, well, now, there is no dodging about that. [Laughter.] Let me see if I understand the thing properly. You increase the Army to 96,000 men—the Regular Army. Now what are you going to do with them? Who are you going to fight? Who are you going to whip? [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it seems that gentlemen in charge of the bill are absolutely void of an answer. What is the matter with our chairman? [Laughter.]

But I will come to a question that is plain and tangible and about which there can be no dodging. The chairman knows that I do not believe in a regular standing army of 96,000 men. Well, if you have a standing army of 96,000 men or 100,000 men, whom are you going to fight? Is any man ready to tell me whom is going to be fought by this army? Who is fighting us now? Give us an honest, common-sense reason and a fair answer to the inquiry. Whom are you going to fight? [Laughter.] Get up in your place and say that you have a proposition for an army of 96,000 men to fight somebody, and tell us whom it is that you are going to fight. [Laughter and applause.] Well, what is the matter with you over there? [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I have got it pretty near to a point, evidently. I repeat the inquiry again; the gentleman can not escape it. If you want an army of 100,000 or 96,000 men, call it as you please, whom are you going to fight? [Renewed laughter and applause.]

I heard Speaker Reed say one thing which struck me forcibly at one time. He is a man that I have a great deal of respect for—a man of genius, and intelligence, and judgment. He said to us over here, "I pity you poor fellows; you don't know what to say." Now, what in the world is the matter with you gentlemen over there? [Laughter.] Whom are you going to fight? [Applause.] Now, I never was in favor of this war against the Filipinos. My record shows how I stood; but the country seems to have declared in favor of it. Gentlemen on the other side, you stand there like a set of dummies and will not tell us whom you are going to fight. [Laughter.] What is the matter with you? If you are not going to fight anybody, what do you want of an army? I should like to hear the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs answer that question. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who is a warm personal friend of mine, whom are you going to fight? Do you want to catch Aguinaldo?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not wonder that the gentleman asks the question, because we have whipped almost everything in sight. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Well, if you have whipped everything in sight, what do you want with an army of a hundred thousand men? [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to produce any pleasantry at all, but it seems to me that the question which I have asked is one that gentlemen can not answer. Gentlemen may say I have but one idea, but that is a better one than a good many men in this Congress have. You want to increase the standing army. When you undertook to increase the regiments in the artillery division, I called your attention to the fact that you can never reduce a standing army after you have once created it.

Whenever the institutions of the United States are threatened and it is necessary to protect them, give me the old volunteer soldier, with his own regimental officers and his own company officers, every time. There never was a battle fought in the United States—in the civil war or in any of our foreign wars—in which the victory was not achieved by our volunteers. I am not afraid of Tennesseans failing to defend the flag. We hold the proud distinction of being the banner volunteer State. That means that the citizens of the United States are ready to defend their Government whenever called upon. Is there a Republican over on the other side who says that is wrong? You can not maintain the United States as a republican government without the assistance or sanction of the volunteers. Talk as you may, I have no criticisms to make about our Army. It is good to a certain extent; it is bad to another extent; but if I had to fight a war for the United States, give me the old volunteer. Even if he had not been in the service more than three days I would depend on him. He would shoot.

Now, in conclusion, I wish to say a few words. When the last bill was under consideration by this House, I asked my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] what he wanted with 35,000 volunteers. He said they would show us after a while. Now, I want to know what are you going to do with an army of 96,000? Whom are you going to fight? I can not keep away from that question. Are you going to shoot the Filipinos? Is that your intention? Let me ask you one simple, common-sense question. What did the Filipinos ever do to us that should make you want to shoot them? When we were fighting Spain you thought they were very good allies. I say now, as I said when the first bill came to this House, I will not vote to take away the money from an honest soldier who is called into the service.

In my ten years' experience no man has ever heard me raise my voice or my hand against the old soldier, I do not care which side he was on. But if you are going to call out your 96,000 men to shoot the Filipinos, who are fighting for what we fought for, I will never vote a nickel for that proposition.

I beg you to remember one thing. You will never be able, after you have increased your standing army, to reduce it. You will never be able to create a great army and then reduce it. The circumstances which surround it make that impossible. But if you want to conquer the Filipinos and that is your idea, I think it will take you longer than you think. I am not in politics any more, and I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that I will never vote a dollar to shoot a man who is fighting in favor of his own independence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] in his remarks upon the bill said he would vote for a bill if it created 18,000 artillerymen to man our coast defenses. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the provisions of the bill making the artillery corps 18,920 men, both as a maximum and a minimum. The bill provides against any reduction in that corps when the Army shall be reduced. In this respect the bill meets every want of the gentleman from New York.

So that the gentleman's objection to the bill is entirely overcome by the provision itself. There is to be a reduction in the infantry and cavalry when the Army comes to its minimum, but none whatever in the artillery; and the increase in the artillery is made from year to year, precisely as the necessities of the Government require by the completion of the coast defenses. This estimate is made by officers who know what the needs of the Government will be.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], Mr. Chairman, seems to misapprehend the character of the measure before the House. It is not a question as to what we want to do or what will be done in the way of trade or future policy. It is a question of what the demands of the Government require to-day under the conditions confronting us. The war that we undertook was not a partisan one. All parties were for it. The results of the war, by which we have acquired territory, have been ratified by both Houses of Congress, after a treaty was negotiated, and the President of the United States, by his sworn duty to the people of the country, must maintain the authority of this Government over every foot of our territory as long as it remains our territory.

What shall be done in the future remains for this Congress or future Congresses to determine. What shall be done to-day is to maintain the authority of the Government, not only upon the mainland, but upon all the islands of the sea where our flag floats by authority of law [applause]; and when the gentleman from Massachusetts weighs the cost against what we are compelled to do in honor, it seems to me that he weighs dollars against the honor of this great Republic. [Renewed applause.] So far as I am concerned as an individual, I believe we will maintain our authority upon the Philippine Islands as long as the Republic endures.

Whether that will be the policy of the Government or not depends upon the wishes of the people of the United States in the future. But, Mr. Chairman, as long as they are ours we disgrace ourselves at home and abroad or we have got to supply the necessary force to maintain our authority. The gentleman speaks about fighting the Filipinos. We are. Why? Because they are fighting us. We did not begin it; we tried to avoid it.

With infinite patience and, as it seems to me, with great wisdom the President kept from organizing the larger force until the very last moment, hoping by his generous concessions for self-government and the liberty that would bring to them would obviate the necessity of organizing the extra 35,000 men; and they were only organized because the people in the islands, subject to the authority of the Government just as much as our people are, refused to yield assent to the demands of the constituted authorities of the United States. If the President had been anxious for a large army he would at once have organized the full force.

You talk about the Filipino establishing a government. Let them demonstrate the fact of their ability before turning it over to them. The opportunity is offered them by the wise and humane policy of the President to exercise local government. They refuse. We are there to-day, and have been there every day since we acquired our sovereignty, affording a local government so far as it has been possible to give it to them, and have gone to the extreme, in my judgment, in trying to induce these people to exercise local government. They have preferred lawlessness to order, murder and arson to settled conditions, and pillage to labor.

You talk about people fighting for their liberties. My good friends, let me say this to you, that the few numbers engaged in hostilities as against the United States Government do not demonstrate that the people of this country are forcing their sovereignty over an unwilling people. Less than 5 per cent of the Tagalog tribe are in revolt against our authority. All the rest of them are anxious to pursue the avocations of peace supported by the authority of the United States; and the time will not come when the people of this great Republic will treat on any terms whatever with any people of the islands in rebellion until they lay down their arms and acknowledge the jurisdiction of this country. The people of the United States are generous, but they are not cowards.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman before I conclude.

This condition confronts us, and this only, in my mind: We are in the Philippine Islands by solemn treaty. We are there under the sanction of law enacted by the Senate and House. Our power and our jurisdiction is as absolute there as in any part of the United States. We have over 60,000 troops in the Philippine Islands who are soon to be brought home. If you withdraw those troops from those stations without replacing them with others, you expose to murder every friend of this Government in the Philippine Islands. You destroy our authority. You encourage rebellion, and sow seeds in the future of untold loss of blood and treasure by such action. That is what confronts this Congress. Now I will listen to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. If there is only 5 per cent of the Filipinos, as you say, that resist the Government of the United States, why do you want an army of 96,000 men? [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. I am delighted if I can only enlighten my friend on that. A very small per cent in a country like the Philippines, without a government, as we understand the name, acting as brigands, rushing in and destroying property and killing their own kinsmen for friendship to us, can cover a large space of country and will require a considerable number of troops to protect them adequately, and this Government has taken on itself the obligation to protect established government in the Philippine Islands. I did not say 5 per cent of the 12,000,000 of inhabitants. That would be a larger number than our Army. It is not quite 5 per cent of the Tagalos tribe, which is about 1,000,000.

Mr. COX. I said that you said there was only about 5 per cent of the Filipinos resisting the authority of the United States.

Mr. HULL. I will qualify that if it will help my friend out by saying that it is not 5 per cent of the Tagalos tribe alone. But even if it were 5 per cent of the entire island, it strikes me that the other 95 per cent ought to have some consideration from so distinguished a patriot as my friend from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Will my friend yield——

Mr. HULL. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think that a permanent declaration of what our policy will be in regard to the islands would tend to pacify them?

Mr. HULL. I think not. I think it would have no effect at all, unless you had such a guaranty as that given by your late candidate for the Presidency, that we would stand between them and all foreign nations and let them play the devil with the people.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the gentleman think it would have no effect, beneficial or not, upon the people of the Philippine Islands? Is it not a matter to be desired?

Mr. HULL. I think the greatest mistake——

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I have not finished. Is it not a matter to be desired, since a permanent declaration of the policy of the Administration is desired by a great portion of this country and one that would give the inhabitants all the elements of our citizenship?

Mr. HULL. I want to say that they have had every assurance by proclamation that the largest measure of self-government of which they are capable would be granted to them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But what does that amount to?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Mississippi may say that they are as civilized as the rest of the world, but the testimony of the men who have been there is that they are not capable of self-government; that their idea of liberty is only the liberty to cut their enemies' throats. Now, we can wait until we reach the proper degree of information; let Congress take up that when they reach it. The idea that the Army has got to wait until such questions have been determined in the future is rather far-fetched.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why not make the establishment for the Philippine war?

Mr. HULL. Because we do not want to. This army is for the United States of America, and will go wherever the authority of the Government extends, and do what the necessities of the Government require. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. During the war between the States you enlisted men for this war.

Mr. HULL. That was a well-defined job we had to do, and it took us a good while to finish it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. As a matter of fact, between you and me, outside of the Philippine question, independently of it and beyond it, do you not want 90,000 men for a standing army?

Mr. HULL. Beyond it? No; most emphatically no. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] stated that it would require an act of Congress to compel the President to reduce the number because the bill makes it a permanent army of 100,000 men. What does the bill say? It says:

> That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

Do you think that is an unusual thing? Why, my good Democratic friends, from the day of George Washington to the present time the Congress of the United States has put the Army up and down at its own pleasure.

Mr. KING. Has the President done so?

Mr. HULL. Yes, repeatedly, and been authorized to do it. But even if he does not, the whole question is in the hands of Congress. Gentlemen seem to forget that we have a three years' enlistment. About one-third of the entire force of the Regular Army goes out every year. You talk as though you could not refuse to appropriate because men are enlisted for three years. You can stop the enlistment any year and one-third will step out. Another year you can stop another third. You have the power in your own hands all the time. You talk as though this was as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Two years ago we passed a bill giving 100,000 men for two years, and a larger number of officers by nearly 500 than this bill provides for.

Mr. SULZER rose.

Mr. HULL. I decline to yield at present.

Mr. SULZER. I simply want to ask whether the gentleman will consent to that now?

Mr. HULL. No; that is easily answered.

Mr. HAY rose.

Mr. HULL. In one moment I will yield to my friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY], whom I am always delighted to work with and sorry when I disagree with him.

We took that bill. At that time every man in the Senate and House conceded that we needed an army of 100,000 men. Gentlemen said that in two years they could tell what we needed as a permanent army. You [addressing the Democratic side] cost the Government at least $25,000,000 additional by your bill beyond what our bill would have cost.

Mr. WHEELER. And you cost the Government three hundred millions by refusing to declare your policy.

Mr. HULL. Our Democratic friends want to know why it would not be well to limit this increase of the Army to two years. I say that if we provide for a permanent establishment, then if we need this army two years from now, we shall have it, without the large expense of recruiting a new army; and if we do not need it, the matter will adjust itself without any harm to the Government.

Mr. HAY. Now will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman has stated on three different occasions that our party forced upon the country the bill which is now in operation, and thereby caused a great deal of the expense which has been incurred. I want to ask him whether his party at that time did not have a majority in the House and in the Senate, and whether they had not a President of their own party? How, then, can the responsibility for legislation enacted at that time be shifted upon the shoulders of gentlemen on this side of the House?

Mr. HULL. It is true, as the gentleman has said, that we had a majority in this House and that we had the President of the United States, but those other gentlemen had the Senate——

Mr. HAY. No, we had not.

Mr. HULL. And the Senate notified us that unless we accepted their compromise, bad as it was, the defects of which were pointed out in debate here and fully recognized, we could go without an army; that they could talk in the Senate until the 4th of March, and thus force an extra session. We accepted that measure simply as a temporary makeshift. We ought not to have accepted it. But now you gentlemen want to continue that same expensive, worthless system of makeshifts from year to year, in order to go before the people trying to frighten them with the idea of a great standing army. You gentlemen tried that in the last campaign, and I should imagine that the average Democrat had had all of that kind of amusement he would want, because in every place where the question was discussed the people said, "Give the President every man he wants to maintain the authority of this Government." [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER. Does the gentleman think it fair to allude to the last election?

Mr. HULL. No; it is not. It is never proper to speak disrespectfully of the dead. [Applause and laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as the policy of this Government in regard to the future is concerned, this Congress can not establish that absolutely. The next Congress can do as it pleases in these matters. But this one thing is sure—that the people of the United States have never yet turned down a party that believed in growth and expansion and in the dignity and power and majesty of the people of the United States. They believe in their flag, in their institutions; they believe in our future. The party that has no better thing to appeal to than prejudice and reaction and opposition can never hope to rule in this Republic. [Applause.]

There is one other thing to which I wish to refer. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] referred to the great cost of the Army of the United States. Gentlemen, it does cost more to support a United States soldier than it does to support the soldier of any other nation on earth. Thank God for that. Germany pays her soldiers, if I remember rightly, about $2.50 a month; Austria, about 90 cents a month; France, about $2.50 a month; England, $9 a month. At the same time these nations manage, by a series of fines, to bring the private out about even with the Government every month. We do not believe in that kind of thing. We have no compulsory military service in this country. Our soldier is the volunteer; whether you call him a regular or not, he is a volunteer. Both the volunteer and the regular are citizens of the Republic. Each of them enlists by his own volition; each of them must furnish a certificate of good character.

Would my friend from Massachusetts advocate giving to our soldiers what is now given to the soldiers of the Old World? We have not acted that way in regard to the labor of the United States. His State has been built up into a great hive of industry by putting into practice the American theory that an American citizen is entitled to higher wages than any other man on earth. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts in favor of reducing our soldiers to a level with the European soldier because he is afraid of the expense? Let me advise him, then, to remove the shield of the Government from before the face of the workingman of Massachusetts and let him take his stand with the rest of the world. He would not last long as a statesman there if he advocated that.

Massachusetts has always had some man in public life opposed to every step forward. All through the course of our Indian wars Massachusetts had some man to advocate always the theory that we had no right to capture the wilds of the West. Massachusetts has always had some man afraid, as Phillips said once, to brush the cobwebs from the rafters for fear the roof of the house would fall in. Massachusetts has always had men in great crises to oppose the onward march of the Republic. Some of her citizens did this in 1814, and have done it at every opportunity since. But, thank God, the heart of the great old Commonwealth has always been true to the best interests of the country, and her people have been against her recreant sons.

Mr. COX. Now I want to ask the gentleman a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, my friend from Tennessee and I have had so many interesting seances in the committee that I hope he will not bring them up here on the floor of the House.

Mr. COX. I only want to ask you a short question.

Mr. HULL. I can not find it in my heart to decline to yield to my friend.

Mr. COX. I am sorry that the chairman of the committee will not allow me——

Mr. HULL. I have yielded and yielded to the gentleman. I am always glad to yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. Well, I do not find that the gentleman has overburdened himself in yielding to me to-day. [Laughter.]

But my point is this: That so far as the soldier is concerned, I have never said a word in Congress against any soldier; I do not care on which side he fought.

Now, then, what do you want with these soldiers? [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. I tried to explain to the gentleman from Tennessee why we wanted the Army more than once during the course of my remarks, and if, after all that has been said upon that subject in the committee and on the floor of the House, he is not satisfied, I am afraid to enter upon a further explanation for his benefit. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to put in the RECORD a table showing the cost of the different armies of the world, the per diem pay of the soldier in the different armies of the world, and a general table showing the expenses of the armies of different countries, which I understand I have a right to submit at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Iowa will be permitted to print such tables as he may desire in connection with the pending bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. The general debate being now ended, I ask for the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the approval of this bill the Army of the United States shall consist of 15 regiments of cavalry, a corps of artillery, 30 regiments of infantry, 1 Lieutenant-General, 6 major-generals, 15 brigadier-generals, an Adjutant-General's Department, an Inspector-General's Department, a Judge-Advocate-General's Department, a Quartermaster's Department, a Subsistence Department, a Medical Department, a Pay Department, an Engineer Corps, an Ordnance Department, a Signal Corps, the officers of the Record and Pension Office, the chaplains, the officers and enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, the professors, corps of cadets, the army-service detachment and band at the United States Military Academy, and such other officers and enlisted men as may hereinafter be provided for: Provided, That when a vacancy shall occur through death, retirement, or other separation from active service in the office of storekeeper, now provided for by law in the Quartermaster's Department and Ordnance Department, respectively, said office shall cease to exist.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is the bill now being read for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DALZELL). It is.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it up. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert after the word "exist," in line 11, page 11, the following:

"Provided, That any vacancy in the offices of the Pay Department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Ordnance Department, or Medical Department may be filled by appointment from the Army or from civil life."

Mr. HEPBURN. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, from the examination that I have been able to make of this bill——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding further, I raise the point of order to this amendment that it is not germane to this paragraph, because this simply goes on to tell what shall comprise the Army. There are sections further on in the bill which tell how the different corps shall be filled. There is certainly nothing in this paragraph that would justify an amendment of this character.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think it makes any difference where it comes. It is pertinent here.

Mr. HULL. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph simply deals with the general statement of what the Army shall consist of, without any reference whatever to the matter covered by the amendment, without any reference whatever to how the different departments shall be constituted, and that other sections of the bill deal with that question, which will be reached as we progress.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think there is any other section where it would be more appropriate than here. There is clearly nothing in the nature of this bill to prohibit an amendment of the character I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that there is a point in the bill where such an amendment would be germane?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes. There are sections that deal with the question how these different forces shall be made up. All the staff corps have specific provisions in the bill as to how they shall be constituted. This section does not deal with that question at all, but simply deals with the question what corps and divisions shall comprise the Army, without regard to the make-up of the different divisions.

Mr. HEPBURN. What sections does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. HULL. There are sections relating to the Pay Department and to all the other departments.

Mr. HEPBURN. But each section applies to a specific corps.

Mr. HULL. Yes, and you can strike out that provision and make any general provision that you desire.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Sections 26, 27, and 28 relate especially to the subject.

Mr. HULL. Certainly, sections 26, 27, and 28 relate to the details. The gentleman could move to strike out those sections and put in the provision which he has offered. The amendment certainly is not in order at this part of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will submit to the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point is well taken, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, I will offer the amendment at the proper time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the enlisted force of the Corps of Engineers shall consist of one band and three battalions of engineers. The engineers band shall be organized as now provided by law for bands of infantry regiments. Each battalion of engineers shall consist of 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, and 4 companies. Each company of engineers shall consist of 1 first sergeant; 1 quartermaster-sergeant, with the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant; 8 sergeants, 10 corporals, 2 musicians, 2 cooks, 38 first-class and 38 second-class privates: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, increase the number of sergeants in any company of engineers to 12, the number of corporals to 18, the number of first-class privates to 64, and the number of second-class privates to 64, but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not, at any time, be exceeded.

Mr. HULL. In the first line of section 11 the letter "s" has been dropped off from the word "engineer," which should be "engineers."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment suggested by the gentleman will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall consist of one Judge-Advocate-General with the rank of brigadier-general two judge-advocates with the rank of colonel, three judge-advocates with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, six judge-advocates with the rank of major, and for each geographical department or tactical division of troops not provided with a judge-advocate from the list of officers holding permanent commissions in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department one judge-advocate with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, mounted. Promotions to vacancies above the grade of major, created or caused by this act, shall be made, according to the rules of seniority, from officers now holding commission in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department. Vacancies created or caused by this act in the grade of major may be filled by appointment of officers holding commissions as judge-advocate of volunteers since April 21, 1897, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War. Vacancies which may occur hereafter in the grade of major in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall be filled by selection of officers of the line.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to lines 17 and 18 in section 15 on page 19, to the words "under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War." My amendment is to strike out the words which I have quoted.

Mr. HULL. The same words appear in all of the sections relating to the staff corps that are open to appointment from civil life. The President makes the appointments. I understand the idea of my friend from Illinois is that if the President makes the appointment, and it is confirmed by the Senate, that ought to be sufficient without the limitation which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has quoted. The committee have no objection to striking that out, and have no feeling about it one way or the other. Those words were simply put in because the sections were sent to us in that form.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that my reason for offering the amendment is that if a man has performed service in the war with Spain or in the Philippines, in the Volunteer Army, and if the President appoints such an officer and the Senate confirms the appointment, that man ought to go into the service without the consent of the Secretary of War, and without any regulations that might be made from the standpoint, perhaps, of some martinet in the service, if there be any such. Possibly there may be officers who have done service in the Philippines in the Volunteer Army that may not be able to calculate the distance from the earth to the sun, but who are good soldiers in fact, and could do good service after their nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion about physical examination, health, etc.? These are usual regulations.

Mr. CANNON. I think we can trust the President and the Senate. Given the volunteer officer, given the vacancy under this Army bill that we are now proposing to pass, it seems to me the President and the Senate could be trusted, without adding qualifications that might be equal to a civil-service examination, and perhaps much more severe, and bar out, perchance, worthy volunteer officers. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to amend, in the same line, 17, by striking out the word "seven" and inserting the word "eight." It is 1898 all the way through the bill, and it was intended to be that here.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "ninety-seven" and insert the word "ninety-eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the Quartermaster's Department shall consist of 1 Quartermaster-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 6 quartermasters with the rank of colonel, 9 quartermasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 18 quartermasters with the rank of major, 54 quartermasters with the rank of captain, mounted; the military storekeeper now provided for by law, and 150 post quartermaster-sergeants: Provided, That all vacancies in the grade of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, as now prescribed by law. That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain created by this act in the Quartermaster's Department the President is authorized to appoint officers of volunteers commissioned since April 21, 1898, and whose professional and physical fitness have been established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in order to make the bill conform to the amendment just adopted, I move to strike out all after the word "ninety-eight," in lines 21, 22, and 23:

And whose professional and physical fitness have been established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa this question: Would not it meet the purpose of your amendment and at the same time preserve some little security in the matter of physical fitness if you merely strike out the words "to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War?"

Mr. HULL. I assume that a man who has made his record by actual service will not be put in the Army by the President if he is an unfit man to go in.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The President may not be informed.

Mr. HULL. The War Department has the whole record with it, and before a single man is appointed the President will have this record. The fear of some gentlemen was that by setting up a stiff technical examination for a volunteer quartermaster or commissary or others it would be impossible for the volunteer to pass the examination unless he was a graduate and recent graduate of some college. Personally I do not believe there is a particle of danger of that, but with the words out or not the President will undoubtedly inquire into the efficiency of every man now in the Army presented to him for commission in the Regular Army, and the Senate will undoubtedly make examination on their own account before voting to confirm.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is stricken out and left entirely out of the bill, does it not still leave with the President the right to prescribe any rule for physical examination?

Mr. HULL. No doubt. I do not think that it will make any change at all, but it obviates some objection made to the bill on this side, and as it does no harm to the service, I am willing that it shall go out.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter from the Quartermaster's Department, transmitted to me by the Secretary of War, and I desire to offer an amendment after conferring with some members of the committee, but I do not offer it as a committee amendment. I have no authority to offer it as such. The Secretary of War sends it to me with the simple statement that the Department sending up their propositions, in considering the number of officers provided for their departments in the pending bill for the reorganization of the Army, claim that the number which was submitted was insufficient. I will now ask to have read the letter from the Quartermaster-General, which will give all the information I could possibly give and more.

The letter was read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 3, 1900.

SIR: In referring to the advance copy of the proposed bill, prepared by the War Department, for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, it is observed that the bill provides for only 88 officers for the Quartermaster's Department. This number is so inadequate, in the judgment of the undersigned, that special attention is called thereto.

The department has now 128 officers, including both regulars and volunteers. After a most careful consideration of this subject, this office reported to the Secretary of War, in letter of August 25 last, that a reduction of 6 officers might be made without detriment to the service. The War department bill provides for a reduction of 40 officers from the number now in service. Considering the magnitude and importance of the work with which this department is charged, covering at this time the supply of troops in the United States, Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, China, and the Philippines, with the great supply depots and the transport service to be efficiently managed and maintained, and the enormous quantities of quartermaster supplies to be constantly purchased, inspected, and distributed, this reduction—in the opinion of the Quartermaster-General—can not be made without resulting in great injury to the public service.

In this connection I desire to state that since the beginning of the Spanish-American war this department has been frequently embarrassed in finding officers to meet all the requirements of the service, and at this time there is not a single officer fit for duty unassigned. The chief quartermaster at Manila has recently informed me that other officers of the Quartermaster's Department will be constantly required there to take the place of those rendered unfit for duty by reason of the unfavorable climatic conditions incident to Philippine service.

In view of the foregoing, I feel that I would be derelict in my public duty did I not call attention to this matter, with a view to rectifying what may be an oversight in fixing, in the proposed Army reorganization measure, the small number of officers for this department. I regard 122 officers as the very lowest number which can properly and efficiently transact the business pertaining to this department, and earnestly urge and recommend that Congress be requested to supply that number. This department can not be expected to assume the great responsibility resting upon it by law and regulations if an adequate force of officers is not furnished by Congress to perform the work.

I further call attention to the age limit provided in the proposed bill at which volunteer quartermasters will be allowed to receive appointment in the permanent establishment of the department. This limit will prevent a large majority of the most valuable volunteer officers from being appointed, thereby depriving the department of their experience and services. Many of the volunteer officers have been performing such efficient and responsible duties since the beginning of the war with Spain that they are, in my judgment, entitled to special consideration, and it is hoped and recommended that this bar to the appointment of the most meritorious of these officers be eliminated from the bill, leaving to the Secretary of War and the President, in their discretion, the consideration of each case on its merits as to whether appointment in the regular establishment would or would not enhance the public interests.

I notice also in this proposed measure that a very small increase in the higher grades of this department is provided for. It seems proper that the Quartermaster's Department, composed of 122 officers, should have a greater proportion of colonels, lieutenant-colonels, and majors than a staff corps having but half or a fourth of this number of officers. I hope, therefore, that this may be rectified, and that the higher grades be fixed and this department established on the basis recommended in my communication of August 25 last, viz, 1 brigadier-general, 8 colonels, 16 lieutenant-colonels, 30 majors, and 67 captains. The military storekeeper will retire early in January next, and the vacancy will not be filled.

It is recommended that favorable consideration be given to the foregoing by the honorable the Secretary of War, and that this letter be transmitted to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House for consideration in connection with the Army reorganization measure now being framed by that committee.

Very respectfully,
M. I. LUDINGTON,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, after consultation with those members of the committee I could reach, and believing that the Quartermaster-General's statement is correct, and that they should have more officers than this bill gives them, I move to amend the section by striking out the word "six," in line 9, and inserting the word "seven." That would make one additional colonel. Also, in line 10, strike out "nine" and insert "eleven;" and in line 11 strike out "fifty-four" and insert "seventy-two." That will give about 119. A hundred and twenty-two, he says, is what he absolutely needs, but he also, in his supplemental statement, says that 118 is the closest approach to the danger line that it is possible to run and administer his Department.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have not heard you make any change in the number of majors.

Mr. HULL. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I thought I included them. There should be twenty-eight. I move to strike out in lines 10 and 11 the word "eighteen" and insert "twenty-eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, page 20, strike out the word "six" and insert "seven."
In line 10 strike out "nine" and insert "eleven."
At the end of line 11 strike out "eighteen" and insert "twenty-eight."
In line 11 strike out "fifty-four" and insert "seventy-two."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, in examining the bill since I called the attention of the committee to the amendment I offered, I am unable to find any place where the gentleman from Iowa might not make a captious objection on the ground of want of similarity if he saw fit, and it may be that I will have to divide the amendment I want to make.

Mr. HULL. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he is not willing to let this go over and examine sections 36 and 37 of the bill, which is in regard to the detail system.

Mr. HEPBURN. By dividing my amendment there is one part of it which I am satisfied is germane to this paragraph, and I offer to amend by adding to the end of the paragraph the following, "Provided, That any vacancy in the Quartermaster's Department may be filled by appointment from civil life or from volunteers serving since April 21, 1898."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That any vacancy in the Quartermaster's Department may be filled by appointment from civil life or from volunteers serving since April 21, 1898.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered affects the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence Department, the Pay Department, and the Medical Department, the four departments that may properly be called the supply departments of the Army, and the departments that do not require for the efficient discharge of the duties military science or military knowledge and experience. On the contrary, what is wanted in these departments is a business capacity as distinguished from a military capacity.

I am satisfied that I could cite instances in the history of this country during the last three years that show conclusively that the method which we have adopted for filling these four corps has not been a success. You will remember some two years ago it became necessary to send an expedition to the eastern end of the island of Cuba. Sixteen thousand men were sent. They were sent under the immediate control, or so far as the loading of their ships, furnishing them with supplies, under the control of the Quartermaster's Department. Yet we have authority for saying that in the fitting out of that expedition some parts of the battery would be sent on one ship, some parts on another, and again on a third ship would be a portion of the same battery. They were sent there without any method, or any means whatever for unloading, although it was known that they were to unload from a roadstead a mile or more from shore, and yet there were neither launches nor boats of any character to facilitate their unloading.

We were told at the time that it became necessary because of this inefficient action of the Quartermaster's Department to throw animals—mules and horses—into the sea a mile or more from shore, and some of them succeeded at last in reaching it, while others were lost by going in the wrong direction. We know that at the time we got the news of the first military performance on the east end of that island, that when we heard that complaints were made as to these things, that the responsibility was thrown upon the Quartermaster's Department that there was not sufficient means to transport supplies and to move the army after they got them on land. So that I say in my judgment it can not be claimed that this branch of the service is to be improved by adhering to the old methods of filling these corps.

I believe that the President ought to have the opportunity and the power of selecting efficient men without regard to their service in the Army. I can conceive of no reason why long experience in the military service adds materially to the fitness of an officer to discharge the duties of quartermaster. This is par excellence a business place, where you need activity and energy and good common sense, and where you need to be relieved, as far as possible, from the routine of red tape and from those methods that grow up after long years of usage and custom in a given line.

Mr. BROMWELL. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to the reading of this paragraph, commencing on line 17. I think his proposed amendment will have to take the place of this last sentence, or else the sentence will have to be largely modified, because it is a proviso that vacancies in the grade of captain shall be filled by appointments from the volunteers, etc. The gentleman's provision is a general one for filling all vacancies.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have noticed what the gentleman states, but I want to see whether the House has any disposition whatever to adopt this amendment, and if so I shall be glad to have the assistance of the gentleman in making the bill conform to the general idea embraced in my proposition. And, Mr. Chairman, I may add that I would propose to apply this rule of appointment from civil life or from the volunteers to all four of the corps to which I have referred.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is necessary to enter upon a discussion of the amendment at this time. But I wish to say in reply to the gentleman's criticism of the Quartermaster's Department as to moving troops to Santiago without proper arrangements having been made in advance, that the very necessity of the case demanded that those troops should be moved without proper arrangements having been provided. They could not be provided without long delay, and delay meant probable defeat of the movement. Transports were chartered and rushed down to Key West and from there to Santiago.

The Government had made no preparations whatever for moving troops by water up to the war with Spain. The necessity for an immediate advance was regarded as imperative, if our troops were to accomplish the great purpose which was afterwards accomplished. And when they reached Santiago there was no wharf for them to land at; there were no facilities for disembarking, although the Navy and the Army were cooperating in the transportation of troops and the landing of troops and supplies.

Mr. STEELE. The lighter was lost.

Mr. HULL. Yes; the lighter was lost.

If we had waited until preparations such as those suggested by the gentleman from Iowa had been made, the war might have been going on for some months after the time when it in fact closed and more suffering and loss of life entailed than was caused by the prompt advance.

But I appeal to the gentlemen whether it is not true that as soon as it was known what the Government needed in this line the Quartermaster's Department met all the requirements of that occasion, and of every occasion that came up, with a wonderful ability in providing for the transportation and care of troops on land and water.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to conclude this question to-night——

Mr. HEPBURN. One moment, before the gentleman makes the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. HULL. I withhold that motion, of course.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no disposition to criticise querulously any branch of the Army. I have as much pride in it and in the aggregate of its great performances as my colleague or anyone else. But I am not blind to certain defects in that organization, and I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that after the expedition to which I have referred was prepared for sailing it went back because of a report that a hostile fleet might be in the way, and remained for many days at Tampa. I insist that the gentleman who had charge of this expedition knew where the landing was to be; knew that there would be no wharf for them to land at; knew that the unlading of those vessels must be from the open sea; and under those circumstances efficient men would have had at hand the necessary facilities to carry on that proceeding in a proper and orderly way.

It will not do to say that those gentlemen, charged with that responsible duty, and who proved so derelict, had not knowledge of all the circumstances of the case. They knew all the surroundings; and I believe that if there had been an infusion of new blood in that force—if it had been possible for the President to call to his aid, as the Secretary of War in one instance did, men from the outside—the lamentable exhibition that was made would not have been made. I remember that when those grave duties incident to the Quartermaster's Department devolved with such suddenness upon the Secretary of War he did not rely upon the Regular Army or the Quartermaster's Department. He called to his aid business men from the outside, and it was they who provided the transports. They were the men who did the active duties that brought credit in the greatest degree to the performances of the Army.

It was by reason of the fact that the Secretary of War was able to do this at that time that we reaped such marked advantage as we did. I want to put in the power of the President in all instances the right to call to his aid efficient men; and I do not believe that our systems of Army life do give efficiency in business matters.

I am willing to say that military experience is essential in the command of troops, essential in the laying out of campaigns and in all matters of strategy; but there is no reason in the world why a man should become fitted for the duties of a quartermaster simply because he has been in the American Army. On the contrary, there are many reasons why he may become unfitted for the best discharge of the duties of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa seems to assume, in the first place, that the Quartermaster's Department was perfectly organized for war when the war came, while it is well known that Congress had been, year after year since the close of the civil war, clipping off that and all other staff departments, here and there. Nearly all of the officers of the Quartermaster's Department had been taken from civil life, so that the very splendid efficiency of that department may help to bear out the argument of my colleague, but not his conclusions. They were trained men, but of such limited number as to make it impossible for them to do all the immense increase of work. Congress is to blame, not the department. We ignored the advice of every educated soldier, to provide a larger staff in peace than was absolutely needed, so that we could be prepared for war, and crippled the staff corps even for a peace establishment.

We provided in the volunteer act for a large number of men from civil life, who were rushed into the service without preparation or previous training, who finally, in many instances, came to be most efficient officers, and the idea that the Quartermaster's Department, because the troops were brought back to Key West after starting, could provide for their landing in Cuba in advance of any knowledge of the place of landing shows that my friend has given but little thought to the matter.

Mr. HEPBURN. At all events, facilities for landing might have been provided.

Mr. HULL (continuing). And the Quartermaster's Department did not know where the troops were going. From the moment the troops were placed on the transport they were under the control of the General of the Army and under his orders and the military authorities here and at Tampa. It might have been a bad thing, but as a matter of fact it resulted at last in good. The Quartermaster's Department could not send men to Santiago in advance of the troops to provide a place of landing. They had no money for the accomplishment of that purpose assigned to them by the Secretary of War in the first place, and in the second place they would not have lived long after they had landed there and undertook to do the work under the circumstances then existing, without an army to protect them.

My friend will also remember that a lighter was provided and started off with the troops. This was wrecked, and would my friend say that they ought to wait and stop the expedition until another lighter could have been procured rather than take the chance of losing a mule by landing from the vessels as was done? We unloaded safely the food for the troops, the arms, and the men themselves. It was a matter of grave difficulty to furnish the rations to the men on the fighting line at first, but the organization of pack trains, composed of men and mules, which had been safely landed, in a little while enabled the Department to provide full rations for all the men engaged in the service on the fighting line.

The Army suffered a great deal, it is true. War means suffering in an active campaign; but the boys who did the fighting have not complained. They, the regulars and the volunteers, standing shoulder to shoulder on the fighting line, knew that the Government was doing everything that could be done in their behalf, and they were satisfied that there was no neglect or want of care as far as their interests were concerned. The capture of 22,000 Spanish soldiers by less than 17,000 American soldiers is a practical illustration of the capacity of the men who stood on the fighting line and endured the hardships and dangers.

In this connection let me say that the line and staff of the Army worked in absolute harmony. There is no legitimate criticism on the staff for what took place in reference to the shipment of troops from Tampa to Santiago.

I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized, if I may be recognized at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has moved that the committee rise.

Mr. HULL. I will withdraw that motion if the gentleman from Mississippi desires to proceed now. I will state to him, however, that the debate under the five-minute rule will proceed when this bill is taken up again.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not understand the situation. It is now after 5 o'clock, and I understand that the five-minute debate will proceed to-morrow when this bill comes up. I will take occasion then to ask recognition.

Mr. HULL. We may not take up the bill to-morrow. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HULL. I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to renew a request I made a short time ago. I am informed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and by one or two others—I know not, of course, after how full a conference—that if we ask unanimous consent that the bill known as the "Grout bill," which was fixed as a special order for to-morrow, be taken up on Monday next, there would be no objection. I ask now of the members present if that is the understanding?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. No; it is not. I object.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman object to unanimous consent to go on with this bill to-morrow, and let the Grout bill come up immediately afterwards?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, prior to the adjournment of Congress last June a majority of the House was in favor of the present consideration of the Grout bill—an overwhelming majority. We were overruled, and as a compromise accepted the special order fixing the consideration of the bill for the 6th day of December—to-morrow. I can not consent to any arrangement that will vacate that order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 4, 1900.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

I hereby respectfully resign my place on the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

THOMAS HEDGE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointments:

To the Committee on Pensions, Mr. WILLIAM RICHARDSON, of Alabama.

To the Committee on the Public Lands, Mr. FRANCIS R. LASSITER, of Virginia.

To the Committee on Railways and Canals, Mr. JOSIAH L. KERR, of Maryland.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. MCCALL, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Charles S. Hall, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention to House bill 11327, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and is returned, with the request that it be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Without objection, this change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 12283) in relation to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia; when the Speaker signed the same.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1358. An act to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPRINT OF THE ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the edition of the Army bill as printed has been entirely exhausted, and there is such a constant demand for it that I ask unanimous consent that a reprint be ordered of the bill and report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the Army bill, S. 4300.

Mr. HULL. And also the report.

The SPEAKER. Including the report upon that bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that the gentleman from Iowa asks leave to reprint the Senate bill with the House amendments.

Mr. HULL. The whole thing is together. I suppose it would mean that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It ought to be reprinted in that form.

Mr. HULL. The whole thing, in the form in which it now appears?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is understood. You mean the Senate bill with the House amendments.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

And then, on motion of Mr. HULL (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 6, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LANDS IN WASHINGTON CITY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 6, 1900, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with a copy of a report from Col. Theo. A. Bingham, submitting plans, estimate of cost, etc., for the treatment of that section of the District of Columbia situated south of Pennsylvania avenue, etc.

The Chair does not know to what committee the communication should go.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think beyond a question it should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia primarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the manuscript ordered printed. I think the Chair had perhaps better not order the plans to be printed until the committee has examined them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not. The manuscript will be sufficient.

REPORT OF THE LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Librarian of Congress for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON REINDEER IN ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon "The introduction of domestic reindeer into the district of Alaska" for the year 1900.

The Chair calls the attention of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to this report.

Mr. TELLER. I have a resolution to offer, providing for the printing of an extra number of copies, which I suppose must go to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where will the Senator have the report go?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know where the report ought to go. I want to have it printed, and that is about all there is of it. It should go to the Committee on Appropriations, I suppose.

Mr. KYLE. The Committee on Territories.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing, with the accompanying map.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. VEST. What is the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order, but if there is no objection it will be received.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies additional to the usual number of the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon the Introduction of Domestic Reindeer into the District of Alaska, for 1900, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 6,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Education.

LIST OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of buildings under the control of that Department for which, for reasons stated in each case, it is necessary, in order to insure their proper completion, that the limit of cost should be extended by Congress; which, on motion of Mr. ALLISON, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR AT GALVESTON, TEX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with a copy of a report of the Board of Engineers recently convened at Galveston, Tex., to make an examination of the effect of the storm of September 8, 1900, on the jetties and main ship channel at Galveston.

The communication and accompanying papers will be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the accompanying plans will be referred to the committee without printing.

The Chair also lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with copy of a report of the Board of Engineers recently convened at Galveston, Tex., for the purpose of reporting upon the damage to the fortifications at Galveston Harbor by the hurricane of September 8, 1900, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with a copy of a report of the Board of Engineers recently convened at Galveston, Tex., for the purpose of investigating the effect of the storm of September 8, 1900, on the jetties of the Brazos River, etc.

The communication and manuscript will be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the plans accompanying the same will be referred to the committee without printing.

NATIONAL ARMORY, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with law, a statement exhibiting the expenditures at the Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass., for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM. The communication should go to the Committee on Appropriations, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask that it shall go to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the communication should go to the Committee on Appropriations. These appropriations are usually made in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONTRACTS FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army calling attention to the necessity for suspending indefinitely the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the War Department, which provisions of law were last suspended by the act of February 24, 1900, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF OHIO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President, appointed in the State of Ohio, at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague, certifying his reelection to the Senate for the period of six years commencing March 4, 1901. I ask that the credentials be read and take the usual course.

The Secretary read the credentials of AUGUSTUS O. BACON, chosen by the legislature of the State of Georgia a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1901; and they were ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented 72 petitions of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 260 citizens of Illinois, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Quincy Freight Bureau, of Quincy, Ill., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Quincy Freight Bureau, of Quincy, Ill., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the war-revenue law repealing the provisions of Section A, requiring revenue stamps to be affixed to express receipts, bills of lading, telegrams, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of C. W. Sawyer Post, No. 17, Department of New Hampshire, Grand Army of the Republic, of Dover, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference to veterans in the public service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented 23 petitions of citizens of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented 88 petitions of citizens of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. QUARLES presented 33 petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church, of Morrisville, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCOTT presented 38 petitions of citizens of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of Heber Le Favour Post, No. 181, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, of Milford, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference to veterans in the public service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Historical Club of Detroit; of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church of Plainwell, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Plainwell, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPOONER presented 11 petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the board of managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of New York, praying for an extension of the treaty of 1892 by the exclusion of all intoxicants from all countries inhabited chiefly by native races; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FRYE presented seven petitions of citizens of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

TEMPLE FARM AND MOORE HOUSE, AT YORKTOWN, VA.

Mr. HOAR. I present resolutions of the legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which, in accordance with the usual custom, I suppose will be read at the desk, and I desire to call the attention of the Senators from Virginia to these resolutions.

The memorial was read, as follows:

Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In the year one thousand nine hundred.
Resolutions relative to the purchase of Temple Farm and Moore House, at Yorktown, Va., by the United States Government.

Whereas the Moore House, and Temple Farm, upon which it is situated, at Yorktown, Va., will carry with them through all time memories of the siege and victory by which the allied armies of France and the American colonies secured the independence of our nation; and

Whereas it is reported that the property can at this time be bought for a nominal sum, and it is believed that the product of the farm will be sufficient to keep the buildings in repair, and the buildings are so situated as to be well adapted for Government purposes on occasions of naval inspection and reviews on York River: Be it

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth be, and are hereby, requested to consider and, if in their judgment they can wisely do so, to support a bill for the purchase of Temple Farm and Moore House, at Yorktown, Va., by the Government of the United States of America: Provided, That the cost of the said farm with its improvements shall not exceed a reasonable sum: And be it

Resolved, That properly attested copies of these resolutions be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 29, 1900.

Adopted. Sent up for concurrence.

JAMES W. KIMBALL, Clerk.

SENATE, June 4, 1900.

Adopted in concurrence.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk.

A true copy. Attest:

JAMES W. KIMBALL,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I am much gratified to find the interest taken by the State of Massachusetts in this matter. It is a subject which has attracted a good deal of attention in Virginia, and it has had to some extent already the attention of the Senators from that State. A bill will be presented at an early day intended to carry out the purposes expressed in the memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What reference does the Senator from Massachusetts desire?

Mr. HOAR. Let the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

MARY A. MOORE.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the bill (S. 532) to increase the pension of Mary A. Moore, widow of Col. David Moore, late colonel Twenty-first and Fifty-first Regiments Missouri Volunteers, I present memoranda and data by Hon. John W. Noble, late Secretary of the Interior, in regard to Colonel Moore, and I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

MICHAEL CONNOR.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill (S. 551) granting a pension to Michael Connor, I present the affidavits of Michael Connor and the affidavits of Andrew Condra and James Kinsley. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions for consideration in connection with that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11588) permitting the building of a dam across the Osage River at the city of Warsaw, Benton County, Mo., reported it without amendment.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT DUBUQUE, IOWA.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a brief bill and of a local character. I ask that it may be now considered. It will take but a moment.

The bill (S. 5053) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900, is hereby amended by striking out the words "two hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary of War relating to this subject may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 3, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: Your telegram of 16th ultimo, bespeaking the approval of the plans of a bridge proposed to be constructed by the Dubuque and Wisconsin Bridge Company across the Mississippi River in the vicinity of Eagle Point, in the city of Dubuque, Iowa, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 6, 1900, was received during my absence from the city.

Replying thereto, I beg to state that the plans submitted by the company do not comply with the requirements of the act under which they are submitted, section 2 of which act provides "that said bridge, between the Iowa shore and the lowlands or islands on the Wisconsin side of the river, shall be constructed with unbroken and continuous spans, and the main span shall be over the main navigable channel of the river and shall give a clear width of waterway not less than 350 feet. * * * The remaining spans shall each give a clear width of waterway of not less than 200 feet." Instead of one channel span of 350 feet and other spans of 200 feet, the plans provide for two channel spans of 380 feet each and two side spans of 175 each, and while it is thought by the engineer officers and others concerned that this arrangement would give increased facilities for navigation, at the same time offering less obstruction to the flow of the water, I would not feel justified in giving the present plans my approval unless Congress should change the act so as to legalize the proposed spans which are of less width than the minimum fixed by the act referred to.

The proposed plans and location of the bridge are favorably indorsed by the engineer authorities and will receive the approval of the Department upon the passage of the necessary legislation.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
United States Senate.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BURROWS on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Privileges and Elections, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said committee, and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT of New York on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for by law.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5054) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5055) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors confined in so-called Confederate prisons; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 5062) to provide for building and maintaining an Indian industrial school at or near Evarts, in the State of South Dakota, and to provide a farm in conjunction therewith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5063) for the relief of the Missouri State Lunatic Asylum No. 1, at Fulton, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5064) to grant an honorable discharge to William B. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5065) granting an increase of pension to George F. Bowers; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill, I present the petition of George F. Bowers, together with the affidavits of Dr. George D. Coe, Renard Napper, Timothy Meador, and M. H. Fisher. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5066) granting a pension to Catharine Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5067) granting an increase of pension to Robert Voigt;

A bill (S. 5068) granting a pension to Rosannah J. Ross (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5069) granting an increase of pension to Mahala Litton (with accompanying papers).

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 5070) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus A. Lothrop; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 5071) for the relief of Albert V. Conway, trustee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 5072) to correct the military record of Robert Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MALLORY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5073) to provide for the construction and administration of an isthmian canal; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5074) granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Bridges; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5075) to correct the military record of Otis B. Vanfleet; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 5076) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CODE BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9835) to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF NATIVE AND UNCIVILIZED RACES.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the opinion of this body the time has come when the principle, twice affirmed in international treaties for Central Africa, that native races should be protected against the destructive traffic in intoxicants should be extended to all uncivilized peoples by the enactment of such laws and the making of such treaties as will effectually prohibit the sale to aboriginal tribes and uncivilized races of firearms, opium, and intoxicating beverages.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD, ETC.

Mr. PERKINS. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Industrial Commission is hereby directed to prepare and send to the Senate, as soon as possible, a digest of any testimony it may have taken on the subject of adulterating food and drink products, a digest of the so-called pure food and drug laws of the various States, and also a digest of the testimony recently taken before the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate on the same subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALDRICH. Where does the resolution come from?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was offered by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that all this data has been compiled and is now ready to be presented by the Industrial Commission. There is no expense whatever attached to it, and it is information which the Senate should have while discussing the bill that is soon to be brought up for consideration, known as the Grout pure-food bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply wish to suggest to the Senator from California that the Industrial Commission is a commission created by law, and I doubt somewhat the power of one House to instruct it to transmit a portion of the testimony taken before it. I think, perhaps, it should be made a joint or concurrent resolution.

Mr. PERKINS. The chairman of the commission thought it unnecessary to make it a joint or concurrent resolution. They are very desirous of furnishing Congress with this information. However, if the Senator thinks it advisable, the resolution can be so amended.

Mr. HOAR. The two Houses would have no more power than one. If the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin be well taken it would have to be a law.

Mr. SPOONER. A joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I should think the Senate might give such a direction.

Mr. SPOONER. The commission is instructed by law to make certain reports and certain communications to the Houses. I hardly see that one House can modify that and impose additional duties upon them.

Mr. HOAR. The two Houses?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; by joint resolution, and then if it is approved by the President it is a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MESSENGER FOR OFFICIAL REPORTERS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Official Reporters of the Senate, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said Official Reporters, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said Official Reporters, and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law, said appointment to date from the beginning of the present session.

EXTRA PAY OF DISABLED SURFMEN, ETC.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury holding that applications of members of the Life-Saving Service for the benefit of section 7 of the act of May 4, 1882, allowing disabled surfmen, etc., one year's extra pay, must be made before the expiration of the term of enlistment of such surfmen, etc., together with a list of such applications as have been denied under said decision.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. PROCTOR was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] be appointed a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the place of the senior Senator from Vermont, who has been excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the junior Senator from Vermont be placed upon the Committee on the District of Columbia in the place made vacant by the resignation of the senior Senator from Vermont. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, at some convenient hour, I shall call up Senate resolution No. 371, presented by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, for the reference of the credentials of Mr. Maginnis and Mr. Clark to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as provided by that resolution.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 7, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. RAY of New York. Affecting conspiracy.

Mr. SULZER. Is that a House bill or a Senate bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. It is a House bill. I ask this unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to accommodate the minority side of the House, and make it at the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. The author of the original bill is not present, and it is nothing but fair that the extension of time asked for should be allowed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to renew my request of yesterday for unanimous consent that the bill made the special order for to-day be postponed until to-morrow, so that we may proceed with the Army bill to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the special order for to-day be carried over until to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, in deference to the views of the friends of the Army bill, who regard immediate action as of very great importance, the friends of the Grout bill with some reluctance consent.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before they all do that, I would like to know whether this motion made by the gentleman from Iowa will fix it so that the so-called Grout bill will have the same standing before the House on the opening of the session to-morrow that it has to-day under the present order.

The SPEAKER. It will have absolutely the same position.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And we want to know if it will have no more privilege than to-day.

The SPEAKER. None whatever, if postponed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPRINT OF OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the edition of the bill H. R. 3717, known as the oleomargarine bill, has been exhausted. I ask unanimous consent that 2,000 copies be printed, together with the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that there be a reprint of 2,000 copies of the bill H. R. 3717, together with the report thereon, this being what is known as the oleomargarine bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does that include the minority report?

The SPEAKER. The request includes the report.

Mr. GROUT. Of course it would include the minority report.

The SPEAKER. Together with the views of the minority. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ARMY BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 4300.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 4300. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

Insert at end of line 23, page 20:

"Provided, That any vacancy in the Quartermaster's Department may be filled by appointment from civil life or from volunteers serving since April 21, 1898."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be voted down.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, a question for information. My remembrance is that we struck out all after the word "ninety-eight," in line 21, did we not, yesterday?

Mr. SULZER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all stricken out.

Mr. HULL. That is all right. Read the next section, then.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 17. That the Subsistence Department shall consist of 1 Commissary-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 3 commissaries with the rank of colonel, 4 commissaries with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 9 commissaries with the rank of major, 27 commissaries with the rank of captain, mounted, and 150 commissary-sergeants who shall hereafter be known as post commissary-sergeants: Provided, That all vacancies in the grades of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major, created or caused by this section, shall be filled by promotion, according to seniority, as now prescribed by law. That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain, created by this act, in the Subsistence Department the President is authorized to appoint officers of volunteers, commissioned since April 21, 1898, and whose professional and physical fitness have been established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to this section. In line 11, page 21, after the word "Department," insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to carry out the agreement entered into with the committee yesterday, I move to strike out all after the word "ninety-eight," in line 13, at the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, line 13, after the word "ninety-eight," strike out the words "and whose professional and physical fitness have been established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 18. That the Medical Department shall consist of 1 Surgeon-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 8 surgeons with the rank of colonel, 12 surgeons with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 60 surgeons with the rank of major, 240 assistant surgeons with the rank of captain or first lieutenant, the Hospital Corps, as now authorized by law, and the nurse corps: Provided, That all vacancies in the grades of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, subject to the examination now prescribed by law: And provided, That the period during which any assistant surgeon shall have served as a surgeon or assistant surgeon in the Volunteer Army during the war with Spain or since shall be counted as a portion of the five years' service required to entitle him to rank of captain: And provided also, That nothing in this section shall change the relative rank for subsequent promotion of medical officers as arranged by results of competitive examination: Provided further, That in emergencies the Surgeon-General of the Army, with the approval of the Secretary of War, may appoint as many contract surgeons as may be necessary, at a compensation not to exceed $150 per month.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Army, transmitted to the Secretary of War, which I desire to have read in view of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] offering an amendment contained in the letter, as a proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 4, 1900.

SIR: In view of the inadequate number of commissioned medical officers provided for in the bill for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, now under consideration by the Military Committee of the House, I have the honor to recommend that the following provision shall be added to section 18:

"That on or after the passage of this act the President may appoint for duty in the Philippine Islands 50 surgeons of volunteers with the rank and pay of major and 150 assistant surgeons of volunteers with the rank and pay of captain for a period of two years: Provided, That so many of these volunteer medical officers as are not required shall be honorably discharged the service whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of War their services are no longer necessary."

The present method of depending upon contract surgeons for a greater part of the medical service with troops in garrisons and in the field is expensive and extremely unsatisfactory. A constant stream of physicians employed under contract has been sent to the Philippines to replace those returning. Contracts are made for one year, and it takes on an average six weeks from the time contract is made before the physician from civil life arrives at his station in the Philippines. At the end of the year, if he so desires, he is entitled to return home, and as there is no prospect of promotion a considerable proportion of those appointed insist upon returning home at the expiration of the period for which the contract was made. Meanwhile they have scarcely had time to familiarize themselves with the important duties of a medical officer aside from those relating to the medical care of the sick. These duties include the sanitary supervision of camps, the care and accountability for Government property, the instruction and discipline of members of the Hospital Corps, the making of prescribed reports and returns, etc.

Unfortunately these physicians from civil life, unacquainted with the emergencies of the service, must be sent at once to garrisons or to duty with troops in the field, where, as a rule, they are not under the immediate supervision of a trained medical officer who might give them the instruction they so much need. The result is that our troops are being cared for by physicians without knowledge or experience with reference to the special duties pertaining to a medical officer of the Army, and that just when they are beginning to acquire this knowledge their services are frequently lost, and they must be replaced by other physicians from civil life. I would say, however, that a considerable proportion of the acting assistant surgeons who have been employed are young men of excellent professional attainments, who only lack experience and special training to make them desirable medical officers.

The commissioned officers of volunteers provided for should, in my opinion, be selected from the volunteer medical officers and acting assistant surgeons now in the Philippines, many of whom would no doubt be willing to remain if they could be commissioned as proposed.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE M. STERNBERG,
Surgeon-General United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the Surgeon-General asked for a very much larger increase for permanent officers than the Secretary of War recommended. This recommendation is not for increasing the permanent corps, but for continuing practically in the service volunteer medical officers who are now in the service and thoroughly trained and who can not be retained unless continued as volunteers. It will be much less expensive to the Government to retain these officers, who can be mustered out when the emergency shall disappear, than to largely increase the Medical Corps. For that reason I am in favor of adopting the suggestion, and giving the rank of captain and major to these volunteer surgeons, and retaining them in the service. If the gentleman from Virginia will offer the amendment, I will consent to it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will offer the amendment contained in the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 18 the following:

"That on or after the passage of this act the President may appoint for duty in the Philippine Islands 50 surgeons of volunteers with the rank and pay of major, and 150 assistant surgeons of volunteers with the rank and pay of captain, for a period of two years: Provided, That so many of these volunteer medical officers as are not required shall be honorably discharged the service whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of War their services are no longer necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the section which has just been read and which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment just adopted the following:

"That the Surgeon-General of the Army, with the approval of the Secretary of War, be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ dental surgeons to serve the officers and enlisted men of the Regular and Volunteer Army, in the proportion of not to exceed 1 for every 1,000 of said Army, and not exceeding 30 in all. Said dental surgeons shall be employed as contract dental surgeons under the terms and conditions applicable to Army contract surgeons, and shall be graduates of standard medical or dental colleges, trained in the several branches of dentistry, of good moral and professional character, and shall pass a satisfactory professional examination: Provided, That 3 of the number of dental surgeons to be employed shall be first appointed by the Surgeon-General, with the approval of the Secretary of War, with reference to their fitness for assignment, under the direction of the Surgeon-General, to the special service of conducting the examinations and supervising the operations of the others; and for such special service an extra compensation of $60 a month will be allowed: Provided further, That dental college graduates now employed in the Hospital Corps who have been detailed for a period of not less than twelve months to render dental service to the Army and who are shown by the reports of their superior officers to have rendered such service satisfactorily may be appointed contract dental surgeons without examination."

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the bill which was reported unanimously by the Senate committee, the same bill having been reported by the House committee unanimously on two occasions except that the House bill provided for 1 dentist for every 1,000 men. The Senate bill changed that to 1 dentist for every 1,000, men but not to exceed 30 in all. I believe every member of this House has been interviewed on this subject, and I have yet to find a single one who has openly opposed it. I have a list of a few of them here which I will give.

The following are members of Congress who have cordially approved this bill:

Senator JOHN H. GEAR, Iowa.
Representative WILLIAM W. GROUT, Vermont.
Representative IRVING P. WANGER, Pennsylvania.
Representative J. A. TAWNEY, Minnesota.
Delegate D. T. FLYNN, Oklahoma.
Representative J. B. SHOWALTER, Pennsylvania.
Senator C. W. FAIRBANKS, Indiana.
Reprsentative C. B. LANDIS, Indiana.
Representative T. C. CATCHINGS, Mississippi.
Representative C. R. THOMAS, North Carolina.
Representative W. T. CRAWFORD, North Carolina.
Representative J. D. BELLAMY, North Carolina.
Representative H. H. POWERS, Vermont.
Representative N. D. SPERRY, Connecticut.
Representative E. S. HENRY, Connecticut.
Representative CHARLES A. RUSSELL, Connecticut.
Senator JOHN W. DANIEL, Virginia.
Representative L. FLETCHER, Minnesota.
Representative FRANK M. EDDY, Minnesota.
Representative R. C. DAVEY, Louisiana.
Senator KNUTE NELSON, Minnesota.
Senator THOMAS S. MARTIN, Virginia.
Representative H. B. PACKER, Pennsylvania.
Senator A. J. BEVERIDGE, Indiana.
Representative J. OVERSTREET, Indiana.
Senator BOIES PENROSE, Pennsylvania.

Representative J. C. SIBLEY, Pennsylvania.
Representative A. C. HARMER, Pennsylvania.
Senator GEORGE C. PERKINS, California.
Representative JOHN LAMB, Virginia.
Representative H. R. GIBSON, Tennessee.
Representative MARION DE VRIES, California.
Representative J. A. BARHAM, California.
Representative R. J. WATERS, California.
Representative V. H. METCALF, California.
Senator S. B. ELKINS, West Virginia.
Representative S. W. SMITH, Michigan.
Senator J. B. FORAKER, Ohio.
Representative J. B. CORLISS, Wisconsin.
Representative J. C. NEEDHAM, California.
Representative T. F. KLUTTZ, North Carolina.
Senator N. B. SCOTT, West Virginia.
Representative JAMES HAY, Virginia.
Representative W. A. YOUNG, Virginia.
Representative W. F. RHEA, Virginia.
Representative WALTER P. BROWNLOW, Tennessee.
Representative WILLIAM SULZER, New York.
Representative WILLIAM W. KITCHIN, North Carolina.
Representative J. H. SMALL, North Carolina.
Representative John W. ATWATER, North Carolina.

Here are 80 distinguished Army officers—surgeons—I will not read the names of all of them; but they include such distinguished men as Dr. Senn, of Chicago, whom you all know; Dr. Latimer, of Baltimore, whom you all know. And then here is the name of Governor Pingree, of Michigan; Governor Shaw, of Iowa; Governor Lind, of Minnesota, recently elected; Governor J. W. Leedy, of Kansas; Lieutenant-Governor Richter, of Kansas. I could go on and give the names of a number of other distinguished men.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I ask that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY] be permitted to occupy five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Before the gentleman resumes, may I ask him a question?

Mr. OTEY. Certainly—with pleasure.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has the gentleman no way of demonstrating the qualifications of dentists and the necessity for their services without reading the roll of all the public officials in the country?

Mr. OTEY. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Very well; go ahead. Your time is rolling on.

Mr. OTEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not thrust myself upon the House very often. When I do, I have something to say that is tangible and worth talking about. [Laughter.] I do not know to what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has referred. He reminds me of the Irishman of whom I heard a story. He was eating eggs. The first one he swallowed went down all right; but in swallowing another he heard the sound of a chick as it went down his throat; and then he exclaimed, "Begorrah, you have a swate voice, but you spake too late." [Laughter.] I think, sir, that anybody who opposes this bill "spakes" too late. I want gentlemen to come out now and say whether they are going to take care of 3,200,000 teeth, half of which are aching all the time. [Laughter.] I appeal to gentlemen on this side of the House and on the other side of the House, regardless of recent elections and regardless of political affiliations, to come forward and give the old soldier—that grand old soldier—a chance to get rid of the toothache.

I do not care to occupy further time. I ask for a vote on this question, and I hope every man will stand up or sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is one of very great importance, and one which, it seems to me, ought to be considered as a separate, independent proposition, so that each member might have intelligently before him the different provisions. I hope, therefore, the House will not put it on this bill, but will take it up as an independent proposition.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That the nurse corps (female) shall consist of one superintendent, to be appointed by the Secretary of War and whose term of office may be terminated at his discretion, whose compensation shall be $1,800 per annum, and of as many chief nurses, nurses, and reserve nurses as may be needed. Reserve nurses may be assigned to active duty when the emergency of the service demands, but shall receive no compensation except when on such duty: Provided, That all nurses in the nurse corps shall be appointed or removed by the Surgeon-General, with the approval of the Secretary of War; that they shall be graduates of hospital training schools, and shall have passed a satisfactory professional, moral, mental, and physical examination: And provided, That the superintendent and nurses shall receive transportation and necessary expenses when traveling under orders; that the pay and allowances of nurses, and of reserve nurses, when on active service, shall be $40 per month when on duty in the United States and $50 per month when without the limits of the United States. They shall be entitled to quarters, subsistence, and medical attendance during illness, and they may be granted leaves of absence for thirty days, with pay, for each calendar year; and when serving as chief nurses their pay may be increased by authority of the Secretary of War, such increase not to exceed $25 per month. Payments to the nurse corps shall be made by the Pay Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to offer as an amendment a provision which appears on pages 7 and 8 of the present bill, being paragraphs of the Senate bill which have been struck out in the preparation of this bill. I see in the report no statement of reasons why the veterinary corps, as established by the Senate bill, has been excluded entirely from this bill. I am desirous, however, to have an expression of the judgment of the House upon this question. I therefore offer as an amendment the provision beginning on line 21, page 7, and covering the whole of page 8, relating to the veterinary corps.

Mr. HULL. I object to going back now. We had better finish the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no going back.

Mr. HULL. We are considering the bill by sections, and we have passed over those sections which the gentleman now proposes to take up.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have not passed over these sections. They are parts of the Senate bill which have been excluded from this bill.

Mr. HULL. We have passed over those sections. If the gentleman desires to amend our bill by putting in those provisions, he can do that, I suppose, when we get through regularly with the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why should not these provisions go in now as independent paragraphs the same as any other amendment?

Mr. HULL. Unless the gentleman proposes to offer his amendment to follow the provision in regard to the nurse corps, I object to going back, because I am anxious to get through with the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I can not understand why there is any going back. The provisions which I offer have never been read. Therefore there is no going back. I claim that this amendment is fairly eligible for position in any part of this bill.

Mr. HULL. But the amendment, in my judgment, is not germane to the part of the bill we are considering. The gentleman, if he wants to put in those provisions, taken from a part of the bill which we have gone over, ought to wait until we have completed the consideration of the subsequent portions of the bill. Unless we adhere to the regular order of proceeding we shall be constantly jumping backward and forward, considering propositions having no relevancy to the matter under consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no purpose to jump forward or backward. We have already considered paragraphs pertaining to the Surgeon-General's establishment; we have just concluded a paragraph pertaining to the nurses' establishment. The amendment I desire to offer has direct relation to those two paragraphs, and is consistent at this point as a part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to introduce a new paragraph at this point. Is that the proposition?

Mr. BINGHAM. I simply ask that an additional paragraph, covering the wording of the Senate bill, may be considered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is the order. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 14, page 23, insert the following:

"SEC. 20. That the veterinary corps shall consist of—

"A chief veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, United States Army.

"An assistant chief veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of a major, United States Army, to be promoted in 1905, after competitive satisfactory examination, from the grade of veterinarian and captain.

"Four veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain of cavalry, to be promoted in 1903, after competitive satisfactory examination, from the grade of assistant veterinarian and first lieutenant.

"Ten assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry, to be promoted, after a satisfactory examination, from the grade of assistant veterinarian and second lieutenant after one year's service in this grade.

"Twenty assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry, to be appointed after satisfactory examination: Provided, That these twenty positions shall include the veterinarians, first class, provided for in the act of March 2, 1899, who have passed satisfactory examinations, and also the six veterinarians, second class, who are now employed in the Army under said act of March 2, 1899.

"All rules and regulations governing the veterinary corps shall be made by the Secretray of War, and the chief veterinarian shall report directly to that officer.

"For pay of officers of the veterinary corps, $33,500."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I fully recognize that the amendment I have submitted (being word for word a part of the Senate bill as it came to the House) would go to conference as soon as this bill passes, along with the other paragraphs of the Senate bill, and would be subject to consideration there. I think, however, at the same time, that this subject has been gone over so thoroughly that there is a conviction on the part of the House of the wisdom and necessity of the establishment of this additional branch of service, so as to be a part of the reorganization of the Army.

This proposition, Mr. Chairman, was carefully considered in the Senate, a great deal of testimony was taken in reference to it, and it passed that body and became a part of the bill which was transmitted to the House. There is nothing whatever in the report of the House Committee on Military Affairs, as I read it, that in any wise refers to crossing out or wiping out the paragraph in the Senate bill to which reference is made in the amendment. We have not been given any information upon that subject.

In the brief I hold in my hand, prepared by Senator KENNEY, appears this amendment. The statement is made that the entire cost, under the amendment, will not exceed $6,500. It is asserted in this brief that that is the entire cost over and above the cost of the civil employees now engaged in that service. It is also alleged that this will be more than compensated for by the organization of this veterinary corps which the amendment proposes.

Under the rulings of the Department, as well as the judicial decisions, the present force of the veterinary surgeons is declared to be a force of civilian employees—so rated and so paid—$75 a month to one class and $125 a month to another. They hold no commissions and have no commissioned relations with the other branches of the service. It is claimed in this proposition, which has had the indorsement of the most efficient and careful officers of the Army, General Merritt, General Brooke, Major-General Wilson, and other high officers, as well as the approval of President McKinley, General Miles, Commander in Chief of the Army, Quartermaster-General Ludington, and others high in rank, that the proposition is one for the best interest of the service, and that under the proposed organization or reorganization of the Army such a proposition is desirable and necessary. I am informed that, as the Army will be reorganized under the provisions of this bill, if it becomes a law, there will be upward of 25,000 animals to be cared for. The cavalry, the artillery, and the necessary transportation required for the Quartermaster's Department will involve the care of this large number of animals.

Mr. JETT. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question for information.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JETT. I would like to ask if the amendment that the gentleman offers is not a section of the bill that was before the Senate and passed by that body and came here during the last session of the House for our consideration?

Mr. BINGHAM. Absolutely the same, word for word. I have simply torn out the printed sheet of the original bill and presented it here as an amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this matter is so thoroughly understood by the House that I have no desire to take time to discuss it. I have shown what the increase of expenditures will be. I have shown that it would be a little in excess of $6,000. Certainly such an organization, indorsed by the leading officers of the service, deserves consideration at our hands, and I think it but fair to say that by the action we now take here the House will either make the paragraph a part of the bill agreed to by both the Houses or leave it as a paragraph to be settled in conference.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not prevail. The Committee on Military Affairs took the Senate bill and struck from it all after the enacting clause and inserted the bill which is now reported here to the House and recommended by the committee. Now, if we take a part of the bill here and there and insert it in the House proposition, you reduce the power of the House to enforce its own will just to that extent; and it seems to me that the position of veterinary surgeon should stand with the other provisions of the Senate bill and let it go to conference as a whole.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of commissioned ranks for the veterinary corps of the Army. I believe they ought to have commissioned rank. As to whether we want to create a new corps, a new bureau in the Army, is another and entirely different question, that ought to be thought over very carefully before this House shall adopt it. I do not believe we ought to put it in this bill. I will say, Mr. Chairman, at the request of one of my friends here, that the veterinary corps has commissioned rank in all the other armies of the world.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true.

Mr. STEELE. Assimilated rank.

Mr. HULL. Well, that is true of the army surgeons in other armies also. They do not have rank for their doctors there. It is only assimilated rank for them, too.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words with regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, familiar with this subject, I concur in all that the gentleman has said. This amendment for a veterinary corps should be incorporated into this bill now. It should not be eliminated here and allowed to go to conference. There is no doubt in the world but what this veterinary corps is one of the most important at the present time in the Army. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has truly said, there will be over 25,000 animals in the Army if this bill becomes a law, and as a friend of the horse I want to see this House adopt it. I trust it will. It is right. There ought to be veterinary surgeons to look after them. The veterinary corps is one of the most important branches in relation to the Army to-day, and this amendment should be adopted. To defeat it now will probably mean its permanent defeat. I appeal for fairness in the matter in order that our Army animals may be protected.

Mr. GAINES. Why did not the Military Committee report the provision in the bill which they brought in here?

Mr. SULZER. The committee should have reported it.

Mr. GAINES. Why did they not report it?

Mr. SULZER. Because the committee struck out the entire Senate bill and put in the War Department bill without any amendments whatever. This amendment was in the Senate bill passed last session.

Mr. GAINES. Why did they not leave that provision of the Senate bill in the bill which they brought in here?

Mr. SULZER. They should have done so.

Mr. GAINES. Did they give any reasons for their failure to do so?

Mr. SULZER. You will have to ask the chairman of the committee about that. The minority of the committee had nothing to do with it; but as a member of the minority, and speaking for the veterinary surgeons of this country, and for the best interests of the animals that will be in the Army, I think this amendment should be adopted, and I hope every friend of the horse will vote for it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I can not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], because after a careful consideration of the provision contained in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], after hearing all the evidence which was adduced before us, I came to the conclusion that it would not be for the benefit of the surgeons to have the veterinary corps established in the form in which it is provided in the Senate bill.

In the first place it creates a new bureau down here in the War Department. It creates a new staff bureau, and we may expect that bureau to be built up as other bureaus have been, at considerable cost. Moreover, the present veterinary corps, if they are given rank such as was suggested by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HULL], should be satisfied. That is all they ought to ask for. They have worked very well so far. They have done good service up to this time, and the animals of the Army have not suffered, so far as I have been able to ascertain. Therefore I do not see why we should create a new bureau in the War Department, at a considerable expense, when there is no necessity for it, and when these veterinary surgeons can have the rank which will give them the authority they now say is necessary in order to enable them to carry on their work in the Army. I hope, therefore, that the committee will vote down the amendment.

Mr. GAINES. What does the bill provide with reference to veterinary surgeons?

Mr. HAY. The bill does not provide anything with reference to veterinary surgeons, as it now stands; but, as I understand it, the probability is that in conference these surgeons will be given the rank of second lieutenants of cavalry.

Mr. GAINES. The bill does provide for veterinary surgeons.

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes; it provides for the employment of them now, but it does not provide for a bureau here.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the House for one minute while I submit some reasons why this amendment should be inserted in this bill.

This represents the progress that is taking place in our country, both in science and in army improvement. In the old days the farriers were sufficient to take care of the live stock of the Army, but with the progress of science now every man who practices the veterinary calling must have a diploma from a university. A man who is educated to that point should be raised above the farrier, and is entitled to the recognition of rank in the Army of the United States. If these men are to be established as a corps, they should be organized as such if you are to have efficiency throughout the Army, $2,000,000 representing the value of the live stock in the United States Army to-day. It is of sufficient value to warrant an additional $6,500 for their care and promotion.

Not only that; I would call attention to the fact that every civilized nation to-day has its veterinary corps to examine animals purchased. England, in the war with South Africa, sent veterinary surgeons to this country, when they were buying live stock, and saved hundreds of thousands of dollars in the purchase of those animals by means of careful inspection. There is another point I would earnestly press upon the House. One of the few disagreeable things that we want to forget about is the spoiled meat served to our gallant troops that were fighting in the armies of this country. If we had had this corps, that meat would all be inspected, and there could no such scandal take place.

It is seldom, Mr. Chairman, that I find myself in opposition to the committee. I can not agree with the suggestion of the chairman of the committee that this matter should go over so that it could be dealt with in conference with the Senate. If this House believes in the measure, they should vote for it now and put it in the bill. This is the proper place to put it in and let it be established, and then it is beyond peradventure and can not be traded off for any other proposition, and will be in the bill for the benefit of the Army and economy to the Government. It will be a recognition of a profession which is rising to-day; and all the veterinary schools and that great profession throughout our country are solidly behind this measure. I hope the House will act now and not trust to chance. A wise man never trusts to chance if he can get what he wants in hand. Vote to put this in as the Senate had it in the bill and it places this question beyond peradventure.

Mr. STEELE. Does not the gentleman say that this bureau is to cost $6,500?

Mr. ADAMS. Additional.

Mr. STEELE. The cost is given here as $33,500.

Mr. ADAMS. That gives the entire corps. This will be an additional amount of $6,500.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted by the House at this or any subsequent time. I do not believe it is necessary for the best interest of the service; neither do I believe it would be wise to commission horse doctors as officers of the United States Army. It has been stated here that the armies of all civilized countries have a veterinary corps, with rank It should have been stated "assimilated rank." Assimilated gives the pay, but not the honor or the title of the rank. There is not an army in the world that has a veterinary corps ranking with the officers of the line. It is not necessary, in my opinion, for the best interest of the service that the veterinary corps of the United States Army should have rank.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Why should we not give the horse doctor rank the same as we give the medical doctor?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is some difference between a man and a horse.

Mr. BUTLER. One is the doctor for the man and the other the doctor for the horse.

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is a difference between doctoring one of our soldiers and doctoring an army mule.

Mr. BUTLER. Are they not both educated men, and ought not both to be men of intelligence?

Mr. MONDELL. The fact that a veterinary might be an educated man is no reason why the horse doctor should be commissioned. An army surgeon in time of action is often necessarily under fire. If the gentleman will recollect the occurrences of the Santiago campaign, he will remember that the surgeons of the Army the most of the time during the operations before Santiago were under fire quite as much as some of the men in the advance. The horse doctor, I do not imagine, under any circumstances, would ever be under fire. I see no reason why a horse doctor, any more than a wagoner, a blacksmith, or other men connected with the Army in various capacities, should also receive a commission.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Wyoming allow me to make a suggestion? The surgeon comes in immediate contact with the men about him who are engaged in carrying men on the stretchers to the hospitals, and furthermore, he comes in contact with other enlisted men who are employed with the men in the hospital, and it is necessary to give him some rank in order that he may discharge his duties and assert the difference in rank between himself and the enlisted men. That is not true in the case of the veterinary surgeon who goes to the cavalry stables to doctor their horses. You might as well give rank to the men who curry the colonel's horse as to confer rank upon the veterinary surgeons.

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio in all that he says, and I thank him for his remarks. The surgeon in the Army is not only the physician who attends to the wounds and the ailments of the soldiers, but he is also the one who goes among the wounded in the hospital and on the field and cheers and encourages them, and he shares with them largely their privations and their dangers. He does not belong to the same class as the wagoners and the farriers.

It has been stated here that the change would only mean an additional expense of $6,000. Possibly so at the time of the passage of the bill, but it means a constantly increasing corps of officers who in the course of time are to go to swell the retired list, and, instead of $6,000 annual expenditure, in a short time it would add a very much larger sum. If we are not able to secure the services of good veterinary surgeons at the present prices paid, let us pay better prices for our veterinary surgeons, but never give horse doctors, honorable though their calling is, rank and authority with the fighting men of the American Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I want to say that he referred to the Santiago campaign, and undertook to show to the House that there was a difference between the doctor who doctors the soldiers and one who doctors the army mule. I want to say, as an incident of that campaign, that it developed that a horse doctor, Dr. Huidekoper, was assigned to the treatment of soldiers in the hospital, so I do not think that that point amounts to much.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has charge of this bill states that he does not desire to mar the integrity and unity of his bill for the reason that they have crossed out all of the Senate bill and submitted this as a subsitute. He doubtless is as familiar as myself with what goes on in the conference committee. I have had some experience, in common with other gentlemen in the House, and it is simply that when a bill is presented, like this bill, a clean wipe-out, a clean submission of something new, that it comes to a mere barter and trade in conference—"If you will give us that, we will give you this," and you come into the House with a mongrel bill. So far as this bill is concerned I do not want it to have that form or shape. I want this committee to determine the paragraph one way or another and not subject it to rejection because some other paragraph may be admitted.

One word with reference to the statement of the gentleman as to the horse doctor, as he designated him, not being a party to field action or to the battle. Granted. The surgeon is only thus detailed for that special work; others are back in the hospital. The officers of the Ordnance Corps, a large and one of the most intellectual corps of the service, are not in action. It is only occasionally that an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army is detailed to be in a position under fire.

Mr. BUTLER. How about the paymasters?

Mr. BINGHAM. The paymasters are never in action. That does not make for or against the veterinary surgeon or lessen their usefulness.

As to the objection of the gentleman on the other side who says that the establishment will create a bureau in Washington. The whole cost of these surgeons will be $33,500, an increase simply of $6,500 over the current law. If any bureau was ever established in Washington, they could have the supervision of only $33,500. Therefore, I contend that this criticism does not bring any strength against the proposition contained in the Senate bill.

Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to insert at the end of my remarks a "brief in the House of Representatives May 5, 1900, of facts in support of Senator KENNEY'S amendment to the Army reorganization bill, which passed the Senate and goes to the House of Representatives for concurrence."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The brief referred to by Mr. BINGHAM is as follows:

Brief (S. 4300. In the House of Representatives, May 5, 1900) of facts in support of Senator KENNEY'S amendment to the Army reorganization bill, which has passed the Senate and now goes to the House of Representatives for concurrence.

Senator KENNEY'S amendment to the Army reorganization bill provides for the establishment of an organized veterinary service, with reputable officers, whose education and competency is insured by rigid examination; to replace the present system of employment of an unorganized class of individual civilians, with no rank, no future, no responsibility, and no official position.

The United States Army is absolutely deficient in a proper veterinary service, which exists in the army of every other civilized country in the world. The present system in the United States Army has less method in it than that found needful in any large contractor's stable or stock farm in the country.

ECONOMY.

The entire cost under the amendment is only $6,500 over the present cost of civilian employees under the present system, and will be more than compensated for by the economy resulting from an organized veterinary corps.

The establishment of an organized veterinary service—

To give proper instruction in hippology, inspection of forage, stable hygiene, and farriery, to officers, cadets, noncommissioned officers, and farriers, at our military schools and large posts;

To furnish expert veterinarians for service as members on boards of purchase of remounts;

To furnish qualified inspectors of live stock and dressed meat for our soldiers' rations [there is not a qualified meat-inspection service in the United States Army];

To furnish practical services in prevention and cure of diseases—is needed, both on the ground of economy, for the efficiency of the Army, and for the health of our soldiers.

The letters, copies of which have been furnished, from Major-General Merritt, Major-General Brooke, Major-General Wilson, and numerous others of the higher officers of the Army indorse such an organization.

The establishment of such an organization has had the approval of the President, William McKinley.

The General Commanding the Army, Major-General Miles, and the Quartermaster-General, Brigadier-General Ludington strongly approve and favor the amendment.

(Committee on Army legislation, American Veterinary Medical Association, Rush S. Huidekoper, secretary, Washington, May 4, 1900.)

Mr. GAINES. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the veterinary surgeons contemplated by this amendment are to be graduates of a school or college.

Mr. BINGHAM. The surgeons employed under this corps will be subject to the directions of the Secretary of War, who will make regulations as to their credentials.

Mr. GAINES. Does the gentleman give that as one reason why this amendment should pass?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do. The veterinary surgeon not only does this work for the benefit of the animal, but for the protection of millions of dollars of Government property.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, from the remarks which have been made by members of the House in opposition to this amendment, that the value of the horse and mule in the Army is not at all appreciated. I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the fighting of our Army is to-day on an entirely different principle from the fighting of twenty years ago, or even of ten years ago. The long-range guns of the artillery and the infantry require the utmost celerity of movement. We shall find in the future that the victories will be gained as often by the rapid movement of our cavalry and our infantry as in any other manner. In fact, the army horse and mule rank second only to the soldier and the gun.

This proposition seems to me an exceedingly fair one. Any man who has watched the movements of even an infantry regiment must have seen the absolute necessity of having some responsible, qualified person in charge of the horses of a regiment. Why, sir, an infantry company can be delayed not only hours, but days, by having a few of its mules out of condition. Almost every part of the impedimenta of an infantry company to-day is moved by the company wagons, and the movements of the company are entirely dependent upon having the horses in condition to move rapidly. If there is any valuable provision that could be introduced into this Army bill—one which will pay the nation in time of war for its adoption, one which would help in winning victories, whether on this side of the ocean or on foreign shores—I believe that this amendment, if adopted, will be one of the most valuable improvements that can be made in the framing of an Army bill.

I ask the members of the House to consider the fact that most of the military work, not only carried on to-day, but which will be carried on by the United States in the future, will be in foreign lands. We all know that the sickness which has prevailed among our troops in the Philippine Islands and in China has been shared by the horses and mules of the Army. Any man who has watched the war in South Africa has had forced upon his attention the fact that the trouble with the English troops has been that they have been constantly hampered by the sickness of their horses everywhere. Thousands and thousands of horses and mules have recently been purchased in this country for use in Africa, simply because of the terrible amount of death and disease among the horses there. It is an old saw that every man's business is nobody's business, and if you want the horses and mules of the Army to be taken care of—if you think they are worth taking care of, as I certainly do—it is absolutely necessary to have a bureau to take charge of this subject, with a competent head, and with persons under him qualified for the peculiar work.

There is only one way to get men who are properly qualified to take charge of horses or to give general directions for that purpose, and that is by giving qualified men rank in our Army. It requires educated men to take care of horses. Perhaps just as much education is required in this line as in taking care of men. And, as I have just said, the only way to secure proper service in this line is to give rank to the officers who have charge of such work. It must be a badge of honor. I am not only pleased to vote for this proposition, but I think it is the duty of every member, especially as the expense of the proposed amendment is certainly not great—though if it were five times as much I should favor it—I believe it to be the duty of every man who has at heart the creation of an efficient Army to vote for this provision.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one word in favor of the most faithful animal that ever moved a foot or served a master. I would go further than the present proposition; I would require, if I had the power, that these veterinary surgeons should go into places of danger to attend and treat horses, in the same way that a medical officer is required to go on the field of battle under the present regulations. I think this regulation will overcome the distinction made by the gentleman from Wyoming in answer to a question which I put to him a few moments ago.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the total cost of this service, in the pay of the officers provided, would be $33,500. I find by looking at the pay table that a colonel who has just entered the service is entitled to $3,500; and this bill provides for 1 colonel. A major (one such officer being provided by this bill) receives as pay proper, $2,500, allowing nothing for longevity service. Then the amendment provides for 4 captains, the pay of whom would be $2,000 each, without any additional allowances, amounting to $8,000. Then there are to be 10 first lieutenants, at $2,000 (saying nothing of allowances) making $20,000. Then there are 20 second lieutenants at $1,500 each (taking into account nothing for allowances) making $30,000. It will thus be found that the total amount of pay for this corps under this amendment will be $64,000. In addition to that, officers who have been in this service for fifteen years as veterinarians, would receive longevity pay and other allowances. The cost for pay and allowances, saying nothing of traveling expenses, would be about $100,000.

I think, as the chairman of the committee has suggested, that it would be perfectly fair to let this matter go to conference with the other provisions of the bill. In that way we could arrive at a much better conclusion than, I think, can be arrived at by undertaking to act on this subject here and now. While this amendment at the beginning would simply call for a colonel and a major at the War Department headquarters, mark my words, inside of five years the number of field officers will be materially increased, as well as the expense.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman says let this go to conference. Why not adopt the amendment and then let it go to conference?

Mr. STEELE. If we adopt the amendment, there can be no conference, so far as this provision is concerned.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STEELE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is a provision of the Senate bill, and if the House and the Senate agree upon the proposition there will be nothing to confer about.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, many of my friends are veterinary surgeons. We should have the very best talent in that service that the United States can afford, and the most experienced surgeons should be found and honored in our Army. But I can not accept the proposition which is now before the House as an amendment to the pending bill; and I beg the House to bear with me a moment and to understand with me what that provision is.

As has been pointed out by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, it is not a question whether veterinary surgeons should have rank or pay or honor, but whether they should constitute a new and separate staff corps. It is whether we should accept this particular provision for such a corps without recommendation by the War Department or the Army, without the opinion of that Department, and without opportunity under the rules to perfect this proposition. We are asked not to accept surgeons as officers, but to establish a new corps. What does that mean?

What is a corps? It is an independent branch of the Army. If this provision is adopted it means that the officers of such a corps are not under the control of the officers of the line.

In the last war with Spain there was a case—there may have been others—but there was a case where a brigadier-general in charge of a camp with a thousand sick men found that the doctors in charge of the hospital were spending their afternoons on hotel porticos away from the camp. He told them to go back to duty and take charge of the sick men in the hospital. He was informed that he was not in a position to give such an order. And, Mr. Chairman, he only got the medical corps back to their duties when, after going 120 miles, he was enabled to find at division headquarters an authority which had the right to give the order to them.

Now, a doctor may rightly order a man out of the ranks, if he is sick and unable to perform duty, and the doctor may rightly send him to a hospital whether his commander assent or no. That is where the question is of human life. But when we come to dealing with horses and mules, a very different case is presented, for there may be conditions which require the quartermaster to work his mules or horses for army transportation whether they are sick or well, and there should be no interference with the performance of his duty under such circumstances.

If a captain of a troop or battery desires to use the horses or mules under his command, sick or well, and finds it necessary to do so if the exigencies of the service so require, no man should be allowed to interfere. You can and should employ a veterinary surgeon where his services are needed; you may make him an officer, but you can not safely employ or establish a veterinary corps which shall in any way supersede the power of the commanding officer.

As I have already said, the surgeon may send a man into the hospital and may order him out of the ranks in case of sickness, but the officer in charge of a battery or a company has the right to use horseflesh—noble as that animal may be—under any circumstances which may present themselves to him. He has enough staff subjection already. The man of the Army, the officer of the line, is subject to a system of staff inspection and orders unknown in any other country. It may be now noticed because it will come up later on in the consideration of the bill. He can not get provisions without going to the subsistence department or transportation without the aid of the quartermaster's corps.

He can not get his men paid without going to a separate pay department, nor get guns or ammunition without applying to a separate ordnance department. His life is a life of requisitions and red tape. Other armies put these departments in each division under the general commanding the division, and in each post, while the staff have assimilated rank and good pay, they are under the commander of the post, under any captain of an independent command, who keeps, and is bound to keep, all branches of the service under his control so far as his command extends.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In every other army, especially in the German army, the staff in all its branches is made the servant, or at any rate the friend, of the line. Our great Secretary of War, the greatest, I believe, that we have had since Stanton, says that the need of our Army is to bring the line and staff together. He therefore proposed and urged upon us that details should go from the line to the staff, and from the staff back to the line, as proposed in the Senate bill; that there should be only details and no permanent appointments, so that the whole Army should be one, working harmoniously together through the system of details without subjection of the line to permanent and separate staffs.

The committee and perhaps a majority of this House concluded that we should go slowly. That may be wise. We therefore provide by the House bill that there shall be details, but only in the lower grades of the staff, and we add to the Secretary's plan that these details shall be settled by competition before boards of officers, so as to avoid favoritism and to determine fairly what men shall go into the lower ranks of the staff. The bill thus provides for a perpetual change and flow between the line and the lower ranks of the staff of the Army.

For the higher ranks of the staff the bill provides that from those who have been detailed there shall be competitive examination for appointment to these higher ranks, so that we shall get the cream of our young men in the great staff departments of the Army, while we give them enough army service to keep them in touch with the needs of that Army, and prevent the disposition to red tape that assails anybody who is permanently in a separate corps.

That is the object of this bill, to abolish or, at least, mitigate the evils of separate staff corps. Let us not attack the general object of this bill by establishing another separate corps and counteract the views of our great Secretary of War by putting alongside of the many independent staff corps another corps with independent command, free from control by the line.

Give rank if you please, or honor if you please, but let us aim to unite and not to disunite each division of the Army.

This provision is in the Senate bill. When the matter goes into conference a satisfactory and proper section can be put in its place. But if this amendment be adopted, it must be taken as it is, with its faults.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HULL. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BINGHAM, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. SULZER demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 56.

Mr. HULL. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. HULL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 72.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That the Pay Department shall consist of 1 Paymaster-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 3 paymasters with the rank of colonel, 4 paymasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 9 paymasters with the rank of major, and 27 paymasters with the rank of captain: Provided, That all vacancies in the grade of colonel and lieutenant-colonel created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, as now prescribed by law, and no more appointments to the grade of major and paymaster shall be made until the number of paymasters is reduced below 9: And provided, That persons who have served in the Volunteer Army since April 21, 1898, as additional paymasters may be appointed to positions in the grade of captain, created by this section. So long as there remain surplus majors an equal number of vacancies shall be held in the grade of captain, so that the total number of paymasters authorized by this section shall not be exceeded at any time.

Mr. DICK. With a view to offering an amendment to that section, I desire to have the Clerk read the letter which I send to the desk. It is a letter from the Paymaster-General, U. S. Army, to the Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter will be read in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 3, 1900.

SIR: Will you permit me, as head of the Pay Department, to respectfully call your attention to the fact that the organization of the Pay Department as proposed in section 20 of the bill for the reorganization of the Army, copy of which has been furnished me from your office, does not, in my judgment, give us sufficient force to perform the duties which the Pay Department is called upon to perform.

The present number of officers in the regular and volunteer force of the Pay Department is, aside from the Paymaster-General, 55. The proposed bill gives us 43, a reduction of 12 officers. At the present moment there is but one officer of this department on leave of absence, and he was granted one month's leave from the Department of California, succeeding his return to this country from a two years' detail in the Philippines. There is not an officer in the service who could be granted a leave for two months without detriment to the service, unless his place could be filled by some other paymaster during that time.

As the Army is now distributed, we have between four and five hundred different stations to pay in the Philippines, and we have there and en route there 26 paymasters, and I have constant reports of the very severe service the officers there are called upon to perform and the necessity for more help. If the force is reduced it must be by taking away some of the officers from that point, as there is not now stationed within the limits of the United States a single officer whose place could be made vacant without detriment to the service.

Very respectfully,

A. E. BATES,
Paymaster-General, U. S. A.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. DICK. I move to amend section 20, line 16, page 23, by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "four."

In line 17, after the word "colonel," insert the words "and assistant paymaster-general;" also, in line 17, strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five."

In line 18, after the words "lieutenant-colonel," insert the words "and deputy paymaster-general;" also, in line 18, strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "twenty."

In line 19, strike out the words "twenty-seven" and insert the words "twenty-five."

In line 24, after the words "number of," insert the words "majors and."

In line 25, strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "twenty."

Mr. HULL. That simply gives them the titles which they have at present.

Mr. DICK. The purpose of the changed phraseology is simply to preserve the phraseology of the law as it now stands. The increase asked for is explained by the letters of the Paymaster-General to the Secretary of War, and its purpose is to give to the Army as it will be reorganized a force sufficient to pay it. At the present time, as fixed by the act of March 2, 1899, the force is 56. This amendment asks for 55. The section which we seek to amend gives but 44. Prior to the Spanish-American war the Army in the United States amounted to about a corps as now organized, but widely distributed over the whole country. The force was then a total of 26 officers, the payments monthly, and the force was sufficiently occupied.

Now the Army is about four times as large, more widely distributed—and paid by a force, but not with the requisite promptness—of 56 officers, and as to the Philippines, and because of the limited number of officers, payments are made every two months, or as nearly so as possible.

It is not the number of troops so much as the manner of their distribution which should determine the numerical strength of the Pay Department.

Then, it is stated that in 15 of the Philippine Islands alone there are 420 garrisoned posts to be visited by paymasters, or about four times as many as there were in the United States preceding the war with Spain; that there are 102 posts in the United States, 8 in Cuba, 8 in Alaska, 4 in Porto Rico; that, except as to the 120-odd miles of railroad in the Philippines, all other means of land communication in these islands is of the crudest kind and surrounded with danger, and that with the present number of 55 working paymasters it is at times possible, in the Philippine group, to pay the Army there with reasonable regularity. It will be easily understood that the present strength of the Pay Department, 56 officers, is the minimum force under which payments can be effected.

This seems not only like a fair request, but a demand to meet the very necessities of the situation. I trust the amendment will be adopted by the House. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio proposes to increase the officials in the Pay Department beyond the estimates submitted by the Secretary of War, which were presumably based upon absolute knowledge of the necessities of the situation. While I was unable, owing to the confusion in the House, to hear all my distinguished friend from Ohio said in justification of his amendment, what I did hear did not convince me that we ought to go beyond the estimates submitted by the Secretary of War; and it looks to me like making a needless increase in the officers of the Paymaster's Department and a needless tax upon this country. I hope that the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 23, line 16, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four;" in line 17 strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five;" in line 18 strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "twenty;" in line

19 strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "twenty-five;" line 18, after the word "lieutenant-colonel," insert "and deputy paymaster-general;" in line 24, after the word "of," insert the words "major and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DICK. Just one omission, Mr. Chairman, in line 17, "assistant and paymaster," and in line 18, "assistant deputy paymaster."

Mr. HULL. Not assistant at all, but lieutenant-colonel and deputy paymaster-general.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio indicate the word preceding what he proposes to introduce?

Mr. HULL. My understanding of the gentleman's amendment is, after the word "colonel" to insert the words "and assistant paymaster-general," and in line 18, after the word "lieutenant-colonel," insert the words "and deputy paymaster-general;" and in line 24, after the word "of," insert the words "major and;" and these amendments are simply to preserve the titles as they are now and have been for so many years known.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and that is, whether it increases the corps of the Paymaster's Department?

Mr. DICK. It reduces it one.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That the Corps of Engineers shall consist of 1 Chief of Engineers with the rank of brigadier-general, 7 colonels, 14 lieutenant-colonels, 28 majors, 40 captains, 40 first lieutenants, and 30 second lieutenants. The enlisted force provided in section 11 of this act and the officers serving therewith shall constitute a part of the line of the Army: Provided, That vacancies in the Corps of Engineers created or caused by this act in the grade above that of second lieutenant shall be filled, as far as possible, by promotion according to seniority from the Corps of Engineers: And provided also, That vacancies remaining in the grades of first and second lieutenant may be filled by transfer of officers of the Regular Army, subject to such professional examination as may be approved by the Secretary of War. Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant not filled by transfer shall be left for future promotions from the corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have received the following communication from the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, which I desire to have read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter will be read in the gentleman's time.

The letter was read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 5, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter (memoranda accompanying) from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, of this date, by which it would appear that the head of that department considers that the number of officers provided for his department by the pending bill for the reorganization of the Army, which was submitted by this Department to your committee, are insufficient.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Memoranda relating to proposed legislation for reorganization of the Corps of Engineers.

July 24 the Adjutant-General called on the Chief of Engineers as to the specific reorganization recommended for the Corps of Engineers.

August 10 the Chief of Engineers submitted for the consideration of the Secretary of War certain memoranda showing the necessity for the increase of the Corps of Engineers, together with a draft of proposed legislation. These were based on most careful and detailed consideration of the subject, and the legislation recommended was considered of most vital importance. The numbers proposed for the various grades were the minimum consistent with the efficient performance of duties devolving upon the corps, and the proportionate number of each grade was worked out with great care, with a view to providing for the various duties and for such gradual and proper promotion as must be provided for to keep the Corps of Engineers alive.

The number of officers recommended was as follows:

One brigadier-general, 12 colonels, 24 lieutenant-colonels, 36 majors, 50 captains, 40 first lieutenants, and 25 second lieutenants.

The numbers proposed by the newly printed bill are:

One brigadier-general, 7 colonels, 14 lieutenant-colonels, 28 majors, 40 captains, 40 first lieutenants, and 30 second lieutenants—an increase over present organization of 5 captains, 14 first lieutenants, and 18 second lieutenants, without any increase in the field officers.

In determining the relative number of officers of the different grades the following system was followed:

Two divisions were considered—the first of and above the rank of major, the second including officers below the rank of major.

The average time of service through all grades was taken at forty years. It was assumed twenty years of this time should be spent in the lower division and twenty in the higher; that is, that an officer should serve twenty years before reaching the grade of major; their age at such time would average forty-three years.

Under the present organization the percentage of officers above and including the grade of major is 40, and below, 61. This percentage is about correct to give twenty years in lower division and twenty years in upper division, as shown by a table giving percentages of the number of officers of various terms of service for each year during past twenty-five years and the average for the entire period. It was therefore considered desirable to maintain the present percentage in any increase recommended, and this was done.

The proportion proposed would provide approximately for a service of six years as colonel, six years as lieutenant-colonel, eight years as major, and twenty years as a subaltern.

Considering the relative numbers throughout, they are such as to provide for the duties of the corps without any surplus numbers, and to also provide for a fair and reasonable if not rapid promotion.

The increase provided for in bill is all in the junior officers. It will destroy the approximately fair division of existing organization, interfere materially with merited promotion, and render it more desirable for the highest graduates of the Military Academy to enter the line rather than the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, after the word "that," in line 15, page 24, by inserting the words "Chief of Engineers shall be selected as now provided by law, and hereafter."

Also, in line 16, strike out the words "created or caused by this act" and insert after the word "in," in the same line, the words "all other grades;" and strike out the words "the grade," in lines 16 and 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, line 15, after the word "part," insert the words "Chief of Engineers shall be selected as now provided by law, and hereafter."

In line 16 strike out the words "created or caused by this act" and insert "all other grades."

After the word "in," strike out the words "the grade."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, one minute. The first amendment comes in after the word "that," and before the word "vacancies," in line 15, and not the word "part," as read by the Clerk.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "seven," "fourteen," and "twenty-eight," in line 11, page 24, and "forty" after the word "majors," and "thirty," in line 12, page 24, and insert the words "twelve" before "colonels," "twenty-four" before "lieutenant-colonels," "thirty-six" before "majors," in line 11; also "fifty" before "captains" and "twenty-five" before the word "second," in line 12.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to make this bill conform to the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers as contained in the communication which has just been read. The increase which is provided in the Engineer Corps by this bill is an increase in the lower grade of that corps.

The colonels remain the same as at present, the lieutenant-colonels the same, and the majors the same. There is an increase of 5 captains, an increase of 26 first lieutenants, and an increase of 12 second lieutenants. It is in the lower grades of this corps that the increase is not needed to such an extent as it is in the upper grade, and for this reason: The Engineer Corps is devoted almost entirely—in fact, entirely—to the work of constructing the fortifications and great public improvements carried on the river and harbor bill. The independent work given to the officers of the Engineer Corps is not intrusted to the officers of these lower grades. As a rule they are assistants to the officers of the engineers in charge of the actual work.

Now, with the increase of our territory and the necessity of sending engineers to Porto Rico and the Philippines, with the natural increase also of the public works from year to year, the necessity of officers capable of handling this independent work increases, and thus calls for an increase in the corps in the grades above that of first lieutenant. The Chief of Engineers does not recommend any increase over this bill in the corps of first lieutenants, being satisfied with the forty. He recommends five less in the grade of second lieutenants, recommending twenty-five instead of thirty, as the bill provides. But he does provide for a substantial increase in officers of the higher grades, twelve instead of seven colonels, twenty-four instead of fourteen lieutenant-colonels, thirty-six instead of twenty-eight of the grade of major.

Now, the precedent has been in all the bills governing this corps that there should be, as the Chief of Engineers says, 39 per cent of the corps of the grade of majors and above, and 61 per cent of the corps of the grade below that of major. That has been the record of the corps. The amendment which he has suggested to the Secretary of War provides for the continuation of that ratio; whereas the House bill as now presented reverses that and puts a much greater proportion of Engineer Corps below the grade of major than at present.

Not only that, but according to the record in this corps it takes twenty years for an officer in this branch of the service to reach the grade of major. He starts in as a cadet from West Point of the age of 21 to 23 years, and the record shows that he is at least 43 to 45 years of age before he becomes a major. The present Chief of Engineers did not reach the grade of colonel until he was 57 years of age. Now, under the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, twenty years will be the usual length of time for a graduate from West Point in this corps to reach the grade of major. He will then have eight years as major, six years as a lieutenant-colonel, and six years as a colonel before his retirement. It does seem to me, in view of the vast interests committed to this corps, in view of the special training these officers have in this service, that this recommendation of the Chief of Engineers should be followed by this House and the bill amended in accordance with the terms I have submitted.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope this amendment will not be adopted. If adopted it puts the Engineer Corps way beyond every other corps in the Army in regard to promotion. The gentleman forgets that two years ago we gave this corps promotion in the higher grade, additional officers, improving their opportunities by which the whole corps was moved up. If you adopt this, you give the engineers one major for two captains, and one lieutenant-colonel for every two majors, something unknown in every other corps. We did increase the quartermasters yesterday, but how did we do it? In the lower grades. We gave them, where they asked for twelve colonels, one increase; we gave them only two in the lieutenant-colonels, and put the others in as captains. The Engineer Corps under this bill, figured out with the ratio of the other grades in the Department, have to-day an equal chance for promotion with the Ordnance or any other corps of Army.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but they are lieutenants in six years, captains in fourteen years, and in the other lines of the Army they have all to serve twenty years to get to the grade of captain. If we listen to what the different bureaus want in regard to the higher grades, they will all be colonels, lieutenant-colonels, and majors. I want to see the line drawn somewhere which will preserve something like equity and justice as between these corps, and I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HAY. Is it not a fact that this bill was carefully prepared by the Secretary of War with a view to the needs of each one of these various departments?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And that we have not in any case, except in the Quartermaster's Department, I believe, increased these corps.

Mr. HULL. We made an increase in the Quartermaster-General's Department and in the Pay Department.

Mr. HAY. But not in the lower ranks.

Mr. HULL. None in the grades of colonel and lieutenant-colonel to amount to anything. We have in the Quartermaster's Department 72 captains, who have to look forward to only seven colonelcies, as I remember now. If we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, we shall have 40 captains looking forward to 12 colonelcies. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I entirely concur in the view of the chairman of our committee that this amendment should not be adopted. If adopted, it would make the Engineer Corps top-heavy. The recommendations of the Secretary of War in regard to the Engineer Corps do that corps more than justice. I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BROMWELL was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. That the Ordnance Department shall consist of 1 Chief of Ordnance with the rank of brigadier-general, 4 colonels, 6 lieutenant-colonels, 12 majors, 24 captains, and 24 first lieutenants, the ordnance storekeeper, and the enlisted men, including ordnance sergeants, as now authorized by law. All vacancies created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion and appointment as now prescribed by law.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I will occupy only one minute of the committee's time to say that as I do not desire to go upon record as appearing to vote against any increase of the Army in the present emergency, I shall, at the proper time, if no one else does so, offer a substitute continuing the existing establishment for two years.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That the Signal Corps shall consist of 1 Chief Signal Officer with the rank of brigadier-general, 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 9 captains, 9 first lieutenants, 80 first-class sergeants, 120 sergeants, 150 corporals, 200 first-class privates, 150 second-class privates, and 10 cooks: Provided, That vacancies created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion of officers of the Signal Corps according to seniority, as now provided by law. Vacancies remaining after such promotions may be filled by appointment of persons who have served in the Volunteer Signal Corps since April 21, 1898: Provided, That the President is authorized to continue in service, during the present emergency, for duty in the Philippine Islands, 10 volunteer signal officers with the rank of first lieutenant and 10 volunteer signal officers with the rank of second lieutenant. This authority shall extend only for the period when their services may be absolutely necessary, and not beyond July 1, 1902.

Mr. HEPBURN. I now offer an amendment in regard to which I have consulted with the chairman of the committee, and I think that it meets his approval and perhaps that of other members of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, in line 11, strike out "one" and insert "two;" also strike out "three" and insert "five;" also strike out "nine" wherever it occurs in line 11 and insert "nineteen;" so that the section will read:

"That the Signal Corps shall consist of 1 Chief Signal Officer with the rank of brigadier-general, 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, 5 majors, 19 captains, 19 first lieutenants, etc."

The question being taken, the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that the proviso, beginning in line 21, with regard to ten volunteer signal officers being continued should be stricken out. I offer an amendment to strike out that proviso. My understanding is that we have already taken these volunteer signal officers, authorized their continuance, and put them in the regular establishment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 25 strike out all of section 23 after the word "ninety-eight," in line 21.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. That whenever there shall occur a vacancy, which can not be filled by promotion or appointment under the provisions of preceding sections of this act, in offices of the grades of lieutenant-colonel and major in the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's departments; of captain in the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay departments, and of first lieutenant in the Ordnance Department and the Signal Corps, such vacancy shall not be filled by a permanent appointment, but shall be filled by the detail, by the Secretary of War, after competitive examination, as hereinafter provided, of an officer of the line, who shall serve for the period of four years unless sooner relieved, and shall not again be eligible for detail in any staff corps or department until he shall have rendered actual service for two years with troops of the arm in which he is commissioned. Any officer detailed for staff duty under the provisions of this section shall be selected from the grade corresponding to, or from the grade next below, that to which the detail is to be made, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade to which detailed. No detail for staff duty as herein provided shall be made in the case of any officer until he has actually served with troops for at least four years if his rank is above that of a second lieutenant, and for at least two years if he is a second lieutenant; and no such detail shall be made in the case of any officer until he shall have passed a satisfactory competitive examination by an examining board composed of three officers, of whom one may be a line officer and two shall be permanent or detailed officers of the department or corps in which the detail is to be made, said examination to be conducted under regulations to be prescribed by the examining boards, to be constituted as herein prescribed, for the various departments and corps in which details are to be made shall be convened by the Secretary of War at such times and places as the exigencies of the service may require, and said boards shall examine and report upon, as far as practicable, all line officers who may be applicants for details to staff duty, and who shall have been recommended by their commanding officers for such details. A separate list of officers reported on favorably by such examining boards shall be kept for each department or corps in which details are to be made, the officers on said list to be arranged in accordance with the ratings given them by the examining boards, and to be detailed for duty, in the department or corps to which the list pertains, in the order of their standing upon said list, beginning with the officers having the highest rating; but no officer shall remain eligible for detail for more than two years unless he shall again successfully pass the examination hereinbefore prescribed: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to require the detail for staff duty of any officer who, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, is mentally, morally, or physically unfit for such detail.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I believe the bill as printed does not correspond with the action of the committee. The committee resolved to leave the Ordnance Department out of the detail system absolutely; so that the words "the Ordnance Department and," in line 25, should be stricken out. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me a question at this point?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will this bill make the Adjutant-General's Department or the Inspector-General's Department larger than they are under the statute organizing the Regular Army, on the basis of 27,000 or 29,000 men? There are men now in that corps detailed to other branches of the service. When it comes to filling the vacancies that your bill makes, will the men in that corps be relegated back to their rank in the Regular Army or will they have precedence for appointment in the volunteers?

Mr. HULL. If this bill passes they will, in my judgment, remain permanently in the corps. They have reached there by examination.

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, I understand that, according to the gentleman's judgment, if there should be any vacancies they will be filled from the men now in the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's corps?

Mr. HULL. That would be my judgment, they being now in the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to this proviso on page 28, beginning with line 18:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to require the detail for staff duty of any officer who, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, is mentally, morally, or physically unfit for such detail.

I do not understand that those words were put in the bill when we had it under consideration in the committee.

Mr. HULL. Yes; they were inserted in the amended bill as adopted.

Mr. HAY. I think they ought to be stricken out, because they give the Secretary of War absolute power to turn down any officer who may have passed an examination.

Mr. HULL. I do not believe that any officer who is mentally, morally, or physically unfit will be given an examination.

Mr. HAY. I do not think so either. Therefore that proviso ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HULL. This proviso does not apply to volunteer officers. So far as the regulars are concerned, I did not object to the Department fixing up the provision in whatever way it wanted to.

Mr. HAY. But we ought not to give the Secretary of War arbitrary power to turn a man down.

Mr. HULL. I assume that the Secretary of War would not have a man mentally, morally, or physically unfit examined. With regard to volunteers, where we struck out a similar authority on the part of the Secretary of War, the idea of the men who opposed that provision was that the Secretary of War might prescribe a rigid examination which the average volunteer would be unable to pass. But in this case, where officers of the Regular Army are concerned, the man can not pass the examination until his commanding officer has designated him in orders for that purpose.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman from Iowa regard this provision as at all necessary in the bill? Does he not think that it might be stricken out without injury to this provision of the bill?

Mr. HULL. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the provision does neither harm nor good.

Mr. HAY. Then why not let it go out?

Mr. HULL. I have no special objection.

Mr. HAY. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out that provision which has just been read.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to its going out.

The amendment proposed by Mr. HAY was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That whenever there shall occur a vacancy, which can not be filled under the provisions of preceding sections of this act by the promotion of officers holding permanent appointments, in offices of the grades of colonel in the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's Departments, of major in the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments, of major in the Pay Department after the number of paymasters of that grade shall have been reduced below nine, and of captain in the Ordnance Department and the Signal Corps, such vacancy shall be filled by the appointment of an officer to be selected from among those who have served by detail, under the provisions of this act, in the next lower grade in the department or corps in which the vacancy occurs.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the word "nine" in line 4 of this section should be stricken out and "twenty" inserted, in order to correspond with the amendment made to the bill in regard to paymasters.

I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I move also, in line 5 of the same section, to amend by striking out the words "The Ordnance Department and."

This would make the provision conform to the action already taken by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section.

The Clerk read section 29, as follows:

SEC. 29. That vacancies in the grade of field officers and captain, created by this act, in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in each branch, respectively. Vacancies existing after the promotions have been made shall be provided for as follows: A sufficient number shall be reserved in the rank of second lieutenant for the next graduating class at the United States Military Academy. Officers now holding commissions in the Volunteer Army may be ordered before boards of officers for such examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War. Volunteer officers who establish their fitness before these examining boards may be appointed to the grade of first or second lieutenant in the Regular Army. Volunteer officers so appointed to the grade of first or second lieutenant shall be arranged according to rank, on a separate list. All vacancies then existing in the grade of first lieutenant in each arm of the service shall be filled from this list and the lineal lists of second lieutenants, according to seniority, as determined by length of prior commissioned service; but nothing herein contained shall change the relative rank of officers heretofore commissioned as second lieutenants in the Regular Army.

When the vacancies in the grade of first lieutenant shall have been filled from the two lists, the names of the remaining second lieutenants shall then be placed on one list in each branch, arranged as to seniority, according to the dates of their commissions, and promotions thereafter shall be made as provided for in existing law.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs made some amendments to this section which would make the officers under it eligible as volunteer officers of the Army without regard to any age limit. I am afraid that by the provision as it stands we have injured, instead of benefited, the volunteer officers, because under the present law a man could not come in from the ranks and would necessarily be under 30 years of age.

Now I desire to offer an amendment to carry out the idea of the committee, providing that a volunteer officer shall be eligible to the grades of first and second lieutenant without regard to age.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. All who served as volunteers to be so eligible?

Mr. HULL. Yes; that is the idea. I have not yet prepared the amendment, because I understood that Mr. MONDELL or Mr. PARKER would offer it. But I will prepare and offer the amendment if the Chair will indulge me for a moment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will this amendment which I have here answer the gentleman's purpose?

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from New Jersey give his attention and see if I have this in a form which is satisfactory to him?

That the present restrictions of law or regulations as to age shall not apply to those who have served as volunteers since April 21, 1898.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. For the purposes of appointment.

Mr. HULL. I will add that—

So far as appointments to the grades of second or first lieutenants of the line are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 24, page 30:

"That the present restrictions of law or regulations as to age shall not apply to those who have served as volunteers since April 21, 1898, so far as appointments to the grades of second or first lieutenants of the line are concerned."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this paragraph, any volunteer officer is eligible, after examination, in the creation of this new army, to be made either a first or a second lieutenant. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HULL. I think that is correct, because I think this list limits it to volunteer officers.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, you say this further, that it shall be done according to seniority as determined by length of prior commissioned service.

The cadets of the class of 1899 were graduated some months before the usual date of graduation, as well, I think, as the class of 1900. According to this provision, a volunteer officer who has served prior to the graduation of those young men from the Academy will get credit in his rank as either first or second lieutenant when it comes to his commissions. Therefore each one of those cadets who were graduated in 1900 and in 1899 will be junior to this body of men transferred from the volunteer service to the regular service. Is that so?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will look at the bill he will see that it makes two lists—one list of those who are in the Regular Army and one list of those who are volunteers. The commissions of the volunteers govern as against each other in the matter of length of service. Those who are now in the Regular Army will be pushed up in their promotion according to their seniority in their own list, but the volunteers will be in another list, and their length of service will balance with each other.

Mr. BINGHAM. But not in competition with or antagonism to the Regular Army officers.

Mr. HULL. No; not in competition with the Regular Army officers. They are already in the Regular Army, and are on a lineal list provided for in the same section, upon which they go according to their rank.

Mr. BINGHAM. Therefore none of these men who are in the classes from the Academy to which I have referred will be junior to these volunteers to be appointed hereafter.

Mr. HULL. Not at all. Of course there are men now in the Regular Army, appointed from civil life, who are a part of the permanent establishment under present law, who will hold their present places above cadets who have been graduated since.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes; they are now in the permanent establishment. I refer to those to be appointed hereafter.

Mr. HULL. I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. That to fill vacancies occurring from time to time in the several organizations serving without the limits of the United States with trained men the President is authorized to enlist recruits in numbers equal to 4 per cent in excess of the total strength authorized for such organizations.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, we live in the most extraordinary age and in the greatest country of the world. What shall we say of the two mighty revolutions which have marked the progress of our own country during the last one hundred and twenty-five years? One converted thirteen weak colonies into a nation which has spread itself from the Atlantic to the Pacific, not by the desolations of successful war, but by the triumphant march of industry and enterprise. The other threatened to disrupt this great Republic, but, guided and governed by the inscrutable wisdom of Providence, its results are renewed prosperity and a more closely united people.

No epoch of the world's history can exhibit a people so numerous, so homogeneous; we have one form of government; we speak a common language; our people enjoy the widest personal and political liberty; we have a domain of imperial expanse wherein may be found every variety of climate and every character of soil. Our population is something over 76,000,000 people. The arts of civilization, the benefits of commerce, have been carried to their utmost perfection; education is diffused throughout our population and its benefits are felt alike by rich and poor. The productions of our farmers, the yields of our mines, the vast wealth of all kinds with which our country abounds, strike the mind as something stupendous.

We live under the freest Government in the world. This happy condition of affairs has been brought about, first, by the goodness of Almighty God, and, second, by the institutions of government under which we have lived since 1776. The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, adhered to by our forefathers, have made this a great country and a happy and prosperous people. Because of our free institutions millions of people have come to us from other lands, and the tide of immigration is continuing to flow toward our shores. Up to the time of the passage of the bill for the government of Porto Rico this Government had taken no step which could be called a departure from those policies and principles which have guided and governed our statesmen during the past one hundred and twenty-four years.

The question of the Philippine Islands was then and still is unsettled. For, while the President has governed it as a military province, his policy has neither been indorsed by the people of the country nor by this House. In the past we have steered clear of the quarrels of Europe. We have obeyed the behest of Washington and have formed no entangling alliances abroad. We have adhered to the principles and practices of the Monroe doctrine. Since the war of 1812 no foreign soldier has set his foot upon our soil, and no foreign country has insulted our dignity at home or abroad. It is now proposed to depart from the settled policy of this country, and the first step to be taken in that direction is the maintenance of the great standing Army under the provisions of this bill.

The next step will be the building of many ships and the enlistment of many sailors. The next is the conferring upon the President of the United States absolute military and civil power in the Philippine Islands. It is within the power of this House to give to the Executive all the soldiers necessary to maintain the authority of the United States in the Philippine Islands and at the same time to adhere to these maxims of government which are recognized as best for our country. It is dangerous to depart from our well-settled policy of maintaining only a small standing army. It is true that the Republican party in the last campaign ridiculed the idea of imperialism and denied strenuously that there was any intention on the part of the Government to enter upon such a policy. But that the granting of such enormous powers to the Executive is cause for serious alarm no candid man will deny. It will be argued that the people by their votes have retained in power the party which advocates these measures, but it is equally true that the votes of the people did not indorse the policy of military expansion, of great standing armies, of enormous expenditures.

If all the people who then and now condemn the Philippine policy of the Administration, the raising of a great standing army, the possibility of conscription, and the enormous taxation which must accompany this policy had voted against the Republican party, its candidate would have suffered an ignominious defeat. There were other questions which seemed to the people of more importance for the moment, and they were satisfied that they could deal with the question of imperialism later on. The battle is just now joined, and will not be decided until the people of this country have an opportunity, untrammeled by other matters, to express their opinions at the polls. It may be true that many members of this House honestly believe that there is no harm to result to the Republic from the steps which are now proposed. It has been the history of all republics that imperialism has crept upon them unawares; that the advocates of such a policy—some of them honestly—have diverted the minds of the people from issues so vitally important.

But to all who have studied the history of the past and have marked the trend of current events the policy of the Administration seems fraught with great danger to the Republic. The greatest and wisest statesman of this country has said "that a great standing army is a menace to freedom." He said this, having before him the examples of history, and had he lived in this age he might have seen the whole of Europe bending under the burden of armies and groaning under taxation levied for their support. These great European armies and navies are maintained and supported for the same purposes and for the same ends which this Administration is striving to accomplish. Shall we enter the same pathways and pursue the same course which have been fatal to those who have gone before us?

The present Administration has given to us two examples of its purpose to govern as dependent colonies the territory which we have unfortunately acquired from Spain. Take as the first example the treatment of the people of the island of Porto Rico. We all know that when our Army, commanded by General Miles, invaded that island the people welcomed him with open arms; that the little children came down to the shores of that island with United States flags in their hands and garlands of flowers to strew the pathway of our soldiers. They did so because they believed that this was a free and independent republic; that it would suffer no subjects under its flag, and that it would confer upon them the free institutions of the United States—that they would receive the immunities and privileges of our own citizens. They were strengthened in this belief by the proclamation of the Commanding General of our Armies, which declared that they should be free. And yet in the last session of Congress a bill was passed for the civil government of Porto Rico, which while it provided for a representative body to be elected by 27 per cent of the people of that island, it also provided for an executive council, which was given the power to pass upon every measure adopted by the representative body.

The members of the executive council are appointed by the President of the United States. They are his creatures. They depend for their offices upon his will and pleasure, and thus he holds within his grasp the absolute power of governing the people of that island. They are not even given a representative upon this floor. They are taxed without representation, and every principle of freedom is violated by that measure. This legislation was an astounding revelation to the people of Porto Rico, particularly so when they were about to send representatives to the Spanish Cortes. I will not stop to speak of the outrage perpetrated upon these people by forcing them to pay tariff duties. Thus we see what the purpose of the Administration is in this instance.

Another example of the intention of the Administration to disregard the principles of the Constitution and to violate every maxim of our republican form of government is the treatment which has been accorded to the people of the Philippine Islands. In the first place, why should we ever have acquired islands from seven to eight thousand miles from our nearest seaport, populated by from eight to ten millions of people who can never become citizens of this country, having a climate unsuited to our people, presenting no advantages for enterprise or for business and situated in a part of the globe which is the storm center of the world, right at the door of China, where the eagles are gathered together for a division of spoil; where it will be almost necessary that we should take an active and perhaps a militant part in the quarrels of the great powers—islands whose permanent retention means a war with some one or other of the great European powers? We are told that it was a manifest destiny which placed upon us the burden of these islands. Was it manifest destiny which caused the commissioners of this country at Paris to demand the Philippine Islands and to pay for them $20,000,000? Was it not rather the will and wish of the President to acquire these islands which caused that clause to be incorporated in the treaty? The public knows nothing of the secret instructions given to the commissioners who negotiated the treaty of Paris, but assuredly they simply obeyed their instructions. Why should the President have desired the possession of these islands, and, having acquired the possession of them, why did not he lay down a policy to be pursued toward them which would have assured them of self-government? If this had been done we would have been spared the loss of blood and treasure which has marked every step taken by the Administration in the Philippine Islands.

In casting about to find the reason for this remarkable purchase of these islands we can only come to the conclusion that it was done for the purpose of giving to the Administration an opportunity of pursuing and building up a policy of colonization and imperialism. It is an excuse for a standing army, for a great navy. What will be the result of this permanent retention of the Philippines? First, it is necessary to maintain a large standing army—witness the provisions of this bill, which provides for an army of over 100,000 men—and which it will cost this country at least $125,000,000 a year to support. Nor will this cost be confined to one year, or two years, or twenty years. By the passage of this bill we are fixing upon us and our posterity a great burden of taxation. Generations yet unborn will bear it, for it has been the history of all European countries which have undertaken to conquer and subdue Asiatic populations that they were compelled to maintain for generations large standing armies in those countries.

England has been governing India for two hundred years, and yet to-day she maintains in that country an army of 80,000 men. France has been undertaking to subdue Algiers for seventy-five years, and she maintains there to-day a standing army of 72,000 men. Nor can it be said that it is possible to pay these armies from the revenue of the colonies. I venture the assertion that after the payment of the civil officers and other internal governmental expenses of the Philippine Islands out of the island revenues nothing will remain with which to pay the Army. I desire to call attention to another phase of this question of a standing army, and that is whether it will be possible to recruit the same by voluntary enlistment.

At no time in our history has the standing Army of this country been recruited up to the number of men allowed by law, and there is no reason to believe that it can be done now. Everyone familiar with the conditions in the Philippine Islands knows that it will be necessary, if they are to be permanently retained by this country, to have the Army up to its full complement, and if they can not be obtained by voluntary enlistment they must be by conscription. Another inevitable consequence of the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands is the building of a navy as large as any other navy in the world, because, being in the very center, as it were, of those entanglements and quarrels which are now pending between the great European powers, we must prepare ourselves to defend the possessions which we have acquired in the Orient, and to do this we must build up our Navy.

To build a navy equal to that of England it will cost for years to come a hundred million of dollars per year. Then, too, we must fortify the coasts of these islands, and that expense, together with the expense of the civil government of those islands, will amount to no less than fifty millions per annum. The pension list of this country is now $150,000,000 per year, and the increase of the Army will mean a corresponding increase of pensions, and the ultimate result of this policy advocated and insisted upon by the President and his party means, in money alone, $500,000,000 per year, to be collected in shape of taxes from the people of this country.

I do not speak of the blood which will be shed, of the many who will die of disease as a result of this imperial policy. There have been very many deaths among our soldiers in the Philippines. Hundreds of them are in lunatic asylums; hundreds of them have become useless from disease and are pensioners upon the bounty of the country. We are told that the time has come for this country to be a world power, and by world power is meant a fighting power, for since the Declaration of Independence one hundred and twenty-four years ago we have been a world power in the best sense of the word. Under our influence this continent has been free from European aggression, and every State in Southern and Central America has had over them the protecting wings of our Government.

Our commerce has been projected into every sea. Products of our factories and of our farms are sold in the uttermost parts of the earth. Our inventions, our improvements in all the arts of civilization have been diffused into every corner of the globe. The power and dignity of our Government have been respected by the great States of Europe. We have been appealed to to settle the difficulties of other countries, and we have been recognized the world over as one of the great powers of the earth. No amount of warfare can add to our renown. The acquisition of no island and of no foreign territory can enhance our greatness. No standing army and no great navy can do more for our commerce; no imperial policy, no colonization can be of benefit to our people.

We are to-day the greatest, the most independent, of the nations, and we will remain so as long as we faithfully adhere to the Declaration of Independence and to the Constitution. But it is said that the Democratic party, under the lead of Thomas Jefferson, was the first to inaugurate a policy of expansion. It is true that in the early years of our country, and while the Democratic party was in power, we added to our domain the Louisiana purchase in 1803, Florida in 1819, Texas in 1845, California, New Mexico, Arizona, and a part of Colorado as a consequence of the Mexican war; but that was true expansion. It was an expansion over territory where the Constitution followed the flag. It was expansion over people who could become a part of and be assimilated with our people. It was the expansion of our political ideas, and it produced for this country great States and statesmen.

In order to carry it out it was not necessary to maintain great standing armies and vast navies. The territories which we took were within our geographical limitations. We did not have to send our soldiers 8,000 miles across the ocean. In other words, it was true and natural expansion of the boundaries of our country. In one sense it was an expansion for self-defense, because through the Louisiana purchase we obtained control of the Mississippi River—that great artery of commerce which extends from Minnesota to Louisiana—and it would not have been unwise had we further extended our power and controlled the St. Lawrence as well. How different was that expansion from that which is now proposed by the Republican party. That party proposes to erect in distant lands governments antagonistic to ours in form and substance, to be maintained by military force, and to necessitate for all times a tremendous burden of taxation and a useless waste of life.

I am unalterably opposed to the creation of this great standing Army, because I know that once created it will remain forever an incubus upon us and our posterity. I do not believe that there is any necessity for it if the Administration will declare its purpose to grant to the people of the Philippine Islands self-government. The war now being waged there will cease, and all necessity for such a body of soldiers as 65,000 men in those islands will be obviated. There are now in those islands a large number of men. There are a large number of military stations. There are many ships and many sailors stationed in the waters of those islands, and yet, after two years of warfare, the authority of the United States does not extend beyond the sound of their guns.

It is reliably stated that one can not go from one garrison to another without the protection of an armed escort. It is a crime to continue a policy such as this, under the conditions now existing, when all could be changed by a mere declaration of the Government. This Government owes it to itself and to its people and to the traditions of the past and to the hopes of the future that a perpetual warfare should cease, that the blood and treasure of this country should no longer be poured out for purposes of conquest.

However much I may be opposed to this incubus of standing Army, I recognize that it is necessary to provide troops for the immediate necessities in the Philippines and in this country. From the best information I can obtain I am inclined to the belief that 100,000 men will not be too many for the present needs. While we were told before the election that Mr. McKinley's election meant immediate cessation of hostilities in the Philippines; while the Philippine Commission made a report to this effect, which was widely used as a campaign document, yet we are now confronted with a report from General MacArthur, the commanding general of the United States in the Philippines, in which it it is declared that it is absolutely necessary to continue the present number of troops now in the Philippines, and indeed to increase that number.

Therefore it is that we must provide the necessary number of soldiers until this Administration shall declare a policy which will make it possible to have peace in those islands. The substitute offered by the gentleman from New York will give to this Administration all the time it needs to pacify these islands, if they can be pacified. It keeps the Army up for the length of time that enlistments are made in the Regular Army. Best of all, it provides for a temporary instead of a permanent army. If during the two years before us the people of this country shall determine that they want a permanent standing army, that army can be provided for without additional cost or expense by repealing the act proposed by the gentleman from New York.

I want now to call attention to the fact that the section which has just been read shows that the President is authorized to maintain and raise a standing army of 100,000 men.

I shall vote for the substitute which will be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN], which gives the country the law now on the statute books and continues it for two years. It does seem to me that it is the duty certainly of every Democrat on this floor to do everything in his power to prevent a permanent standing army, and the only way to do this is to vote for a temporary army. If there is one principle which we have contended against, it is against a permanent standing army. Under this bill we have a permanent standing army of a hundred thousand men placed upon us.

Now, it may be said that the responsibility is not upon us upon this side; but the minority has a responsibility as well as the majority, and if the members on this side of the House want to do their duty by the country under the circumstances which now confront us they must vote for the lesser of two evils. By so doing we may prevent the passage of this bill. We know that we can not avoid voting at this particular time for some bill which will provide for troops in the Philippine Islands. It may be that the decision of the Supreme Court may so affect the minds of our friends on the other side that they will not want to stay in the Philippines. That is another reason why this question of a permanent standing army should be postponed as long as possible. I say that we want to defeat a permanent standing army, and in order to give an opportunity to the members of this House to vote against a permanent standing army we should offer something affirmative; we should construct something.

When we offer them the same military system under which the country has been living for the past two years, we give ourselves time, so that circumstances may change and the Republicans not be able to insist that there is any necessity for a large standing army by reason of conditions in the Philippines. In this way we may avoid entirely a permanent standing army in this country. It is the only feasible plan, it does seem to me, for a great party to assume; it is the only position which can be defended; and I believe that if gentlemen will think about this proposition and about this standing army they will vote for the substitute to be offered by the gentleman from New York, and if that is not accepted by the House they will then vote against this bill providing for this permanent standing army. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say one word about this section. The reason it is put in the bill is because if you make the net a little low the enlistments are stopped at once, and by giving this authority you can hold the maximum at 96,000, if it is desired, or above the 58,000, so that the full number of the minimum can be maintained.

Mr. HAY. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "direct," in line 9, section 31, the following:

"Provided, That in the event of the enlistment of a soldier in the Army for the period required by law, and after the expiration of one year's service, should either of his parents die leaving the other solely dependent upon the soldier for support, such soldier may be honorably discharged from the service of the United States, upon due proof being made of such condition to the Secretary of War."

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I can see no sense of justice whatever in holding a soldier in the service under such circumstances. Of what use is a man in the Army if his mother is at home dependent upon him, and mourning her life away because of his absence under circumstances which entirely changed after his voluntary admission into the Army? I know of cases where parents have spared their sons to the Army when the emergency arose which required them to go, and without hesitation they parted with perhaps their only son.

At the time the family of the soldier was intact, his father and mother were living, and no particular necessity existed for him to remain at home; but after his admission into the Army his father may have died, leaving the mother solely dependent upon her soldier boy. Is it right or proper that the mother should be deprived of the services of her son at home under such circumstances? All praise should be accorded to the generous, patriotic mothers of the country who have spared their sons in time of the nation's peril, and no better appreciation can be shown for this great and voluntary sacrifice than to permit the son to return with an honorable discharge when he may be needed to sustain his widowed mother at home.

I believe it is the custom, and one of the regulations, of countries operating under conscription laws, that they will not take an only son, even under conscription or draft, as they recognize the fact that he may be as necessary to his widowed mother as to the country itself. Surely, our country can be as generous as the empires across the sea, when we recollect that the greatest armies that the world has ever seen have been recruited from among the young men of our country, who voluntarily came to its service whenever peril or disaster threatened our land. I am unwilling that there should be no law regulating matters of this kind. It may be said that the Department regulations should control, but I deny that they are either as effective, as just, or as kindly as they should be in their administration, and I think if we put into the statute law governing the Army a wholesome provision of this character we will be doing but justice to the families of enlisted men. I understand that this is not objected to by the committee, and call for a vote.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 32. That the Secretary of War is authorized to detach from the Army at large such number of enlisted men as may be necessary to perform duty at the various recruiting rendezvous, and while performing such duty one member of each party shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant, and one the rank, pay, and allowances of corporal of the arm of the service to which they respectively belong.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, to be added after the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the Secretary of War is hereby directed to have made and delivered to each officer and enlisted man who served during the war with Spain and who has not been dishonorably discharged from the service a bronze medal of such design as he may approve, such medals to cost not more than $1 each.

Mr. HULL. I raise the point of order against the amendment. It has nothing to do with the organization of the Army or any part of it.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for a moment?

Mr. HULL. I withhold it at the gentleman's request.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I will say frankly that I am inclined to think that the gentleman's point of order is probably well taken. I intend to introduce a bill along the line of this amendment, and knowing that when introduced it will go to its long sleep, and probably its last, in the box of the proper committee and may never be heard from again in the House, I wanted to bring it before the House at this time, in the hope of getting the attention of the proper committee to the matter. I believe that it is a wise and just provision. We are following so many precedents set by foreign armies, and a good many of them, it appears to me, bad precedents, that I think it is time we borrow some good ideas from them. A medal is given, as I understand it, in nearly every service except that of the United States to every soldier who participates in actual war. It becomes an heirloom in the family; it is preserved and handed down from father to son, and I believe that any boy raised in the presence of his father's old musket or old sword, or who has received as part of his heritage one of these medals for gallant service in actual war, is a better citizen and more likely to be a patriot and offer his services when the country needs them than one who is not. For this reason I have presented this amendment and intend to introduce a bill containing similar provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 36. That any officer of the Army on the active list below the grade of brigadier-general who served during the civil war shall, when retired, be retired with the rank and pay of the next higher grade, except such officers as may be retired under section 34 of this act.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 32, after the word "act," insert the following:

"And all officers of the Army who served during the civil war and have heretofore been retired at a grade below that of brigadier-general, and are still living, shall hereafter be entitled to the rank and pay of the next higher grade."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was under general debate I called the attention of the committee to the effect of the provision which has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, which is to retire all officers now upon the active list who served during the civil war at one grade higher than that which they occupy on the date of their retirement. It leaves out of consideration a large list of officers who served during the civil war and were compelled by the wounds which they received in that war, or in the Indian wars following it, to retire before their age compelled their retirement. In other words, it rewards length of service without rewarding hardship of service.

The naval personnel bill which we passed a few years ago contained the same provision with respect to the Navy as that now before the committee. The result has been that there has been a continued agitation by the officers who were discriminated against in favor of some such measure as I have now proposed. Such a measure has passed the Senate, is now before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I understand it is giving them a great deal of trouble. The gentleman from Iowa, in reply to my questions, admitted that this provision was discriminating justice; that it discriminated against the officer who has heretofore retired. I think the provision ought to go out or be amended. Without further delay I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I have received since the beginning of this session of the House, which puts in graphic form the hardship of the discrimination which the committee proposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. W. H. MOODY.

DEAR SIR: That clause in the Army reorganization bill, now up in the House of Representatives, relating to the future retirement of officers with one grade who served during the civil war, etc., fails entirely to cover that class of officers who served during the civil war, but who were compelled to be retired on low rank on account of the severity of their service by reason of wounds or disability incurred in the service. That is no disgrace and should not militate against them now that they are on the shady side of life. That clause was originally intended as a bill in equity to even up things as a matter of justice. The law of October, 1890, gave many officers, also disabled since the civil war, an advanced grade, some of whom were never on a battlefield, and consequently not so much entitled to this distinction as we are. They are comparatively young men, and it is very galling to those of us who know what we went through in that war to see such discrimination. This bill will have practically the same effect. In short, the whole thing is a discrimination now in favor of those who, by length of service, but not by wounds or disease or necessarily severe service (perhaps they never once placed their lives in jeopardy), have already got all the rank they were ever entitled to or could reasonably expect, and will result in again making the retired list top-heavy with brigadier-generals and colonels, instead of giving those who got the brunt of that war and were retired as first lieutenants and captains, the advanced grade to even up matters in equity and justice.

Mr. Chairman, the writer of that letter is a type of the many hundred officers who served throughout the civil war and in our Indian hostilities after the close of the civil war. He was compelled to retire long before the age limit on account of disabilities he had incurred in the service. If you pass this provision in the manner in which it is reported, we shall all be beset by officers on the retired list who will believe that they have been discriminated against, and their cause will be a just one. The provision ought not to be passed at all, or it ought to do equal justice to all soldiers.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts be reported again to the House.

The amendment was again read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MAHON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ARMY BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this amendment. If this section in the bill passes, a rank injustice will be done to a large number of men on the retired list. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] that the provision of this section must cover all the men on the retired list or cover none.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs time and time again have been appealed to to allow officers to be retired with the rank and pay above the rank which they now held, and the committee has uniformly refused to report such bill. Now, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] that personally I have no objection to this amendment, but of the men that this section will cover I can safely say that seven-eighths of them were never under fire. You retired last year three officers who went through the civil war and had four or five wounds on their persons, who served twenty-two years on the frontier fighting Indians. Do you propose that these men shall be discriminated against? Mr. Chairman, if you are going to discriminate and have any class legislation, let it be in favor of the men who bore the brunt of the civil war. [Applause.] You propose to put in a young man who entered the service in 1865 and since that time has been holding a position in the War Department.

Mr. HULL. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the bill provides that these men shall be men who served through the civil war.

Mr. MAHON. "Served in the civil war" or "during the civil war;" that is, any part of it. Now, Mr. Chairman, this section covers men that have never been under fire, but because they have been detailed to perform civil services in the War Department, will you put men of that kind on the retired list, with rank and pay above the grade they hold, and turn down old men who are walking through the streets of Washington to-day, many of them with one arm and many on crutches, men who bore the brunt of battle and served many long years in our Indian wars? I hope this amendment will be adopted or the whole section stricken out.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does this amendment include the Indian wars?

Mr. MAHON. I think not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the justice, or partial justice, of this proposed amendment; but I warn the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] and the committee that if it is adopted, and the living men to come within the scope of the amendment are put on the retired list at a grade above that which they hold, what are you going to do about the discrimination that has already, or will thereby be done, against the dead men who were carried on the retired list at the grade they did hold? It will simply result, in my judgment, in a general provision shortly that the heirs and legal representatives of these dead persons shall have the right to assert a claim to equalize them as representatives upon the same basis as the men who have lived to see this day; and there probably would be a great equity in their favor, because a great many of them died on account of the superior service which they rendered.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that this is not retroactive.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand that; but it creates a retroactive principle.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I see the embarrassment, but it arises out of the section; strike out the section altogether.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the trouble about the amendment as offered is that you enter upon a wide field, and there has been no definite information given as to what it will do.

The section as reported by the committee confines its benefits to a very few cases; there is no question about that. It corresponds in some degree with what the nation has already done for the Navy. In the provision for the Navy no restriction was made as to rank, but each officer as he retired was allowed to do so at the next higher grade than that which he actually held. In this bill the benefits of the provision are confined to officers below the rank of brigadier-general.

I can sympathize with what my friend from Pennsylvania says to some extent, but not to the full extent that he goes. I know men who are now in the service who have performed service continuously since 1861 and who are now simply majors in the regular establishment. One such officer, whom I now call to mind, has just returned from Manila broken in health, compelled to retire before he could attain the next higher grade. If this provision be stricken out entirely, he will be compelled to retire with the rank of major.

It seems to me that if my friend from Pennsylvania can not get all that he wants he ought not, for that reason, to stand here and refuse to such men as Major McClure the small meed of recognition for long, faithful, and distinguished service by allowing him to attain one grade higher before he retires. For many reasons I would prefer that the section remain as it is, rather than that we should endanger the passage of a measure recognizing men who have been performing this meritorious service.

I know the case which my friend has especially in mind—the case of a gallant soldier who fought his way up from civil life to be a colonel, when he reached the age of retirement. I would be willing to see this recognition given to such officers; but in the committee and since it has been my conviction that if we undertake to provide for all these officers we shall endanger the passage of the amendment and thereby fail to do justice to those who should have justice done to them.

Many officers now on the retired list have for the last twenty years been engaged in other business, making more money than the amount they would receive as full pay. There has been nothing to prevent any man on the retired list from transacting some line of business, or doing something by which his pay might be increased, while men in the regular line, with only one-fourth more pay, can not do anything to add one penny to their salary.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Suppose the retired officer is disabled, which is frequently the case.

Mr. HULL. I have known such officers to be disabled, with an arm off or a leg off. I have known men to have served in the volunteers—men who had been shot through the body and who were living on a pension. But when we undertake to extend this provision as proposed, we are liable to enlarge the scope of the measure to such an extent as to endanger the entire proposition, and thus deny justice to many officers who have been in the service during all these years.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, if this section had been drawn so as to confine its benefits to officers who have been for thirty or forty years in the Regular Army there might be some excuse for it. But I want to repeat, in regard to the men who bore the brunt of the battle in the civil war as regular officers—who went through four years of active service in the field—that there are not many of those men who are not to-day on the retired list, forced there by reason of exposure or wounds in the field.

But you propose to take men who are still on the active list—which is evidence of the fact that they have never performed any extraordinarily hard service during the civil war—men who are still in active service forty years after that war has ended, and put them on the retired list, promoting them over the heads of men who deserve this recognition at the hands of the Government.

Mr. HULL. General Lawton served all through the civil war, and but for his recent death in battle he would be in active service to-day.

Mr. MAHON. I offered a bill for the benefit of a man who belonged to Senator Lane's company, who entered the White House on the 16th of April, 1861, to defend that house and the President, who served as a sergeant in that company and was discharged, who carries to-day a discharge signed by President Lincoln, he being one of the only five men in this country who hold such a discharge. Having been wounded three times during the war, besides having been confined in Libby Prison, he went into the regular service as a second lieutenant. After the war he was sent to the frontier. He was not one of the pets of the Department. For thirty-four long years he served in the Rocky Mountains, fighting the Indians, without even a detail, and, notwithstanding the fact that his body was scarred with wounds, this committee refused to bring in a bill here to authorize the President to put him on the retired list as a brigadier-general.

Mr. HULL. Did not the committee report that bill?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir.

Mr. HULL. It did.

Mr. MAHON. Well, you never called it up in the House.

Mr. HULL. We could not get it up.

Mr. MAHON. That man fought his way up from civil life to the rank of colonel in the Sixth United States Cavalry, and by operation of law he was compelled to retire as a colonel.

I for one, as a member of this House, will never agree that men who have been holding down chairs in the War Department shall have the benefit of a provision of this kind, while men such as those I have named are kept out. With me this is not a matter of money. Justice is justice, let it cost what it will. If the men embraced in the provision of the committee are to be retired, in the name of God, I appeal to the chairman of this committee to allow my amendment to pass, to do justice to such men as those for whom I am now speaking. I remember that on the battlefield of Gettysburg a division of regulars marched into that bloody wheat field and were swept into those woods, so that in less than nine minutes eighteen hundred of them were on their backs. Men who were regular officers in that charge are walking the streets of this city to-day, maimed for life. Yet the provision of the committee would forbid those men being placed on the retired list at a grade above the rank they held when forced out of the service on account of being crippled.

Now, the gentleman talks of the families of these men. Why, Mr. Chairman, we take care of the men in their lives. We take care of them in this world, but do not propose to provide for them in other worlds. We are not bound to take care of their families in this respect. Our pension laws provide ample protection for them. But if you place these men on the retired list, then I appeal for justice in the first place for the men who fought the terrible struggle during the civil war and fought it to a successful conclusion. And even though near forty years have elapsed since that war began, there are many men who fought in that war still on the active list, which is proof positive that their service was not of the hardest kind and did not disable them from active service in the affairs of life.

Mr. HULL. I understood the gentleman to refer to men who were not in perfect health.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I wish a moment longer. I wish to offer an amendment which will include all Indian officers in the same category. There are many men still living who were crippled by wounds or ill health in the Indian wars, and I want the House to adopt an amendment to provide for them, and then, if you see proper to do so thereafter, you can vote down this whole provision as amended if this section is not regarded as a wise one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the amendment would not be in order at this time, as another is pending.

Mr. MAHON. I understand that, Mr. Chairman, but I simply gave notice that I shall offer the amendment at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The amendment proposed by Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts was again read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were—ayes 61, noes 74.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on the vote just taken.

Mr. MAHON. I move to strike out the entire section, No. 36.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment now pending, and upon which tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts and Mr. HULL as tellers.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Before the vote was announced,

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to do so, I shall withdraw the demand for tellers and move to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that motion has been suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion has already been made by two gentlemen on the floor.

Mr. HULL. What is the pending motion now?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike out the entire section.

Mr. HULL. Before action is taken upon that, Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard for a moment.

I hope the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which I understand to be to strike out the section, will not be agreed to by the committee. The provision as it stands in the bill simply gives to those who are now entitled to be upon the active list and who served throughout or during the civil war, or in the Indian war, of which my friend from Pennsylvania speaks so pathetically, or during the last war with Spain, a grade higher than that to which they are now entitled upon their retirement. The appeal for the old soldier who was on the retired list for some years can be made more eloquently by the gentleman from Pennsylvania for those who are now on the active list and must soon retire at low grades in the Army.

When the Navy personnel bill was passed the officers of the Navy received one grade higher, regardless of rank, for all those who served through the civil war and were then on the active list. This provision confines the rank below that of brigadier-general, so that it will not give the higher ranks to men placed on the retired list under this provision. There are a few of the old soldiers of the civil war who served from 1861 who are now ready to be retired and who will retire as majors, one or two as captains, and one or two as lieutenant-colonels, unless this provision is adopted. It simply gives to the Army in a small degree the recognition so generously and freely and heartily accorded to the Navy during the last Congress. It seems to me that because an amendment extending its scope was not adopted by the committee, that should be no reason for refusing this act of justice to these old men, who have served their country continuously for almost forty years.

It does not apply to the men to whom my friend refers, men holding soft jobs in Washington; because in almost every case of that character, where a man has been in Washington continuously, holding staff positions, having served through the civil war, he is now on the retired list as a colonel or as a brigadier-general. It refers to the men who have been on the frontier, who have not had the opportunities for promotion, who have served their country, who have been confined to the meager pay of each rank of the service, and who now come to Congress through this provision, adopted, I think, with practical unanimity by the committee, recommended by two or three Secretaries of War, approved, in my judgment, by the conscience of everyone who has investigated it.

I hope this provision will be held in the bill by the votes of this committee. It does seem to me that the man who poses as the friend of the old soldier will not take occasion, through pique at not getting all that he wanted, to strike in the face the most deserving old soldiers who can be found.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; I yield, if he wants to ask me a question.

Mr. GAINES. I desire to ask if, when this officer is retired with higher grade, he also gets a larger salary?

Mr. HULL. Why, of course; it gives him three-fourths of the salary of the grade.

Mr. GAINES. It not only retires him, but gives him a higher salary?

Mr. HULL. Well, if he is a major now, and there is one case of that kind, he would be retired as a lieutenant-colonel, and the salary of a lieutenant-colonel on the active list is $500 a year more than the salary of a major. This provision would give him three-quarters of that extra $500.

Mr. GAINES. Then you are not satisfied, when he retires from active service, that he shall have the same salary that he has been getting while in the active service, but, in other words, you want to promote him and give him a higher salary when he is doing nothing than he received when he was in active service.

Mr. HULL. I believe that you ought to give to the Army in this small degree what you have already given to the Navy in a much larger degree.

Mr. GAINES. You propose to retire a man and give him an increased salary for the privilege of doing nothing.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, apart from the glaring injustice of this bill advocated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], which gives to a few men emoluments which ought to have been given to all of the class if they ought to have been given at all, the provision is vicious for the further reason that it builds up the retired list of the Army. Already this list is enormous, and you have to-day added 36 officers—a colonel, a major, 4 captains, and 20 or 30 lieutenants and second lieutenants of the Regular Army—who will be placed upon this retired list. Moreover, your bill, which provides for a minimum standing army of 58,000 men, provides for officers enough for an army of 100,000 men. In other words, when you decrease your army of 100,000 men down to 58,000 men you will still have officers for 100,000 men, who will have no troops to command. So that I say from every point of view it is not right to keep this section in the bill. It is an injustice to a large number of retired Army officers, and it is taking another step toward building up the retired list, which is growing in numbers every day, which is costing millions of dollars, and which will continue to cost more with this permanent large army which you propose to put upon the country.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, we might as well be frank about this matter, and I propose to state my position. I am willing to put any man on the retired list with the grade and pay above his rank for distinguished services in behalf of his country. We have many men in this country, many men as brave as any country ever produced, that this Congress could with great propriety and great justice put upon the retired list with a slight promotion. The gentleman talks about being in the way of the old soldiers. I am not in favor of putting a man on the retired list with promotion and additional pay unless he has rendered some service to the Government that entitles him to that promotion. Now, if the gentleman will amend the bill and say it shall apply to all the officers on the active list and retired list who served through the entire civil war and the Indian wars, and after the civil war on the frontier in active service for twenty-five years, I will vote for your amendment.

In the last Congress, Mr. Chairman, in what was intended to be only a small bureau of the War Department, we now have a gentleman holding the position of chief clerk with the rank of brigadier-general. The people of this country, Mr. Chairman, will stand so much and no more, and I believe we have reached the extreme point of making soft places for men who have not earned them by compelling this House to promote them by putting measures for their benefit into general bills that we can not defeat. If gentlemen think of services which entitle a man to promotion, bring in a private bill, and if you convince the House he is entitled to it he will get it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, maybe a few cases of hardship may come from the striking out of this section; but, on the other hand, a large number of men who will be benefited by this section are men who never earned it on the battlefield. The men on the active list to-day are few that were in the civil war from 1861 and in it all through, and then spent their days on the frontier in fighting the Indians. There are not many of those men on the active list to day. The officer who did no hard service and who was not exposed to the elements, did not expose his body to the deadly bullet, is the one to be benefited by this. I will venture to say that seven out of eight men that this bill will favor never had a bullet scratch upon their bodies.

I have no doubt that some of them had; but I will not, for one, allow you to take these men and promote them and give them extra pay who are still on the active list and could go out and work at blacksmithing if they were compelled to do it. There are men on the active list and on the retired list by operation of law of 63 years, and there are some old soldiers maimed in battle now in their eighties, or at least in great age, and yet you would give these men on the active list more pay. Many of these old men were compelled to lay down their swords because they had no hands to hold them, many of them because they had no limbs to march with, and many of them quit the service because they were broken in health, and they have been living all these days until they are now old men. The gentleman says it is not going to cost much. This also will not cost much. I am in favor of striking out this section and do justice to all these men. I will favor a bill promoting men for distinguished service, but will not favor it otherwise.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, I desire to call just one proposition to the attention of the House. The bill provides, and the chairman who reports it says, that however long or short a time an officer has served in the Army, whether he has been in active service or not, when he is retired he shall be retired at a higher salary. In other words, when he does nothing he receives more than when he is doing something. This section so provides. Is this right? Mr. Chairman, is there to be no such thing as retrenchment and reform again? If so, is it not high time when such a brazen proposition as this is presented that we should begin? I say in justice to the Government and in justice to the taxpayers that no man who retires, to do nothing but luxuriate at the summer resorts and take his Eastern trips, should have his salary increased, when for years he served actively for what he considered a satisfactory sum, with the right to resign. Such a law is an inducement to retire from posts of duty and for monetary considerations.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this section ought to be stricken out. The principle involved in it is illogical. Promotion is given to a man in service for two reasons—one as a reward and a stimulant, and the other to give a higher field and broader opportunity of service, so that the experience secured in the lower grade may be utilized for the public good. Now, this proposition is that a man who has reached that point where no other services can be rendered by giving him this broader field of usefulness shall be promoted. I do not believe that it is right. I believe that it is an attempt to modify the pay of these men, the retired officers. I believe it ought to be done by direction rather than by indirection, if done at all. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that during my absence from the floor the retired list of the Navy has been referred to. In the reorganization of the Navy, in an act passed some two years ago, we made provision that those officers who served during the civil war should be retired with the rank and pay of the next higher grade, but the reason we did it at that time was due to the special conditions which then existed in the line of the Navy. We found that there were a great many officers who had come in during the civil war and were clogging up the higher grades of the Navy and keeping back the younger men, so that, for instance, we had lieutenants in the line of the Navy who were 50 years of age, and they were not reaching the rank of command until they were really too old to command a ship. Now, we inserted that clause as an incentive and an encouragement to the men who had served in the civil war to retire from the service for the benfit of the whole Navy.

Since that time those who served during the civil war, but who retired before the passage of that act, have been importuning us to give them the same rank and pay which have been received by those who retired under the operation of the personnel bill.

But if you retire these officers as a reward for past services, in that case you should treat them all alike, in my judgment, the whole retired list.

But the reason why we inserted a similar clause in the Navy bill at that time was due to the peculiar conditions which existed in the line of the Navy. I do not consider that can be used as an argument in connection with this section of the reorganization bill of the Army.

Mr. HULL. Why did you not insert a clause retiring them without giving them the extra rank and pay?

Mr. FOSS. We did not have the power, under the old law.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; you could have retired them at any age you wanted to.

Mr. FOSS. Not unless they were retired for disability.

Mr. HULL. It is not the disability which retires a man; it is the law. Congress can fix the age at 54 as well as it can fix it at 64. Congress can retire a man at any age it sees fit.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes; we could have passed a new law.

Mr. HULL. You could have provided that all men who have been in the service thirty or twenty years should be retired, and covered your civil-war soldiers by that provision, as easily as you could by giving them additional rank and pay. All I ask is that the Army be placed in some degree on the same footing as the Navy.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to say. I wanted to point out the special reason why we did it at that particular time. It was not as a reward to these men who served during the civil war, but, as I say, it was put in as an incentive and encouragement for them to retire for the good of the service.

Mr. DAYTON. I would like to suggest that the provisions for the retirement under the personnel bill of the Navy provided two methods for retirement, one voluntary and one involuntary. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposing to strike out all of section 36.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

When, in the opinion of the President, natives of the Philippine Islands shall, by their services and character, show fitness for command, the President is authorized to make provisional appointments to the grades of second and first lieutenants from such natives, who, when so appointed, shall have the pay and allowances to be fixed by the Secretary of War, not exceeding those of corresponding grades of the Regular Army.

[Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 39. That the President is authorized to organize and maintain one provisional regiment of not exceeding three battalions of infantry for service in Porto Rico, the enlisted strength thereof to be composed of natives of that island. The regiment shall be organized as to numbers, pay, and allowances as authorized for infantry regiments of the Regular Army. The field officers shall be selected from officers of the next lower grades in the Regular Army and shall, while so serving in the higher grade, have the rank, pay, and allowances thereof. The company and regimental and battalion staff officers shall be appointed by the President. The President may, in his discretion, continue with their own consent the volunteer officers and enlisted men of the Porto Rico regiment, whose terms of service expire by law July 1, 1901. Enlistments for the Porto Rico regiment shall be made for periods of three years, unless sooner discharged. The regiment shall be continued in service until further directed by Congress.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I move to amend by adding to this section the words—

The President shall, on or before the 1st day of December, 1902, reduce the enlisted force to 25,000, which number shall not thereafter be exceeded.

Mr. HULL. I rise to a point of order. Unless the gentleman applies this provision to the whole bill, the amendment is not in order. The pending section relates to a regiment of Porto Ricans. You can not reduce that regiment to 25,000. I submit that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not germane.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I move it, then, as an independent section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order. It will be in order as an additional section.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, probably this proposition should have been offered as an amendment to section 35, but in the rapidity of reading and discussion I failed to offer it when that section was before the Committee of the Whole.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is the duty of every patriotic citizen, absolutely independent of partisan affiliation, to uphold the Executive hand in putting down the revolt now existing in the Philippine Islands. Those islands having become part of the land owned by this Union, it is our duty to uphold the hand of the Executive in restoring order there. After order is restored the line of demarcation between the great parties of this country will be sufficiently in evidence to allow full discussion of questions of political policy with reference to the government there—questions of such moment that they have not, in my opinion, been paralleled in our history.

But this proposition of reorganizing the Army of the United States finds its base and support when presented to the people of this country upon the ground that we must of necessity protect our possessions in Asia. Having grown from being the United States of America to be the United States of America and Asia, popular glamour, created by words of war, by reference to armed troops and generals and captains and lieutenants and the rank and file, that glamour may for the moment deceive the public, so that a temporary applause will be given to the passage of this bill. But, Mr. Chairman, this bill does not mean the mere suppression of riots in the Philippines. It means the undemocratic and un-American creation of a standing army for all time. If your excuse is the existing condition in the Philippine Islands, then limit your bill to an army of 100,000 men for two years. If you can not suppress the insurrection in the Philippine Islands within those two years, then it will be proper policy for the United States of America to do what Spain did after she had held those islands for three centuries—to find some other nation that wants to buy a gold brick in Asia and sell those islands to her. [Laughter.]

That excuse, Mr. Chairman, is the only one that has been given to the people for the creation of an army that is 25,000 greater in number than the troops called for by President Lincoln in 1861. There is no necessity for such an army. If there is a temporary necessity, let there be a limitation. If in two years 100,000 men can not quell a riot in islands populated by 9,000,000 of Malay Indians and Chinese—populated by 9,000,000 of people, only 5,000 of whom are of Castilian blood and pure whites—if you can not make American citizens of those people in two years, you can not do it at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. It seems to me there is no necessity for further debate on this amendment, and I call for a vote.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. McDERMOTT was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of of the bill.

The Clerk read section 40, as follows:

SEC. 40. That no officer or private soldier shall sell intoxicating drinks of any kind, as a bartender or otherwise, in any army post, or on any army transport, or in any encampment, or fort, or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue such general order as may be necessary to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out section 40 of the bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the following section:

"SEC. 40. The sale of or dealing in beer, wine, or intoxicating liquors by any person in any post, exchange, or canteen, or army transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States, is hereby prohibited. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this section of the committee's bill involves what is known as the "canteen" question. The section as reported by the committee is substantially the existing provision of law, with regard to the provisions of which there has been so much controversy in the last few months.

I will read the provision of law as it now stands:

SEC. 17. That no officer or private soldier shall be detailed to sell intoxicating drinks, as a bartender or otherwise, in any post exchange or canteen, nor shall any other person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue such general order as may be necessary to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect.

Very serious criticism has been made of the Attorney-General of the United States because he held that under this section of the existing law the sale of intoxicants and liquors of any kind was not prohibited in the canteen. Now, I think that due justice to him requires the statement on the floor of the House that this section did not accomplish that result. All that the section accomplished, practically, was simply to prohibit the detail of any person in the service of the United States for the sale of intoxicating liquors at such places, and to provide that persons not in the service of the United States were not allowed to sell intoxicants at such places. The obvious inference from this language is that persons in the service might be allowed to sell, although they could not be detailed for that purpose. To this extent, at least, the opinion of the Attorney-General is not properly the subject of criticism, and it is clear that the section did not accomplish the desired purpose.

Now, the provision of the bill that the amendment attacks is substantially that which has been construed by the Attorney-General, and about which such criticism has attached throughout the country. The amendment is substantially the Bowersock bill, which was reported at the last session of Congress by the Committee on Military Affairs, and with the concurrence of all of the committee with the exception, I think, of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], who submitted their minority views. The amendment as read will absolutely prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any canteen, exchange, or premises occupied for military purposes by the United States.

I should say, before going further, that the amendment is not quite as drastic a proposition as the one which the Military Affairs Committee reported favorably, because the bill reported by the Military Affairs Committee provided that no intoxicating liquors should be sold on any premises used or owned by the United States, which goes vastly further than to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the canteen. Briefly, as to the propriety of the amendment, I am fully aware that there is a great difference of opinion, and an honest difference of opinion, as to the wisdom and propriety of this amendment. I am fully aware that the Committee on Military Affairs received from the War Department an adverse recommendation in connection with this measure, and I will read very briefly the succinct statement of General Corbin in relation thereto, because I desire later to read another statement by General Corbin, made earlier, in connection with the same subject. The extract that I read from General Corbin's letter to the committee is as follows:

In conclusion I desire to say that the canteen system is carefully watched by this office and any reported infraction of the regulations thoroughly investigated and, if well founded, promptly corrected. At present it is working well. It has the approval of more than 95 per cent of the officers of the Army, and, in justice to the best interests of the service, ought not to be disturbed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I shall have to ask for a few moments more.

Mr. BROSIUS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Maine be allowed to continue his remarks for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ought to state that the figures upon which the Adjutant-General bases his statement are taken from answers to inquiries received from 1,020 officers, when there are something like 2,200 officers in the service. Now, as against the opinion of General Corbin in 1900, I feel as though I ought to give the House the benefit of his opinion, announced in 1892, upon the same subject, which was as follows, referring to the canteen:

A cause of restlessness (in the Army) is traced to the excesses of the exchange, the saloon feature of which is not productive of good, and should be done away with without further experiment. The sale of beer, superintended by a commissioned officer and served by noncommissioned officers and soldiers, is not conducive to discipline, nor is it a picture that can be submitted to the people for their approval. The men who drink spend the greater portion of their money for beer. The credit system brings them to the pay table with little or no money due. This takes all heart out of them, and makes them quite ready to ask their discharge and try some other calling.

This extract is from his official report when he ranked as assistant adjutant-general.

And I ought also to state that as late as February 9, 1899, as I am advised, General Corbin reiterated these conclusions, which I assume he reached in 1892 after due and reasonable consideration. So that was his opinion, I may safely assume, up to 1899.

Now, I make no criticism of General Corbin. It is an important question, and one upon which any man has a perfect right at any time to change his opinion; but I call the attention of the House to these facts in order that they may understand that a condition of things, at least, existed in 1899 which, in the opinion of General Corbin, would justify and require this legislation. I read a brief extract now from the report of General Miles, in which he makes an extract from a report by General Ludlow, then in Cuba, relating to this same subject:

In this department thus far endeavor has been made to make the prohibition absolute, and, while it is perhaps not possible to enforce this with entire thoroughness, the weight of authority and precept is thrown against the use of intoxicants, and the men are in every way discouraged from its use. It is believed that these measures are practically imperative. * * * It is particularly important where a large proportion of the troops are recruits that nothing be officially done to create in them any habit of using intoxicants; and this, it is believed, would be the result if, as has been deemed desirable in some portions of the United States, canteens be established in the posts, where light wines and beer are regularly furnished. In such circumstances the temptations of sociability and companionship are practically irresistible, and the habit of drinking is readily acquired.

I have called attention to these statements by these distinguished men for the reason that I think it may suggest the foundation for the able report of the Military Affairs Committee made to the House May 24, 1900, from which I now read, a report, as I have already stated, concurred in by every man on the committee except the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Texas. Referring to the Bowersock bill, which is in substance the amendment that I propose, the report says:

The bill was referred to the War Department and a very voluminous report was returned to the committee against the passage of the bill, but the committee believes that, in view of the legislation of the last Congress, when it was intended by Congress to abolish the canteen, but on account of faulty language did not accomplish it, the present bill should pass. The expressions received from all parts of the United States go to the point that even if the canteen results in the decreased consumption of liquor by the Army, the United States Government should not in any sense be connected with the liquor traffic, but let private parties conduct it under the laws of the different States.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the amendment which has just been offered by the gentleman from Maine will not prevail. I think he, as well as every sensible member of this House, must realize the fact that the canteen system as now practiced and carried out in the Army is easily the best method of handling this great question, and it seems to me that if we are not going to act as hypocrites we ought to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, and to vote for the provision as it exists in the bill now before the House. It is, in my judgment, impossible to enforce prohibition in any portion of this country or in any portion of the world.

It is impossible to enlist an army of 65,000 men, in my judgment, to serve in the Philippine Islands or any other portion of the world where their services may be needed by the United States Government and attempt to have all those men total abstainers. In this condition of affairs, if these men must obtain liquor, it seems to me the part of prudence and the part of wisdom on the part of the United States Congress to provide the means of obtaining that liquor that will give the most temperance and the best results.

I witnessed a good deal of the agitation on this question during the past two years. I have heard of the benefits of the present system at the Charleston Navy-Yard, and I have heard, within an hour, of the great improvement brought about by the establishment of the canteen system at Togus, Me., in the gentleman's own State; and it is only within the last hour that persons well acquainted with the conditions that existed in that State told me that the conduct and morals of the soldiers of that Home had improved wonderfully with the system now in vogue.

The gentleman comes from the State of Maine, where a prohibition law is in existence, and has been for the past twenty years, and yet the law has never been enforced, and is not enforced there to-day; there is more liquor sold, and as openly, as in any community in the United States, and when it was made an issue in the city of Portland the Prohibitionist candidate was elected because he promised to enforce the law. Now, the gentleman knows I am speaking the truth upon this question. He knows how the prohibition law has operated in Maine—that it has not decreased crime there, but has resulted in bringing about improper relations between the officers of the law and private individuals engaged in selling liquor. He knows that corruption has increased in different portions of the State, and that the people, in order to be relieved of this condition of affairs, in one community elected the Prohibitionist candidate to office, something unheard of in the State of Maine before.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we ought at least to be honest in this question. We all have read the stories that come to us from the Philippine Islands about the character of the liquor that is served there to the soldiers and the evil effects that it has upon the men. I say in all fairness that we ought to consider this question as men interested in the soldier, interested in the best method of dealing with this question; and if we act upon this question honestly, in accordance with the reports that have been submitted upon this very question, after an experience of twenty-five years, by the majority of the officers in the United States Government, men who have dealt with this question from a practical standpoint, then we must vote for the bill as it is reported by the committee and vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

I am not a drinking man myself, and think if the soldiers refrained from drinking liquor they would be better off. I can not, however, be blind to the conditions that surround us on this question, and I therefore hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I propose to place myself in an attitude the propriety of which I am in some doubt about. I do not believe a great deal in, nor have I hitherto had faith in, the suppression of intemperance by law. I believe that the evils of intoxicating drink can be minimized by law. I believe that the experiments heretofore made in total prohibition in this country have been substantial if not absolute failures, and have resulted in the increase of the sale of bad liquors, violations of law, and degradation of the law by reason of its violation.

I have been led to believe that the report of the Army officials correctly states the facts in regard to this question. They above all men have the greatest interest in the question. General Corbin has not given his opinion upon his own judgment and knowledge alone, and it is due to General Corbin—and I am sure that the distinguished gentleman from Maine does not intend to do him an injustice—it is due to him to say that in 1892 he was not Adjutant-General of the Army and was only acting in a subordinate capacity, but he became Adjutant-General of the Army during the last two or two and a half years. So that his means of observation and general knowledge was not in 1892 what it was in 1900, at the time he made the report to which reference has been made. I treat with very small appreciation the report that somebody is said to have made that somebody had heard him say that somebody thought in 1899 he had a different opinion from what he has this year.

I have a grave apprehension that the adoption of this amendment will do harm and not good. I am going to vote for the amendment, and I am going to state my reasons for it. I am satisfied that no amount of testimony, though one should rise from the dead, will disabuse the minds of the vast majority of the people of this country upon this question.

I know very well that it was believed—firmly believed and distinctly understood—that the adoption of the prohibition law in the State of Maine a great many years ago was going to create a condition of absolute immunity from the evils caused by the sale of liquor in that State, and consequently be a great moral object lesson that was to sweep over the country; and yet I have lived to see the time when the object lesson of Maine is a warning to statesmanship from one end of the country to the other. No man now seriously believes that the attempts at State prohibition can be successful, and local option of towns or municipal corporations, with taxation and stringent limitations, is the best course.

The result in Maine does not stand alone. The same is true of the results in Kansas and in Iowa, and the same will be true of every other State that relinquishes the regulation of and the taxation and partial prohibition of liquor traffic and which substitutes the attempt at prohibition. But the people of this country have the impression firmly fixed that we will have a temperate army, a virtuous military army, if this canteen is only abolished. I think the experiment must be tried. They will not hear the testimony of men who say that it is a great modification of the saloon.

General Corbin was talking about the saloon in 1892. All these saloon features have long ago been eliminated from the Army canteen. Therefore the people of the country have the impression that drunkenness will be eliminated, in the absolute teeth of the testimony that if you drive out the sale of light wines and beer in the canteen the soldier will go and get drunk on the outside of the limits of the camp or reservation. There is not a saloon keeper in the United States of America to-day resident near an Army post who does not favor the abolition of the canteen in the Army—not one. I can take you to a city where they are now standing ready to come down upon the Army posts so soon as the canteen is abolished.

I am going to vote to abolish it, and if good comes from it, if temperance comes from it, and if sobriety in the Army comes out of the result, I shall thank God that I had the privilege of voting for it. If I am mistaken, and good comes from it, nobody will be more willing to testify to it than I will. If no good comes from it, and we discover that we made a mistake in overriding all the opinions of the Army officers of the country, all that I have heard from, then we can easily retrace our steps.

But when there is such an uprising, such a great moral determination among the people of this country, I am willing that the experiment shall be made, and this, too, even in the light of the unreasonable criticism which has been made of the Attorney-General and the false and malicious attacks upon the President, all of which have been utterly without foundation. I overlook the false and scandalous assaults upon the President by a petty preacher, a petty candidate for office, a peregrinating libeler who traveled over the country during the recent campaign and impugned the motives of the President of the United States. While I condemn these things, I vote for the amendment with the hope that good shall come of it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. HAY and others. I object to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HULL. Well, I will make it thirty minutes.

Several members objected.

Mr. HULL. I give notice, then, that at the end of thirty minutes I shall move to close debate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in May of last year I, together with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], signed a minority report upon the canteen question. That report opened with these words: "The passage of this bill we think would be a calamity to the cause of temperance." I had arrived at that opinion after a careful examination of the question and after a personal investigation at various military posts throughout the country. I say I had arrived at the opinion expressed in the opening paragraph of this report after mature deliberation and to the extent of my opportunities after examining the operation at the posts in this country. I believed then, and I believe now, that the abolition of the post exchange would be a calamity. I believed then, upon the evidence submitted by hundreds of officers of the United States Army, that it would be detrimental to the good order and discipline of the Army if the post exchange were abolished.

I am absolutely convinced, Mr. Chairman, that if the members of this House would read the report, submitted by the Secretary of War last year, of the testimony of the officers of the various branches of the military service they would also come to that view. But, Mr. Chairman, they utterly disregard testimony submitted on this question which, in my humble judgment, should convince any jury after a careful examination.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, there are gentlemen in this House who will not vote their convictions upon this question. It is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union which "doth make cowards of us all" on this occasion. If all the gentlemen in this House who have read this testimony, and who believe that the post exchange contributes not merely to the comfort and the discipline and good order of the Army but to its temperance, will vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, it will go down in overwhelming defeat.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to briefly call the attention of the House to a little evidence which I have gathered, and which has been submitted by the Secretary of War. I will ask the Clerk to read from the desk a letter addressed to me by the quartermaster of the Military Academy at West Point in reply to interrogatories which I submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
West Point, N. Y., June 5, 1900.

SIR: In reply to your queries in regard to the post exchange, I would say that after fourteen years' service I have become convinced, beyond any question of a doubt, that the post exchange works for the good of the temperance cause in the Army. It promotes discipline and increases the contentment and self-respect of the enlisted men.

Since its establishment the records of the Army show a very great diminution in the number of cases of drunkenness and other accompanying offenses.

Were the post exchange to be abolished there would inevitably be a return to the condition that prevailed before its establishment, viz, numerous cases of drunkenness in the towns adjacent to military posts, followed by fights among the soldiers or between the soldiers and citizens, the soldier finally lying drunk in the street or along the roadside.

Such occurrences as these are now almost unheard of.

I wish to add that I am a temperance man, and that I do, and always have done, all I can to promote temperance in the Army.

Respectfully,

MALVERN-HILL BARNUM,
First Lieutenant, Tenth United States Cavalry.

Hon. J. L. SLAYDEN,
Member of Board of Visitors, West Point, N. Y.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That letter is signed by a gentleman of distinguished service in the Army of the United States, who for fourteen years has been connected with the Quartermaster-General's Department and who has had opportunity to observe the practical working of the post exchange.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I ask that the gentleman have four minutes more.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in conjunction with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] I had the temerity to sign a report which has made me the object of attack by various temperance organizations throughout the country; and I ask for more time in which——

The CHAIRMAN. How much more time?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may continue his remarks for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I would like to have five minutes; and unless that time can be allowed me, I must object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask, then, for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Consent is asked that the gentleman may continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if reputable gentlemen can be believed, and if reason and not hysteria is to control in legislation, this amendment will be voted down. All of the evidence submitted, or practically all of it, goes to confirm the statement made by its advocates that the post exchange is an agency for temperance. Out of a thousand replies received by the War Department from both commissioned and noncommissioned officers, the overwhelming preponderance of the testimony was to that effect.

Mr. Chairman, in five minutes I can not, of course, undertake to make the argument upon this question which I had hoped to make; but I want to say that there is evidence here from gentlemen whom I have personally known for twenty years—whom I know to be men of character and truth—men who have been brought into personal contact with the operations of the post exchange and who know whereof they speak; and without a dissenting voice they urge its continuance. To-day I had a personal interview with a chaplain of the United States Army recently returned from a fourteen months' term of service in the Philippines. He tells me that he went out there strongly opposed to the principle of the post exchange, as well as being an active and zealous prohibitionist in civil life.

He said to me this afternoon that his observation of the operations of the post exchange in the Philippines convinced him of the fact that at least there it was a necessity and that perhaps he had been mistaken as to its operations in other parts of the world. That clergyman, who served fourteen months in the Philippines and who has been brought into personal contact with the soldiers, tells me that he saw no drunkenness about the canteens or post exchanges. He tells me that the profits made on the sale of the beer, wines, and foods sold there are subsequently distributed in the way of dividends among the soldiers and contribute to the physical comfort of the men in that unhappy climate. No whisky, no ardent spirits of any kind, are permitted to be sold at those post exchanges.

Now, unless you intend to make prisoners of your soldiers, unless you intend to keep them under constant surveillance from the time of their enlistment to the time of their discharge, you can not prevent them from drinking. The practical question, then, is whether you will give them a harmless beverage at a reasonable cost, which will satisfy their longings for something more than the mere rations given by the Government, or whether you will drive them to the outskirts of the military posts, where they will, according to the evidence of this chaplain and other chaplains, fall not only into the habit of drinking ardent spirits, but into other habits of a more immoral nature; for, as this clergyman said, upon the confines of the posts, just beyond the limits of the military jurisdiction, you will find flagrant immorality allied with the opportunity to obtain intoxicating drink. And he says that there is not the same temptation to the soldiers where they are permitted the privileges of the post exchange as conducted in this country.

Allusion has been made to the opinion of the Adjutant-General given in 1892. His mature judgment, given in the fall of 1900, is entitled to your respect; and he says, in his report just issued, that—

The operation of the post exchanges during the past year, despite the attacks of the opposition outside the Army—

Mark you, the opposition comes from men who are not informed—which have been persistent and unremitting, has been especially gratifying.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are other members here who want to say something on this question, and I yield the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to be able to inform my friend from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] that upon this, as upon every other question, I have the courage to vote in accordance with my convictions; and I have no hesitation in saying that I shall vote against this amendment, not because I am not just as sincerely in sympathy with temperance as my friend from Maine, but because I believe, after a very careful examination of this canteen system as it is operated at every post of the United States (and I have visited nearly all of them), there is no institution which does more to fortify temperate habits and induce temperance in the Army than the canteen system; and there is no measure of law that would do more to break down the temperance influence of the Army officers and to increase intemperance than the measure proposed by the gentleman from Maine.

Why, let me ask him, has he not included in his amendment a proposition to forbid and absolutely prohibit the carrying of any kind of intoxicants upon a governmental reservation by the officers as well as by the men? If an officer of the Army has the right to drink beer or wine, certainly the enlisted man has precisely the same right, and we ought not to withdraw that right from him. I have seen the canteen introduced in the Army, and I well remember the condition of affairs before its introduction. There are now, I may state, in every city of the Union, saloon keepers and dive keepers waiting and watching the enactment of such an amendment as this, to enable them to surround the Government reservations with their saloons, where the business they conduct can be carried on safely and the poisonous compounds which they dispense may be furnished to the soldiers of the Army. That is the reason that I am opposed to such legislation as has been suggested here. Under the care and regulations which now exist for the control of the canteen system of the Army it is, in my judgment, a wise provision and one which should be continued, and for that reason I shall vote against the proposition which is now pending, to prohibit the continuance of that system in the future. I think the suggestion is unwise and unwarranted, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I should not take up the time of the House even for a moment on this question were it not for the fact that I advocated this amendment in the Committee on Military Affairs and desire to state the reason on the floor of the House for doing so. I do not regard it whatever as a question of prohibition. We are not undertaking to prohibit the sale of ardent spirits throughout the country. That is not the proposition at all. It is not a question of "hysterical legislation" in any sense of the word. I am supporting the amendment because I believe that it is wrong for the Government of the United States to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors, either upon its own property or in any other place anywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This bill provides that no officer or private soldier shall engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and consequently you can not implicate the Government of the United States under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes, I can; because under the decision of the Attorney-General somebody else can be authorized to engage in this traffic near the Army post or upon the Government reservation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But if he does so engage, it is as a private citizen, and it is not in any sense of the word the action of the Government.

Mr. HAY. But how does he get there? He gets there by force of a permission which is granted to him by the authorities of the United States, because under other circumstances he would be absolutely excluded.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine, because the young men of this country who join our Army either at home or for service in the Philippines ought not to have this temptation offered to them at all times in the very posts of the Army in which they go to serve their country.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And by the Government of the United States as well.

Mr. HAY. Yes, and by the Government itself, which offers the temptation by the sale of whisky.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to interrupt him for a correction? I am sure he does not want to misstate the matter. The Government does not permit the sale of whisky at any post at all.

Mr. HAY. Oh, well, I understand that. It does not permit the sale of whisky, in direct words; but it permits soldiers and civilians about the posts to sell intoxicating liquors. It is simply a begging of the question when you say they are not permitted to sell whisky.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman certainly knows that the soldier or the civilian is only permitted to sell the mildest classes of beverages, like beer or wine, and there is no permission granted to any civilian to sell whisky at the Army post.

Mr. HAY. Of course I understand that. But they are permitted to sell beers and wines and liquors of that class, and a man can get drunk just as well on beer or wine as on whisky——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Hardly.

Mr. HAY (continuing). Although it may be a little more expensive proceeding. And at all events, the use of these intoxicants under such conditions gives him a taste for the whisky, and we do not propose to allow that to exist if it can possibly be avoided in connection with our young recruits.

I am told that this thing should be allowed to proceed in the Army posts because otherwise these establishments would be erected around the posts, and the temptation would be furnished to the soldier in that way. Why, Mr. Chairman, they are around the posts now, and the man in the Army who wants whisky can go outside and get it in a few moments, notwithstanding the operation of the canteen system.

It is absurd to say because you have a canteen where you only sell wine and beer that the man who wants whisky is not going out to get it. He does go out to get it, and the evidence of Army officers is not all on one side upon this question. There are very many Army officers who have testified to the fact that this canteen is a bad thing for the soldiers.

Some people say that the private soldiers ought to have the same rights as the officers, and that they ought to have their clubs. Why, they can have their clubs, but they can have them in a healthy way, and these canteens ought not to be permitted in the posts, or upon the transports, or upon the encampments of the armies of the United States. I trust, therefore, that this House will adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I do not sympathize with the views of the man who decides to vote for this amendment in order to please any general sentiment which through ignorance has grown up among the people of the United States, and thereby knowingly votes to hurt the soldier. We are trustees for the soldier. [Applause.] We are charged to speak and act for his temperance and his good order, and when we abolish the canteen system of the post exchange temperance in the Army will have received almost a death blow.

The adoption of this amendment, we think, would be a calamity to the cause of temperance. None greater could befall that cause in the Army and in the Soldiers' Home than the prohibition of the canteen feature of the post exchange. This is not a matter of theory, but one of actual experience. Soldiers, as well as everyone else, resent interference with their personal freedom. To adopt this amendment means that those who would otherwise drink beer in moderation under the eyes of their fellows will go outside where they will get strong drink, and that all the evils that once existed will be renewed.

In old times we had the sutler's canteen, the sutler being employed by the Government to sell liquors as desired, and at that time the Army was a whisky-drinking army. Later we had the post-trader system, where the post trader, a private individual, was licensed to sell whisky to soldiers, and then we also had a whisky-drinking army. It was an army in which pay day meant absence from the post of half of the command, men imprisoned by the score in the guardhouse, men who overstayed their leave, and men who were fleeced by dive keepers on all sides.

There were rows of liquor saloons at the gates of every post, where vile liquor and sometimes vile drugs were dispensed, and where all the abominations that are annexed to such places were put in the way of the young men who were in the Army. At last an experiment was tried; at first at but one post. It spread gradually through the Army until it has become a matter of regulation in all posts and is called the post exchange.

This post exchange system is one developed for and by Americans. By the Army Regulations, of which I annex an abstract, the post exchange is to combine the features of reading and recreation rooms, a cooperative store, and a restaurant in order to supply the troops at reasonable prices with the articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not supplied by the Government, and to afford them means of rational recreation and amusement, while through exchange profits it provides means for improving the messes. Buildings are ordered to be set apart or rented at every post for the exchange. An officer is put in charge of the management and a noncommissioned officer of firmness, now an outsider, is made exchange steward. The exchange is superintended by a council of officers, with a subcommittee of noncommissioned officers. Rules of order are prescribed, prohibiting gambling and restricting the entry of civilians.

The sale and use of ardent spirits * * * is strictly prohibited. But on the recommendation of the exchange council the commanding officer may permit beer and light wines to be sold at the canteen by the drink whenever he is satisfied that giving to the troops the opportunity of obtaining such beverages within the post limits will prevent them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits and tends to promote temperance and discipline among them.

The canteen must be in a separate room, preferably in a separate building. The sale of beer is limited to week days, the beer to be consumed upon the premises, and treating is not permitted.

In the cooperative store the goods are got at cheap prices, and lunchroom prices are made as small as possible. Sales are made on credit, and the profits applied, 5 per cent to the band, a part to gardens, reading room, and gymnastic appliances, and the rest to company funds, which enable the soldiers to get better meals and comforts, or returned in dividends.

Such an exchange was first undertaken as an experiment in Vancouver Barracks in 1880, but was not established in the Army till 1889, and came into full use in the year 1891.

This is the American system that treats the soldier as entitled to his home and his reading room, where he may meet his friends and do what he wishes, always in moderation. It has attracted attention abroad. It is recommended by General Roberts in place of the sutler's canteen system. By it the soldier has his club. It is, by regulation, attached to every post. There is thus established a building in which there are reading rooms, newspapers; a cooperative store for the sale to the soldiers of what they need and can not get in the ordinary rations.

There is a refreshment saloon for coffee and tea and for food at odd times when the soldier can not get meals or comes in from guard duty and wants something to eat. Generally there is provided a gymnasium. It pays something toward the regimental band, in which they all have pride. It supplies the material for polo, football, and other games, and all this is done by saying to those who wish to have a drink, "Do not go outside; come in here and buy among your friends in your own club." Without the profits of these sales it could not be supported. But nothing except beer and light wines are sold—no heavy intoxicants—and there is no treating.

The results have been marvelous. They are embodied in Report No. 1701, at the last session of this Congress.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman let me ask him one question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I should be glad to answer any question if I had the time. If the gentleman's question does not come out of my time, I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. HAY. Would you advocate putting a canteen at the Military Academy at West Point?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. You would?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would, for the soldiers stationed there. There is a canteen at the Military Academy for the soldiers stationed there, and the officers at West Point have testified to the benefit of it. Major Hess, in a report to the War Department——

Mr. HAY. Do you mean to tell me——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I hope the gentleman will excuse me. I decline to yield further.

Mr. HAY. Do you mean to say there is a canteen for the cadets at West Point?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will answer all questions, if I can have the time, but I must have some time for myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HAY. I ask that the gentleman be allowed further time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Now, if the gentleman from Virginia will ask me his question——

Mr. HAY. The question I wanted to ask was if there was any canteen at the Military Academy for the cadets.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; certainly not. Cadets can not go outside; soldiers can. It is to prevent the evils of outside saloons that canteens are established. Let us go a step further. In order to find out the sentiment of the Army on this subject inquiries were sent out to every post commander, every troop, battery, and company commander, every regimental commander, and to many noncommissioned officers. Over a thousand replies were received.

The results are contained in the report of the Secretary of War in 1899, which contains the views of the practical experience of over a thousand officers and noncommissioned officers, including company, troop, and battery commanders and post commanders (to all of whom inquiry was addressed), and also a number of noncommissioned officers of long experience. Each man gives his own views.

These officers are charged with the discipline of the Army. They know their men, and they fear drunkenness as no one here can fear it. The decision is almost unanimous; 981 are opposed to prohibiting the canteen, 36 for prohibition, and 3 are doubtful.

We learn that since its establishment hospital admissions for alcoholism have diminished by more than half, and desertions by the like ratio, as well as convictions for drunkenness.

I quote from the report referred to, No. 1701, of the first session Fifty-sixth Congress, when a like measure was proposed by bill 8752. The references are to the appendixes to the Secretary of War's report of 1899.

Its results are carefully tabulated by Surgeon Munson, on pages 277 to 281 of the same appendix. Comparing the years before 1891 with those afterwards, hospital admissions for alcoholism gradually diminished from 64.28 per thousand in that year to 30 per thousand in 1897.

In 1890 there were 17 posts in which the admission rate exceeded 10 per cent of the strength. In 1897 there were but 2. Particular posts are instanced on pages 277 and 278. The percentage of desertions (see p. 279) fell from an average of 9.18 per cent of the enlisted force in seven years before 1891 to 4.54 per cent of the enlisted force in six years after that year. The total trials and convictions for drunkenness in the Army during the seven years before 1891 averaged 372.5 each year, and in the six years after 1891 160.6 in each year. The average number of men making savings deposits increased over 13 per cent (p. 280).

The opinions of the officers (pp. 97 to 276) are almost unanimous. They have to be read to be appreciated, and experience is the only thing to be thoroughly believed. Many of them say that they are total abstainers themselves. Many more state that they viewed the establishment of the canteen with disapproval, but after their experience changed their minds. Those who are opposed to prohibiting the canteen are 981. Those who are for its prohibition are 36, and 3 are doubtful.

Almost all of them have expressed their official opinions as to the effect of the canteen upon the morality, discipline, desertions, the number of courts-martial, and cases of drunkenness, and on the likelihood of the soldier to go outside the camp for intoxicants. The following table shows the number of those who think the canteen beneficial in those regards, the number who think it is detrimental, the number who think these effects doubtful, the number who think it is of no effect, and the number who expressed no opinion.

Answers of various commanders of troops, companies, batteries, and regiments, and noncommissioned officers of long service in the ranks as to the working of the canteen system and its effect on the Army.

Answers made.	Effects of the canteen system on—
	Morality.	Discipline.	Desertions.	Courts-martial.	Drunkenness.	Outside saloons.
Beneficial	892	908	730	825	909	980
Detrimental	35	40	6	20	20	11
Doubtful	29	27	49	38
No effect	90	71	116	43	33	61
No opinion	19	19	155	139	103	13

These opinions have to be read to be appreciated. I give only a few quotations as to their views of the post exchange. "It is the enlisted man's social club." "They have no such desire to visit disorderly places outside." "Desertions lessened." "Drunkenness decreased." "Nearly all drunkenness at present can be traced to strong liquor purchased outside." "It has been the essential feature for the prevention of desertion. Under the old system men would visit saloons outside the posts, overstay their passes, or absent themselves without leave."

These officers state that the effect of absolute prohibition would be an increase of drunkenness, a decrease of comforts, an increase of absenteeism and of trial by summary court-martial; that it would cause the smuggling of whisky into camp; that any unprejudiced man who has served with troops in the field for twenty years will be convinced that prohibition would result in the increase of low dives near the reservations, with attendant evils; that the temporary suspension of the canteen has always proved the effect to be disastrous; that prohibition would increase the grosser forms of drunkenness and the frequenting of disreputable, disorderly, and degrading saloons; that they have seldom or never known of any drunkenness resulting from the canteen; that prohibition would remove the checks which now exist; that the canteen has certainly lessened the evil of drink in the Army, and that it has done much to elevate the character and moral tone of the soldier; that the soldier would resent any uncalled-for denial of his privileges; that the canteen gives a way of exercising restraint of drinking which is wholesome and yet not provoking.

In various places through this report it is noted that the grogshops outside of a camp are often houses of prostitution and that the temptation, if men go there, is very great; that the sad diseases have greatly decreased since the establishment of the post exchange, and that in case of prohibition the soldiers would obtain liquor clandestinely, or would visit resorts where other and worse temptations await them; that in the exchange "the sale of beer is limited and controlled by officers who have at heart the best interests of the soldier as well as the efficiency of the service," and that "the institution promotes temperance." (Page 105.)

"In 1888 I was called upon to officially express my opinion as to the advisability of replacing the post traders by the canteen. I was strongly against the move. Since then I have been convinced that the change as made was a good one;" that "prohibition would deprive the enlisted man of the moderate indulgence in garrison, and cut off a fund which procures him many benefits." "Proprietors of vicious resorts in the neighborhood of military camps or stations are loud in denouncing the canteen." Officers state that prohibition would result in the resumption "of the old-time sprees" every pay day, and the renewal of the growth of gin mills and rum shops near all military posts.

We are told that prohibition encourages the drinking of whisky, because beer is too bulky to be smuggled into camp, and that "abolition would double the burden of officers and men in their efforts to improve the health, morality, and usefulness of the Army."

And page 117, Captain Wilder, of the Fourth Cavalry, says:

"An army of whisky drinkers has been converted into an army of moderate beer drinkers. As for myself, I seldom touch a glass of beer. The canteen serves the cause of temperance."

Captain Walsh, of the Fourth Cavalry (page 118), says:

"The exchange is strictly a temperance measure; lessens and controls drinking, decreases desertion and trial by courts-martial, and tends to elevate, as conducted in the Regular Army, the morals of a command. It is probable that if the present agitators thoroughly understood the situation, and realized that they were unwittingly allying themselves on the side of the worst features of the liquor traffic and the lowest forms of prostitution, they would insist on the retention of the exchange in place of asking for its abolishment."

Captain Erwin, Fourth Cavalry (page 118), says abolition would increase immorality, lower discipline, increase desertion and trials by courts-martial for drunkenness, decrease money savings, impoverish table fare, and lower the moral and physical standard of the enlisted men.

Lieutenant Carr, Fifth Cavalry, that it would be a return to the time when pay day was dreaded; that volunteer camps are an example of what might happen in the Army if the system were abolished and troops subject again to the villainy and extortion practiced by post traders and saloon keepers.

Captain Macomb, Fifth Cavalry (page 119), believes in the canteen system because prohibition is not practicable. License without abuse is what the canteen system desires.

Lieutenant Rhodes, Sixth Cavalry (page 122), favors the present exchange, with continued improvements; that he uses no intoxicants himself; that when he joined the regiment in 1889 drunkenness, under the old system of post traders, was disgraceful and alarming; that around Fort Wingate little rum shops thrived, crimes, and debauchery, and after each pay day patrols dragged soldiers from the keepers of these dives; the guardhouse always full of drunkards and absentees; that those who were prejudiced against what was termed "Government barrooms" found the benefit so startling that it could not be combated, and now the improvements in morality and discipline have been so marked that officers fairly shuddered when there was a possibility of a return to the old system.

Other officers urge (page 123) that to abolish the sale of beer means smuggling of cheap whisky by soldiers and civilians; that saloon keepers, gamblers, and prostitutes would obtain the money now being used to improve and add to rations now provided; that the post exchange is all right since enlisted men were taken from the bar, and that all retail liquor dealers, kitchen bar room, and dive keepers in the vicinity of garrisons are anxious to have the sale of beer in garrisons put to an end; that at Fort Meade a village of outlaws near the garrison has been abandoned; at Fort Yates the same; that there is no truer friend to the frontier dive keeper than the ignorant partisan of temperance who builds up their business on the ruin of the post canteen.

Officers of the Seventh Cavalry have observed it for 25 years (p. 125) and say that the exchange is a practical means of controlling and regulating the sale of beer; that abolishment would cause discontent and trouble to control the men. "It helps here in Cuba, where before its establishment they used aguardiente or some other Cuban drink, which for a time set them crazy," and more often absent from duty (p. 126); that with the exchange system the men are contented and have no encouragement to drink to excess; that without it in low places which they can not be prevented from visiting, and where they usually procure the vilest liquor, they have every encouragement; that the majority do not abuse the beer feature; that the better element appreciate the fact that when they want a glass of beer they can procure it at a respectable place; that soldiers are not different from others in respect of drinking and should not be treated as children in the matter.

Page 127: That opposition to the post exchange is from misguided persons who desire to change human nature and to enforce total abstinence, the saintly and sordid cooperating to drive our young men from the convenient, clean, sanitary, and respectable places of refreshment and entertainment, where excesses are forbidden, and where the profits are theirs, to the dives which surround military posts and litter the roads to the nearest towns.

Page 128: That to abolish the canteen will make the post exchange unprofitable, lead to the discontinuance of most of them, deprive troop and post libraries of athletic sport and games of support and encouragement; that discontinuance means the partial but certain return to pay-day orgies, increased desertion due to lessened variety in troop mess, lack of amusement and recreation in the post, all of which are purchased by profits of the exchange, and that in North Dakota—when the exchange was established a prohibition State—drunkenness was common, what was called whisky being smuggled; that temperance associations are, strange to say, assisted by the liquor dealers.

Page 129: In Oklahoma in 1898, the exchange being closed, liquor was smuggled. When reopened there was no further trouble.

Page 130: To abolish it would not materially decrease the amount of liquor consumed by the Army, but would be detrimental to the interests of the service. Rum shops would spring up, and men would go where they would not be under control. At present troop messes are really quite satisfactory, the ration supplemented by purchases wholly due to exchange profits.

Captain McBlain, Troop D, Ninth Cavalry (p. 131), says:

"Many years ago, while an enlisted man, I had to invest a portion of my pay in food. The exchange system enabled me to take for use of my troop in Cuba last summer tobacco and canned fruits; to purchase vegetables and ice for my troop while encamped at Port Tampa."

Captain Cole: "The whole discipline of our Army is founded on the character of the American soldier. It is impossible to cram American men into a mold, apply pressure, and turn out the soldier as is done in the continental armies. We have no ignorant class in the European sense. All restrictions must be founded on reason and good sense. We get all conditions of men looking for adventure, who like to ride, hunt, shoot, and see the country—out of a job, wishing the service as a start in life—restless, wandering men. Training makes these men strong, healthy, enduring discipline; association develops good-fellowship and comradeship. They do duty gloriously; stand hardship like Spartans; do not growl at the inevitable; are as apt to laugh as to growl in suffering unnecessary privation.

"A vicious element is speedily eliminated. The mass are firm, hearty, wholesome Americans, each with an independent mind, shrewd judgment, and no especial reverence for anything but the colors. Like all men who have periods of tremendous nervous strain followed by periods of rest, they use intoxicating liquor; are used to it, want it, and are going to get it. The question now can not be one of eliminating this evil, but of minimizing it. Prohibitory legislation is a history of failure."

Page 132: That Kansas is a prohibition State, and Leavenworth abounds with wide-open saloons; that if a law is enacted prohibiting sale of liquor on military reservations it will not be sold openly, but clandestinely; dives with vile liquor will spring up, infinitely more disastrous to health, morals, and discipline than the worst old post-traders' establishment, to say nothing of the canteen, which is a means of control; that sincere people who advocate total abstinence have their work cut out for them in their own homes.

In attempting to grapple with a condition they can not possibly understand, they place themselves in the position of fools, who "rush in where angels fear to tread;" * * * that a great majority of the soldiers will spend all their money, and why not provide a place where they can get the most pleasure and comfort from it? And the profits, instead of filling the pockets of some grasping trader, are given to an increased quality of the mess; that the majority will drink—if nothing better, horse medicine, Jamaica ginger, and even red ink—but give them beer, control the sale, and your men will be all right.

Page 133: That abolishment will lead to "boot legging" and low dives; that since the canteen system the old soak has become impossible among the enlisted men, almost to his disappearance; that the exchange furnishes a decent place for the soldier to get his beer among his fellows without the danger of assault or robbery; that it is the soldiers' club, and it is his right to have it; that the soldier says it is unfair for people who can not control their local community and enforce prohibition among people whom they know to attempt to enforce their doctrine in a temperate community among people whom they do not know and for whom they do not care.

Page 134: That the more pay a soldier uses at the exchange the less he has to get into trouble outside; that if he is of saving disposition he will not spend more than a certain amount at any place; that the profits provide billiards, tenpins, dominoes, football, tennis, field sports, and affords a comfortable place to sit, smoke, write, talk, meet comrades from other companies, and promote the esprit de corps; that the beer feature is by no means the principal one; that men will drink, but indulgence may through the canteen be restricted and regulated; that no mistaken zeal for a nominal temperance should take from him that which has steadily bettered his condition for a decade and reduced desertions over 50 per cent.

Page 135: That soldiers should be treated like men, not boys; that a paternal attitude ruins discipline and esprit de corps; that the post exchange is almost indispensable. "Liquor would be procured, vile stuff that makes men wild and hard to control."

Page 136: That dives would increase 100 per cent.

Page 137: That if abolished, conditions would return to those when, out of a six-company post, 25 cases before a court every pay day were not uncommon, with a long list of absentees every pay day, increase of intemperance, and frequent courts-martial; that prohibition is a severe blow to discipline and contentment; that with an exchange a small number of men apply for permission to go away, but without, a large number would make application, be refused and the first step towards discontent is made.

Page 138: That the exchange is a pleasant, clean, respectful club in which he feels ownership and meets no loose characters; that associations here promote good-fellowship; that the exchange has benefited the men more than anything instituted since the civil war; "I am an almost strictly temperate man, and brought up so. The canteen part of the post exchange has my unqualified approval, however;" that it is not too much to ask these good people to trust the officers to do what is right and good for the soldiers' moral and material welfare.

Page 140: That no complaint has come up from the Army against the canteen; "In my opinion it has done more for the material comfort and moral welfare of the soldier than any one thing that I can recall;" that selling beer having been prohibited in this department (Habana), men must be restricted to post limits to keep them from drinking vile native liquors; that it increases drunkenness and is our greatest danger as regards infection from yellow fever; that better saloons refuse liquor to soldiers, and only low dives and resorts will sell; that, as many good men occasionally like a drink of beer, the present situation is debasing.

Page 141: I am practically a "teetotaler." Would stop the sale if possible, but the only practical course is to regulate the sale, and after years of observation I am firmly convinced that a well-regulated canteen is beneficial to a command on point of temperance, morality, and discipline.

The great effort of a battery commander is to inculcate temperate habits among men who desire strong drink; to make it much more expensive, disagreeable, and uncomfortable to get drunk than to remain sober. The post exchange is one of the greatest assistants to this end that can be devised. Rational amusements are furnished.

It is patronized in preference to going out into the streets, contentment is promoted, articles sold at reasonable prices—the vast majorities are satisfied with beer, and no stronger liquor kept. Prohibition of beer in the post exchange will practically break up that institution and turn our soldiers out into the street again to become the prey of unprincipled dealers and liquor sellers. These remarks apply tenfold to service in Cuba, where conditions make it imperative to control drunkenness, but where the cheapness and vileness of the stronger liquor, and the eagerness of dealers to sell despite all law, make it a far more difficult problem than in the United States. (Page 142.)

Page 142: Since arrival in Cuba I have seen the evil of prohibiting beer in post exchange. Men who have been good, steady, reliable, accustomed to drinking beer in moderate quantities, have gone outside and bought cheap liquor that has made brutes of them.

With the exchange "there has been more time spent in garrison, are absent without leave less frequently, and very much more contented and at home." As a choice of evils, the continuation of the exchange, provided the sale of beer can be restricted and the practice of treating prevented.

Page 143: Major Hess, Third Artillery, says:

"When the post canteen was first introduced he was at Washington Barracks, opposed to it, and wrote a report that it would simply add another place to the too long list; that the first month's experience proved the canteen a great success, and before the second month more than half of the little saloons outside had closed up and their proprietors had moved away—drunkenness and trial for absence without leave greatly decreased. This object lesson had the effect of changing his views. He saw in the canteen, and still sees, a powerful instrument of discipline when properly conducted; and that the fear of losing his privileges at the club and being debarred from associating with his fellows there operates as a powerful deterrent upon the occasionally unruly."

Page 144: Captain Hoskins says:

"Thirsty men will drink; go to the nearest saloon, where birds of prey lie in wait, where he is served with vilest liquors, and when his money is gone will be kicked into the street; that every post is surrounded by the lowest type of dives, where the soldier is made much of; that frequently before he is aware he is under the influence of some potent drug; they entice men to dispose of blankets in trade for liquor; they are bitterly opposed to the exchange and desire it abolished."

Captain Califf:

"I am in favor of the present exchange unless prohibition were a fact and not a name."

Captain Humphreys:

That in a year he has had ten men tried for drunkenness—five found drunk at saloons in the city; the other five returned to post drunk.

Captain Potts (page 145):

"With the opportunity at hand to obtain beer almost whenever wanted, weak men are less apt to drink to excess and men of character soon learn the value of their money, properly spent. Under other circumstances, with the very young men now so numerous in the Army, half of the temptation lies in the risk of obtaining it."

Captain Danes:

"Under present conditions there are quite a number of men in my battery who do not use intoxicants."

Lieutenant Kessler (page 145):

"Here in the Philippines men should be supplied with beer by means of the canteen; if not, they will drink it elsewhere, or something worse, and the native drinks are most terrible."

Captain Rumbough:

"When the canteen was first introduced, I was opposed to it, but since I have seen the results I have changed my views entirely. The number of saloons, nearly always of loose character, in the vicinity of post has decreased, and the men now drink beer instead of bad whisky. Advocates of temperance could not do a worse thing for their cause than to abolish beer in the post exchange."

Captain Bennett:

"The only real valid objection to the canteen I have heard is that recruits learn to drink from the contact with the same, when otherwise they would not do so. But many would, but for the canteen, acquire worse habits outside at saloons, in all probability, since, in absence of the exchange, saloons always flourish just outside of a post."

Colonel Guenther (page 147). That he has lived in a garrison ever since the close of the war of the rebellion, and states as his conviction and belief that the sale of beer at posts as conducted under the regulations has done more to advance the cause of temperance and good morals in the Army than anything else he knows of.

Major Fuger (page 147). That he was three months in Florida in 1889 with no canteen, with the consequence that men were absent without leave and summary courts filled, trials daily; that he started a canteen, with the result that he had few cases for trial.

Major Andruss, Fourth Artillery (page 147). That prohibition in the Army would relegate it to the experience of the service before this privilege was permitted; that the men would seek outside saloons where poisonous liquors are sold, and the results on morals and discipline ruinous.

Captain Howes (page 148). That nearly half the trials by court-martial at his post are caused by the use of bad whisky. That an exchange at the post did not prevent them entirely, but reduced it very materially.

Captain Leary, jr.:

"It would drive men who are temperate beer drinkers to the saloon and brothels outside the post in order to get a glass of beer. When the canteen system was begun I objected. With some years' experience, I am heartily its advocate. Its discontinuance would throw the enlisted men back ten years in their moral progress as a body, which moral progress is now patent to all the old officers of the Army."

Page 149: Captain Cummins, that abolition would be little short of a calamity to the soldier and the Army.

It is idle to multiply citations. If we wish to have an army composed of self-controlling, self-respecting men, we must give them the opportunity to exercise the virtue of temperance by choice, instead of trying to enforce total abstinence.

The American Army is not to be governed by State prison rules. When at home they have the right to use liquor in moderation within the walls of their own homes.

When in the Army they claim the same right. If it be denied, those who wish to drink are driven outside to fiery spirits, or worse.

There is no vice more to be feared in any army than intemperance. It is because the post exchange and the canteen has been shown beyond all question to promote temperance that we favor it and deprecate any efforts which by statute will forbid the officers of the Army to do what they find best for the morality, health, and discipline of their men.

The testimonials as to the matter from the various Soldiers' Homes are equally convincing. Some of them are already printed.

This is the first time that this matter has really come up for careful consideration. The anticanteen amendment does not cover this question; no lawyer has challenged Attorney-General Griggs's construction of its terms. It was placed upon a bill for the increase of the Army without much consideration, and certainly without such full knowledge of the facts as we now have. The misunderstanding which earnest people throughout the United States have upon this matter is appalling.

It is certainly true that drunkenness and the vices attendant thereon are of all things the evils most greatly to be feared in an army, and that they are all too rife in any army, but when we are referred to their prevalence among the volunteers we must remember that the volunteers generally had no post exchange, and sometimes allowed them to become mere post traders' institutions, where sales were made without proper restriction.

For example, a very impassioned address was made before the committee by the chaplain of the First Tennessee Volunteer Infantry. That regiment had no canteen, and its adjutant tells us that its good order and sobriety were best when it was brigaded with the Twenty-third Infantry, and the men found their way to the canteen, "where, with much good-fellowship, there was a minimum of disorder" (B. N. Coffman, first lieutenant and adjutant, First Tennessee Volunteers). Lieutenant Coffman states that the same experience was had at Iloilo, where the strictest prohibition measures were adopted, resulting in the greatest amount of drunkenness on native liquors, while as soon as the Eighteenth Infantry established their canteen near the regiment the drunkenness fell off.

This is a question of our practical duty as men and brethren to our brothers in the Army. We must treat them exactly as we do our brothers at home. Unless we are prepared to deny to our friends at home the right to drink a glass of beer in their own houses, it is neither our duty nor our right to enforce such prohibition against our brothers in the Army as distinguished from proper restrictions. For the sake of the cause of order and sobriety and temperance we oppose the adoption of this amendment.

Why should we assume to know more of the Army and its needs than the brigade, regimental, and company commanders, who know their men and have their interests most at heart? I have no apology for quoting their opinion. Why should we deny to our brothers in the Army the right to moderation in their own home which we claim for ourselves? Why should we drive them out to the vile saloon outside? How can we pardon ourselves if we put the Army back as it was ten years ago?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will have leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman has the right under the rule to extend his remarks.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I only protest, for the soldiers, that we should not carry this amendment. I add as an appendix the laws and regulations on this subject, taken from the report of the Secretary of War for 1899:

APPENDIX A.—POST EXCHANGES.

By the act of June 13, 1890, Congress provided:

"That no alcoholic liquors, beer, or wine shall be sold or supplied to the enlisted men in any canteen or post-trader's store, or in any room or building at any garrison or military post in any State or Territory in which the sale of alcoholic liquors, beer, or wine is prohibited by law."

By section 17 of the act of March 2, 1899, Congress provided:

"That no officer or private soldier shall be detailed to sell intoxicating drinks, as a bartender or otherwise, in any post exchange or canteen, nor shall any other person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue such general order as may be necessary to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect."

The post exchange is thus described by the regulations prescribed by the War Department:

"The post exchange will combine the features of reading and recreation rooms, a cooperative store, and a restaurant. Its primary purpose is to supply the troops at reasonable prices with the articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not supplied by the Government, and to afford the means of rational recreation and amusement.

"Its secondary purpose is through exchange profits to provide the means for improving the messes."

The money which constitutes the capital employed in the operation of the exchange is the money of the men themselves, so that the business conducted is their own business conducted for them, and the benefits of all kinds are equally shared by them.

The regulations relating to the conduct of exchanges have for several years provided:

"9. Exchange features.—An exchange doing its full work should embrace the following sections: (a) A well-stocked general store, in which such goods are kept as are usually required at military posts, and as extensive in number and variety as conditions will justify; (b) a well-kept lunch counter, supplied with as great a variety of viands as circumstances permit, such as tea, coffee, cocoa, nonalcoholic drinks, soup, fish, cooked and canned meats, sandwiches, pastries, etc.; (c) a canteen, at which, under the conditions hereinafter set forth, beer and light wines by the drink, and tobaccos, may be sold; (d) reading and recreation rooms, supplied with books, periodicals and other reading matter, billiard and pool tables, bowling alley, and facilities for other proper indoor games, as well as apparatus for outdoor sports and exercises, such as cricket, football, baseball, tennis, etc.; a well-equipped gymnasium, possessing also the requisite paraphernalia for outdoor athletics. At small posts it may be impracticable to maintain all of these sections, but at every exchange there should be no less than two departments—the refreshment, embracing store, lunch counter, and canteen, and the recreation, which includes all the other branches.

"10. Sale of liquors prohibited.—The sale or use of ardent spirits in any branch of the exchange, and in any encampment or fort, or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States, is strictly prohibited; but on the recommendation of the exchange council the commanding officer may permit beer and light wines to be sold at the canteen by the drink whenever he is satisfied that giving to the troops the opportunity of obtaining such beverages within the post limits will prevent them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits, and tend to promote temperance and discipline among them.

"Should the commanding officer not approve the recommendation of the exchange council, it will be submitted for final decision to the department commander. The canteen must be in a room used for no other purpose, and when practicable in a building apart from that in which the recreation and reading rooms are located. The sale of beer must be limited to week days, and the beer consumed upon the premises. The practice known as 'treating' will not be permitted."

These exchanges have largely replaced the old and objectionable post-trader store at military posts, and have furnished the only means to relieve the cheerlessness and tedium of an enlisted man's life in time of peace, which lower the morale of the force and repel the better class of enlistments.

During the year ending June 30, 1898, the aggregate receipts of the exchanges in operation in the Army amounted to $1,621,398.67, and there was received as money on deposit $189,258.81, making the total amount of money received $1,810,657.48. There was expended for merchandise purchased, rent, fixtures, and repairs, and expenses of operation $1,297,737.16, which, less deposit, give a profit of $323,661.51. From this amount there was donated to the funds of the several regimental bands $9,154.51; to the maintenance of post gardens, $1,559.17; to post libraries, $640.06; to gymnasiums, $2,913.75; as prizes for the encouragement of athletic sports, $3,338.41; and after setting aside the sum of $60,877.58 as a reserve fund to meet anticipated expenses for at least one month there was returned to the members in the form of dividends the sum of $254,890.93.

During the year ending June 30, 1899, the aggregate receipts of the 80 post exchanges and the 34 regimental exchanges in the Army, so far as reports have been received, amounted to $1,609,492.33, and the expenditures $979,012.26, which, less deposit, give a net profit of $309,588.27. From this amount there was donated to the funds of the several regimental bands $5,563.09, to the maintenance of post gardens $1,089.74, to post libraries $1,121.55, to gymnasiums $1,527.07, to athletic sports $1,312.18, and after setting aside the sum of $104,008.03 as a reserve fund there was returned to the members in the form of dividends the sum of $275,580.74.

The aggregate receipts of the post exchanges, therefore, during the past two years have been $3,420,149.81, and the dividends $530,471.67. The net value of these exchanges—that is to say, the balance of their combined assets over their liabilities—was on June 30, 1899, $253,792.26.

The wide difference between the terms used by Congress in the act of June 13, 1890, distinctly and unmistakably prohibiting all sales of alcoholic liquors, beer, or wine in military posts in States where sales to civilians are prohibited by law, and the terms used in the act of March 2, 1899, which seemed to be designed as a regulation of the sale in post exchanges and a prohibition of such sale by post traders, led to a reference by my predecessor to the Attorney-General for a construction of this provision of the act of March 2, 1899.

The Attorney-General, on the 12th of April, rendered an opinion to the effect that the section in question "does not prohibit the continuance of the sale of intoxicating drinks through the canteen sections of the post exchanges as heretofore organized and carried on, except that, of course, no officer or soldier can be put on duty in the canteen section to do the selling, either directly or indirectly."

The regulations have been amended to comply with the statute as thus construed. I agree with the view that this is the more reasonable construction of the statute. It is, however, questioned by many citizens, and it is very desirable that if Congress does in fact intend to absolutely prohibit the sale of beers and light wines in post exchanges to the soldiers of our Army in States where such sale is permitted by law to all other persons, this intention should be expressed in terms which are free from doubt.

It is to be observed that the sale of ardent spirits is now strictly prohibited by the Army Regulations and that the sale of beer and light wines is limited to the cases where the commanding officer of the post "is satisfied that giving to the troops the opportunity of obtaining such beverages within the post limits will prevent them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits, and tends to promote temperance and discipline among them."

For the purpose of ascertaining the effect of this regulation a circular letter was sent to each department commander on the 2d of May last, directing the submission of a series of questions to the officers of the Army, designed to elicit the results of their experience and observation as to the effect of the sale of beer, etc., in post exchanges upon the morality, sobriety, and discipline of the troops, and their opinions as to the effect of an actual prohibition.

I append hereto (marked Appendix C) a copy of the circular letter, and an abstract giving the substance of the expressions which have been received in response.

Some troops were of course so situated at the time that it was not practicable to secure expressions from them. Expressions have been received from 24 of the 25 regiments of infantry, substantially all of the 10 regiments of cavalry, and of the 7 regiments of artillery. It will be perceived that the overwhelming testimony of the Army is to the effect that the present regulation has promoted the temperance, discipline, morals, and health of the enlisted men, and that in the interest of morality and effective service it should be retained. No change has accordingly been made in the regulation.

In considering the testimony of these officers it should be borne in mind that enlisted men are not always on duty; that during considerable portions of their time they always are, and necessarily must be, permitted to go about outside of their camps and posts just as other citizens do, and that when they are thus at liberty it is impossible to subject them to restraints which are not also imposed upon the other members of the community. In States where the sale of intoxicants is permitted by law soldiers will drink outside the camp or post just as other people drink, and it can not be prevented except by confining them to the limits of the camp or post.

This would not only be unjust and injurious, but would reduce enlistment to imprisonment, and immediately put an end to enlistments. The practical question to be considered is not whether soldiers should drink or not drink, but whether they should be permitted to drink beer in the camp, surrounded they be driven to drink bad whisky in the vile resorts which cluster around by the restraining influences of discipline and good association, or whether the limits of every military post and camp, and especially around those in which prohibition is maintained. I have no doubt that the present regulation furnishes the wise answer to this question.

I present the subject thus fully in order that, if Congress takes a different view, the matter may be fully before it for action.

Mr. HULL. I move that all debate on this amendment and this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the committee, moves that all debate upon this amendment be closed in five minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Division!

The Chair proceeded to count, and had announced the affirmative vote, when

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I withdraw the request for a division and do not desire to take the time of the House, and will not request tellers if it can be so that I can have a few moments in closing debate.

Mr. HULL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Perhaps five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Maine, if it remain at five minutes, he will be compelled to recognize the gentlemen on the committee in preference to others.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, everyone has the right to print whatever he desires on this bill, or any part of it, and I want to have a vote on the bill to-night, and must get it, or it goes over indefinitely.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman on the committee consent to ten minutes?

Mr. HULL. The committee has voted for five minutes. I have no right to give it.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa has carried, and debate is limited to five minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri. I will yield to the gentleman from Maine two minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that section 40 of this bill represents the sentiment of the War Department on this question. If that is so, I desire to impress my friends here upon the floor with the idea that if the War Department reports or recommends a section of this kind it is presumed that it is based upon practical experience. There is practical experience upon one side and sentiment upon the other. Practical experience teaches the generals, the colonels, and the officers of the War Department that the canteen is an institution in the interest of temperance. The sentiment which we strike upon the other side is in the interest of temperance. It is only a question as to which side is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DICK].

Mr. DICK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts gives the best reason why section 40 should not pass unamended—simply because it is inoperative law, and therefore accomplishes nothing. The gentleman from Texas is wrong when he says that all army officers testify to the wisdom of the sale of liquors at the army canteen. On the contrary, we have the testimony of General Miles, General Shafter, General Wheeler, Surgeon-General Sternberg, and many other officers who regard it as demoralizing to discipline and as interfering seriously with the efficiency, the health, and the service of the soldier. Contrary to the expression of the member from Texas, and taking decided issue with him, I insist that the mothers of this country who give their sons to the Army of the United States have the right to petition the American Congress, and that these appeals to protect their boys from undue temptation ought not to go unheeded. [Loud applause.]

The gentleman from New Jersey is wrong when he assumes that this amendment aims to destroy the army canteen. Its simple purpose is to keep the canteen from being converted into a saloon, and does not interfere with any of its social features.

The overwhelming public opinion which brought this question into the House at the close of last session has not changed, nor have the conditions it was intended to affect. The amendment may not accomplish all its friends expect of it, but why shall we legislate to encourage an evil? It is not a function of our Government to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. Chairman, consistent with the report of the Committee on Military Affairs at the close of last session, and in which action I joined, I shall support with my vote the amendment of the gentleman from Maine and urge its adoption by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say, in answer to the suggestions of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], that I challenge absolutely the accuracy of the statements made by him in relation to the operation of the prohibitory law of Maine. I do not contend that it is an absolute success, that it is enforced with such a degree of success as ought to attend it, but I do contend, and every man who has any knowledge of the conditions knows, that the result of the enactment and enforcement of the prohibitory law has been vastly in favor of the improvement of the people of Maine during the whole of its history. It has increased sobriety, and conserved law and order, and been conducive to good citizenship.

I deny the proposition that during the history of the law there has been any increase of crime or of the evils that are attendant upon the sale of intoxicating liquor. I assert that the contrary is true. I deny the assertion that liquor is sold in Maine as openly as in any other community. In Washington, for instance, it is sold as openly as dry goods, groceries, and other articles of legitimate merchandise. The saloons advertise in the papers, by signs over their doors, upon their windows, and by a display of their goods in the windows on the street to attract the attention of the traveler.

I have lived in Maine all my life and I never saw or had my attention called to a saloon in Maine that thus advertised its business upon the streets or in the press, and I deny that there are any such. While there are saloons in Maine, principally in the cities and larger towns, they have been driven behind the door by the law, where they are looked for, instead of openly and publicly drawing the attention of customers by attractive devices, as do saloons elsewhere. And this, I submit, is far different from the open selling as it exists elsewhere.

But the State of Maine is not on trial here. The only question is whether or not it shall be the policy of the United States to say that its soldiers shall be protected from the evils of intemperance by this legislation. That is the only proposition. Now, I care not what reasons men may have, whether it is because the saloons favor it or not, or whether it is a proposition that temperance people favor, so long as they record their votes in favor of this amendment. I give a list of military and naval officers, many of them eminent in their profession, who condemn liquor selling in canteens.

British Generals Wolseley, Roberts, and Kitchener.

Generals Miles, Shafter, Wheeler, Corbin, Sternberg (Surgeon-General), Howard, Henry, Boynton, Wilcox, Stanley, Rochester, Harries, Carr, Carlin, Graham, Bliss, Lee (Assistant Quartermaster-General).

Colonels of following regiments, which had no canteens: First and Third Nebraska (Col. W. J. Bryan); First Texas; First Wisconsin; Second, Fourth, Sixth, and Eighth Ohio; Fifth, Eighth, Twelfth, and Thirteenth Pennsylvania; Second and Fifth Missouri; Twenty-fifth Kansas; One hundred and fifty-seventh, One hundred and fifty-ninth, and One hundred and sixtieth Indiana; First, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Ninth Illinois; First, Second, Third, and Fourth Kentucky; District of Columbia Regiment; First and Second Mississippi; First New Hampshire; Fifth and Eighth Massachusetts; First Washington; Fifteenth Minnesota; First and Second Arkansas; Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-second Iowa; First South Dakota; Second Virginia; Second South Carolina, and Second Louisiana. (Many of these regiments tried the canteen and then abolished it.)

Lieutenant-Colonels Treuman, North Dakota; Beck, Kansas.

Chaplains Sam Small, Third United States Engineers (no canteen); Crawford and Harbaugh, Ohio; House, Massachusetts; Hunter and Brady, Pennsylvania; White, Texas; Todd, Illinois; Phillips, Nebraska; Cook, Georgia; Stamper, Kentucky; Solomon, Missouri; Babcock, Arkansas; Kimball (regulars); Watts, Texas, and Lyman, Louisiana.

Surgeons Genella (regulars); Ward, Missouri; Penrose, Utah; Epler, Tennessee.

Adjutant Venable (United States Engineers).

Maj. Burton R. Ross, District of Columbia.

Capt. R. S. Woodson (expert on tropical diseases); Hunt, Battery D, Pennsylvania.

Lieut. A. K. Taylor (Regular Army), article in United Service Magazine.

Rear-Admiral Sampson, Rear-Admiral Kimberly, and Commodore I. H. Gibbs; Captains Folger, Barker, Higginson, Crowninshield, Bradford.

The following orders, and extracts from letters and articles, fully sustain my contention:

THE CANTEEN IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

[Lieut. A. K. Taylor, then of the Ninth Infantry, in the United Service Magazine for April, 1892.]

What is this institution but one of licensed idleness, with the attraction of beer, cards, dice, billiards, and other kindred solicitations to extravagance and dissipation? The young recruit, fresh from the rural districts, of whom we hope much from his enlistment, is met on the threshold of his military life with the invitation to waste his money, become a beer drinker, a card player, a dice thrower, and an idler of his time. We may, and doubtless will, return him to civil life, if we limit him to one enlistment, as now proposed, enfeebled in body, weakened in mind, and morals tainted—the end a ruined manhood.

OPINIONS EXPRESSED DURING THE LATE WAR.

[General Miles's anti-canteen order.]

GENERAL ORDER, No. 87.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, July 2, 1898.

The Army is engaged in active service under climatic conditions which it has not before experienced.

In order that it may perform its most difficult and laborious duties with the least practicable loss from sickness, the utmost care consistent with prompt and efficient service must be exercised by all, especially by officers.

The history of other armies has demonstrated that in a hot climate abstinence from the use of intoxicating drink is essential to continued health and efficiency.

Commanding officers of all grades and officers of the medical staff will carefully note the effect of the use of such light beverages—wines and beer—as are permitted to be sold at the post and camp exchanges, and the commanders of all independent commands are enjoined to restrict, or to entirely prohibit, the sale of such beverages, if the welfare of the troops or the interests of the service require such action.

In this most important hour of the nation's history it is due the Government from all those in its service that they should not only render the most earnest efforts for its honor and welfare, but that their full physical and intellectual force should be given to their public duties, uncontaminated by any indulgences that shall dim, stultify, weaken, or impair their faculties and strength in any particular.

Officers of every grade, by example as well as by authority, will contribute to the enforcement of the order.

By command of Major-General Miles:

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

[General Shafter.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE FIFTH ARMY CORPS, Santiago de Cuba, July 30, 1898.

I have always been strongly opposed to the canteen system or the sale of intoxicating drinks of any kind on military reservations, and have opposed it until absolutely overruled and required to establish a canteen at my post.

I regard it demoralizing to the men, besides impairing seriously their efficiency. There are always in every regiment a number of men that will under any circumstances get and drink liquor, but the great majority are temperate, abstemious men, and it is to those that the evil effects of the post-exchange system work the greatest injury, as young men who would not think of going away from the post for liquor will, when it is placed before them and every inducement offered them to purchase, do so and thus gradually acquire habits of intemperance.

The plea that it furnishes a large sum, which it does, to improve the table fare of the men is, in my opinion, a very poor one, as the Government of the United States is perfectly able to feed its men without any assistance from the profits of rum selling. I have absolutely prohibited the sale of liquor or the opening of saloons in the city of Santiago, and have refused permission for cargoes of beer to come from the States here. I think that the necessity of refraining from drink is fully realized by all the men, and of their own accord they would refrain from drinking.

WILLIAM H. SHAFTER, Major-General United States Volunteers, Commanding.

["Fighting Joe Wheeler."]

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES, Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, Long Island, September 20, 1898.

I am a thorough believer in temperance in all things, and am utterly opposed to soldiers being sold intoxicating liquors, and I believe that every effort should be exercised to remove the temptation of such dissipation from them.

You must recollect that all men are human, and if we can not make every thing perfect, we must make it as near perfect as possible.

J. WHEELER, Major-General, United States Volunteers.

[Surgeon-General Sternberg.]

I do not think much of the beer canteen. The theory that the soldier needs a beer canteen to keep him from going to outside saloons for something stronger is all wrong. There is nothing in it. On the contrary, a great many young soldiers who are not accustomed to drink contract drinking habits at these canteens, and are ruined. There is no need whatever for intoxicating drinks at these canteens, and it will be a good thing for the Army if they are abolished.

[Milo B. Ward, major and surgeon, United States Volunteers, Kansas City, Mo., September 23, 1898.]

I have had good opportunity to observe the effects of beer on the health of the men in the Second Division, Third Army Corps, and I am forced to confess that it was one of the features of camp life which caused the medical department much concern. I was some of the time medical officer of the day, and in that capacity I visited and inspected the entire division.

I urged in each report made that the canteens be closed. I found the troops who drank beer suffered from malarial jaundice, and many of them were very ill.

I can not say that a limited quantity of beer would have been injurious, but the quantity can not be controlled if canteens are permitted to be open. Many of the regiments found it necessary to close their canteens.

[Surgeon Genella.]

HOSPITAL HEADQUARTERS, CAMP WIKOFF, LONG ISLAND,
September 23, 1898.

What the houses of prostitution are to the youth of the city, so are the canteens of our Army to the soldiers.

W. GENELLA,
Regimental Surgeon Seventh Regular United States Infantry.

[Chaplain E. L. House, Fifth Massachusetts, United States Volunteers, Camp Meade, Middletown, Pa., September 22, 1898.]

There is no doubt in my mind that the sale of intoxicating liquors has done more to contribute to the sickness, death, and troubles of camp life than all other things combined. In our post exchange we have never allowed anything but tonics to be sold. Lager beer, etc., have been entirely excluded, and we have held the record, wherever we have been, of being the best behaved and most gentlemanly regiment of the field. Our colonel, while not a prohibitionist, would not assume the moral consequences that would surely come from the sale of beer. His own words are: "I am not going to educate men to drink, through the sale of beer, that have never drank intoxicating liquors." Almost all our own court sentences have been the result of men getting liquor outside of the camp when on leave, or else running the guard to get the same.

In fact, I have been told by the most trustworthy source that the great disaster of deaths that came to one of our regiments was due, not to the fighting in the trenches of Santiago, but to a weakened condition and disturbance of the stomachs of the men, brought on by the use of intoxicating liquors before arriving in Cuba, which, with the extreme heat and exposure, brought fever to many men.

[Colonel Glenn.]

HEADQUARTERS FOURTEENTH REGIMENT
PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY,
Camp Meade, Middletown, Pa., September 23, 1898.

There are many ways that a soldier can ruin himself, but I think the canteen is the most damnable of all. I have never allowed one in my regiment, and I never will.

W. J. GLENN, Colonel, Commanding.

[General Willcox.]

It is my opinion that the public good, as well as personal character of those concerned, would be enhanced very much by the exclusion of liquor from the rank and file of the Army, except under due medical prescription.

O. B. WILLCOX,
Brevet Major-General (retired).

WASHINGTON, D. C.

[General Rochester.]

There is no doubt that the drink habit works very great injury to the Army. It has been shown over and over again that those who endure the greatest fatigue and exposure are the men who do not drink.

WILLIAM B. ROCHESTER,
Brigadier-General, United States Army (retired).

WASHINGTON, D. C.

[General Carlin.]

It has always, since I was old enough to have an opinion, been my conviction that the public good would be enhanced by the exclusion of liquor from all circles. It does no good anywhere and countless evils everywhere. It is useless to discriminate between the Army and other people. Liquor is a nuisance and an evil, and no greater blessing to mankind could come to it than the total prohibition of its manufacture, sale, and use.

WILLIAM R. CARLIN,
Brigadier-General, United States Army (retired).

GRAND HOTEL, NEW YORK CITY.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE WAR INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

Major-General Boynton, who was then in command at Camp Thomas, testified before the commission, and his testimony was in part reported by the New York Tribune as follows:

"Asked if each regiment had a sutler, General Boynton replied: 'They had something worse than a sutler; each one had a canteen.' He said that 372 car loads of beer had been sold in the camp. He deprecated the fact that Army regulations permitted the canteen system."

Col. James C. Lee, assistant quartermaster-general, testified to facts with regard to drink in the camp that were reported in the New York Sun in the following paragraph:

"I think the freedom of the admission of beer and other articles into camp and the frequenting of the rum-selling holes in town more dangerous than sleeping on the ground."

Chaplain Phillips testifies that the canteen was prohibited by Col. William Jennings Bryan in his Nebraska regiment.

ABSTINENCE BEST FOR THE NAVY, TOO.

Rear-Admiral Sampson, in interview published in New Voice:

"I think there is but one opinion among officers of the Navy about grog, and it is that alcoholic liquors have no place in the Navy of the United States except as a medicine. Intoxicating liquors of all sorts should be abolished."

[Commodore Gibbs.]

In my opinion, there can be no question that the public good would be greatly enhanced by the exclusion of alcoholic drink, as a beverage, from both Army and Navy circles. The man who needs the stimulus of alcoholic liquor to enable him to perform his duty is not to be trusted in any capacity. In my experience of nearly fifty years as an officer in the United States Navy I think I can safely say that 90 per cent of all punishments inflicted on board ship that have come under my observation can be traced directly to rum.

I. H. GIBBS,
Commodore, United States Navy.

ALEXANDRIA, VA.

[Rear-Admiral Kimberly.]

I should say, as a naval man, that alcoholic liquor could be dispensed with with advantage, except for medical purposes.

In the Navy the grog ration has been abolished for years and coffee substituted in the early morning before any work is done. I look upon alcoholic drinks as medicine, and they should only be used as such.

L. A. KIMBERLY,
Rear-Admiral United States Navy (retired).

SECRETARY LONG'S ANTI-CANTEEN ORDER.

GENERAL ORDER, No. 508. NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 3, 1899.

After mature deliberation the Department has decided that it is for the best interest of the service that the sale or issue to enlisted men of malt or other alcoholic liquors on board ships of the Navy, or within the limits of naval stations, be prohibited.

Therefore, after the receipt of this order, commanding officers and commandants are forbidden to allow any malt or other alcoholic liquor to be sold to, or issued to, enlisted men, either on board ship, or within the limits of navy-yards, naval stations, or marine barracks, except in the medical department.

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

In regard to the above order, Secretary Long, in an interview February 19, 1899, said that the order was issued principally for the protection of apprentice boys in the service. He said in part:

"It is not true that any society outside the service caused the issuing of the order. It was done at the solicitation of naval officers themselves. The matter was first suggested to the Department by Captain Folger, of the cruiser New Orleans. After his return from the war he wrote a letter in which he fully explained the evils which, in his judgment, resulted from permitting the sale of liquor on shipboard. This letter I referred to a number of other captains. Among them were Captains Barker, Higginson, Crowninshield, and Bradford. After a careful consideration of the matter they reported, a majority of them favoring the absolute prohibition of beer and liquor on board. Then it was that the order was issued. The Department felt that its duty to the boys and men in the service required such an order." (Washington Post, February 20.)

GENERAL KITCHENER'S VICTORIOUS ABSTAINERS.

The British army has gathered the first experimental evidence bearing upon this military temperance question. Three regiments were selected from each of several brigades for tests at different times, partly during maneuvers. In one every man was forbidden to drink a drop while the test lasted; in the second, malt liquor only could be purchased; in the third, a sailor's ration of whisky was given to eachman.

The experiment was repeated in several instances where forced marches and other hard work was required. The whisky drinkers showed more dash at first, but generally in about four days showed signs of lassitude and abnormal fatigue. Those given malt liquor displayed less dash at first, but their endurance lasted somewhat longer. The abstainers, however, are said to have increased daily in alertness and staying powers. As a result of this experiment the British war department decided that in the recent Soudan campaign not a single drop of stimulant should be allowed in camp, save for hospital use.

The officers, including even the generals, could no longer enjoy their accustomed spirits, wines, and malt liquors at their mess tables. There must have been some wry faces, especially among the Scotch laddies, when the order was published that for all hands, including even camp followers, liquid refreshment was to be limited to tea, oatmeal water, or lime juice and Nile water. To-day it is a great feather in the headgear of the advocates of military total abstainers that Lord Kitchener's recent victory was won for him by an army of teetotalers, who made phenomenal forced marches through the desert, under a burning sun, and in a climate famed for its power to kill or prematurely age the unacclimated. Indeed, it is said that never has there been a British campaign occasioning so little sickness and profiting by so much endurance. (Washington Star.)

Hon. William S. Caine, M. P., of England, at a reception in New York City on October 20, 1898, stated that Lord Roberts, commander in chief, had said to him that one-third of the British army in India, 24,800 out of 75,000, furnish 2,000 more effective troops than the other two-thirds, who are not abstainers.

In a speech before the English Army Temperance Association, Lord Wolseley said: "There are yet some battles to be fought, some great enemies to be encountered by the United Kingdom, but the most pressing enemy at present is drink. It kills more than all our newest weapons of warfare, and not only destroys the body, but the mind and soul also.

These are only a few among similar views expressed by many Army officers of all grades.

EFFECT OF THE CANTEEN AT FORT VANCOUVER, WASH.

PORTLAND, OREG., March 20, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I have read the article written in opposition to the anti-canteen law, and would say I have lived for seven years on a car line that goes to and from the barracks of Vancouver, Wash., and will say as a positive fact that until liquor was sold inside the barracks that we never saw drunken soldiers on the car. Nine were on the car on Sunday morning coming in Portland from the barracks, all in different stages of drunkenness, but all drunk. It is awful. As a member of the body to vote on this, won't you please cast your vote in favor of no canteen, for the sake of our soldier boys?

Respectfully, yours,

S. J. STEWART.

JOHN H. KETCHAM.

In the report of the Adjutant-General for 1899 it is claimed that the "work of these exchanges, so far as the regular regiments are concerned, has been fulfilled in a satisfactory manner," and an effort is made to answer the criticism that had grown out of the operation of certain regimental exchanges by the suggestion that they were in volunteer regiments, and were operated contrary to the principle of the exchange system. It seems that the canteen, in some form in which intoxicating liquor was sold, existed in the regular and volunteer regiments. An analysis of the vital statistics, found in the same report, demonstrates very clearly that there was in operation some cause that was much more disastrous to the regular than the volunteer.

These statistics show that from May 1, 1898, to June 30, 1899, the average monthly strength of regulars was 56,218; average monthly strength of volunteers, 112,041—nearly twice as many volunteers as regulars.

Between above dates, among regulars 1 officer and 32 enlisted men committed suicide; among volunteers 1 officer and 20 enlisted men committed suicide; among 56,218 regulars 26 soldiers died from murder or homicide, and among 112,041 volunteers the same number, 26; among regulars, 924 men were dishonorably discharged by sentence of general court-martial, and 508 among twice as many volunteers; among 56,218 regulars in above period 3,036 deserted while out of twice as many volunteers only 2,736 deserted.

If we are at liberty to infer that this was principally caused by the sale of intoxicants in the canteen, it could hardly be said to operate in "a satisfactory manner" so far as the regulars are concerned.

Finally, the following summary, compiled from the official returns of the English army in India, fully corroborates the position which we maintain:

THE EFFECT OF ARMY ABSTINENCE IN INDIA IN 1898.

	Members Army Temperance Association.	Nonmembers.
Number of soldiers included in return	18,663	48,842
Convictions by court-martial, per 1,000	4.12	30.38
Summary punishments for insubordination, per 1,000	39.70	92.32
Admissions to hospital, per 1,000	209	302

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to cross out the words "military purposes" and put in "on any premises?"

The CHAIRMAN. It would not. There are two amendments already pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt.

The question was again taken; and there were 159 in the affirmative and 51 in the negative.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of a new section, to be numbered section 41.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after section 40, a new section, as follows:
"That no intoxicating drink of any kind shall be sold upon any premises owned or controlled by the United States."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that. It is not in order on this bill, and I call for a ruling.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself to the point of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] a few moments ago spoke of the great demand of the people of the United States for the abolition of liquor selling in the military camps of the United States, and said that in answer to that demand, although he did not believe in the amendment, he was going to vote for the proposition; and the gentleman from Virginia——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I am leading gradually up to the point of order. The gentleman from Virginia spoke about the bad effect the canteens have upon the common soldier. He said their establishment was a constant source of temptation to the soldier to drink. Now, if we are to deprive the soldier of an opportunity to purchase his beer upon the property of the United States let us deprive the members of Congress of the same opportunity and do equal justice and drive liquor selling out of the Capitol. If, as the gentleman from Virginia has stated, it seems discreditable to a large number of the people of the United States to allow liquor to be sold to the soldiers and sailors upon the property of the United States, how much more discreditable must it seem to allow liquor to be sold right here in the National Capitol. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, after the members of this House have voted overwhelmingly a few moments ago to prohibit liquor selling on all property under the jurisdiction of the military government, that it is perfectly proper for us to do a little penance ourselves, therefore I ask for a vote of the House upon this proposition. Let us put ourselves right upon this great question, and let us be consistent by meting out the same policy to ourselves that we deal out to the soldiers and sailors in the service of the United States.

I think the members of this House are as well able to stint themselves in the matter of liquor drinking, particularly when there are so many opportunities near at hand to satisfy their thirst, as the soldier or sailor who may be thousands of miles away from home. We will have the satisfaction at the same time of driving the sale of intoxicating liquor from the National Capitol.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may offer the amendment which he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] may offer the amendment which he desires.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 41. That the President is hereby authorized to select from the retired list of the Army an officer, not above the rank of brigadier-general, who may have distinguished himself during the war with Spain, in command of a separate army, and to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the officer so selected to be major-general, United States Army, with the pay and allowances established by law for officers of that grade on the retired list.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 41 of the bill. I do so——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section close in ten minutes.

Mr. KLUTTZ. For the same reasons that moved the House to strike out section 36. Section 41 is intended, and can only be intended, for one purpose, and that is to enable the President to retire one certain officer, whose name I shall not call, with the pay and allowances of a major-general of the Regular Army. I believe there is but one officer on the retired list above the grade of brigadier-general who may be affected by this provision, and it is manifestly in his personal interest that this section is proposed.

I am opposed to any and all personal legislation superimposed upon general bills; and I give notice that if this motion prevails I shall then move to strike out section 42, which is, as I understand, a correlative proposition. I hope the House will sustain the motion to strike out.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I most heartily second the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ]. The purpose of section 41 is to give to the President of the United States authority to place another officer upon the retired list; and, if I am properly informed, it is an officer now on the retired list of volunteers as a brigadier-general. I do not care to whom the provision may apply, but I believe the time has come when the Congress of the United States should not be trying at every session to increase the retired list.

I have the same objection to section 42 of this bill that I have to section 41. By examining the records, it will be ascertained that since the 2d of April, 1897, there has been placed upon the retired list 3 major-generals and 23 brigadier-generals. And here now it is sought to give the President of the United States the opportunity to increase that retired list. The last Army appropriation bill carried $1,273,000 to pay the salaries of the officers who have heretofore been placed upon the retired list of the Army.

This is direct class legislation. It is that class of legislation to which I am opposed. I stand now, as heretofore, in opposition to the character of legislation that is continually increasing the retired list. I am therefore in favor of striking out section 41 and section 42 of this bill. This bill was introduced for the purpose, as is shown upon its face, not of placing men on the retired list, but for increasing the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States. That being the purpose of the bill, why should these two sections be put in here expressly to give the President the opportunity to place these gentlemen upon the retired list?

I know it will be said that they have rendered distinguished services to the Government of the United States. Let that be granted for the sake of argument; still if they have done so, it is simply because of the fact that they have had an opportunity to do so. There are other distinguished gentlemen in the Army, had they had the opportunity, who would have rendered just as able and distinguished services as have any of the gentlemen who are sought to be taken care of by this bill at this time. I believe that now, when we have seen that we have been compelled to appropriate over a million dollars to pay the salaries of these retired officers, the time has come for us to stop placing men on the retired list. For that reason I am in favor of striking out sections 41 and 42 of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in ten minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Five minutes.

Mr. HULL. Very well; five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to closing the debate on this question in five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the section now under consideration authorizes the President to place a man on the retired list who has had a separate command and who has performed distinguished service during the Spanish war. The House, I suppose, knows whom this is intended for. I assume that if the provision should pass, Brigadier-General Shafter will be made a major-general on the retired list. And so far as I am concerned, I believe that he has earned this recognition by long and distinguished service, commenced in 1861 and continuing without a day's intermission up to the present hour. He has been in the Army, volunteer or regular, since 1861. He performed distinguished service during the Spanish war. No matter what criticism may have been made at the time, the results of the campaign in Santiago have demonstrated the fact that it was magnificently planned and splendidly executed. So far as I am concerned, it seems to me that an act of Congress giving the President the right to retire this officer just one grade beyond what he has attained will be but an act of mere justice to one of the most distinguished officers of the American Army, who is acting now as major-general of volunteers. I call for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KLUTTZ to strike out section 41, it was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 121, noes 100.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 42. That the President is authorized to select from the brigadier-generals of volunteers two volunteer officers, without regard to age, and appoint them brigadier-generals, United States Army, for the purpose of placing them upon the retired list.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I move to strike out section 142. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out section 42.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I move to strike out section 42.

Mr. JETT. I move to strike out the section.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I made the motion first.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I gave notice in advance that I would make this motion, and I hope the gentleman from Ohio will yield to me, because my friend the chairman of the committee has said——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT], who is a member of the committee, has been recognized by the Chair, and has moved to strike out section 42.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the Chair rule that that gentleman made the motion first?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois, a member of the committee, was recognized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Any way, so the section goes out, I do not care.

Mr. JETT. I ask for a vote on my proposition.

The question being taken, the motion to amend by striking out section 42 was agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 43. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed so as to discharge any officer from the Army or to deprive him of the commission which he now holds.

Mr. HULL. I move to amend the section just read by inserting before the word "Army" the word "Regular."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I move further to amend by adding at the end of the section the word "therein."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill having now been read through, the question is on the adoption of the substitute as amended.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendment and with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER accordingly resumed the chair, and Mr. DALZELL reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill S. 4300, a bill to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States, had instructed him to report the same to the House with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and that as so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I have a motion which I desire to submit to recommit this bill with instructions to the Committee on Military Affairs. I desire to offer that motion at the proper time. I would ask the Chair when it should be done.

The SPEAKER. The time has not yet come.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendments to the substitute and on the bill to its final passage.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to ask the yeas and nays on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the Chair will state, because that question is not before the House in a separate form, not being reported as a separate amendment, as the Chair understands it, from the Committee of the Whole.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is it not in order to have a vote on the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands from the report of the Chairman of the committee that no separate amendment was reported to the House, but that a substitute was presented for its action.

Mr. DALZELL. The report was, Mr. Speaker, that the committee had instructed me to report an amendment to the bill in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair understood.

Mr. HULL. And we have adopted the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. As Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, I reported to the House the amendment adopted by the committee in the nature of a substitute for the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that to be the report, and has no knowledge of matters taking place in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is it not possible now, Mr. Speaker, to demand a separate vote on one of the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that there is but one amendment before the House, and that is the substitute bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And no separate vote can be asked upon the several provisions of that substitute?

The SPEAKER. No; as there is but one amendment to be voted on, and hence no separate vote can be taken upon the various provisions of that amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAY. I understand that we considered in Committee of the Whole the bill, which was finally amended by the adoption of a substitute. That substitute was amended in various ways in the Committee of the Whole. Do I understand now that the vote is only upon the substitute as a whole, and not upon the various parts of it which were considered by the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the House can only vote upon the perfected amendment which has been reported from the Committee of the Whole—that is, the substitute for the Senate bill as amended.

The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The question was taken on the substitute for the Senate bill as amended; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 193, noes 107.

So the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The third reading of the bill was ordered, and the bill was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move now, if it be in order, to recommit this Senate bill (No. 4300) to the Committee on Military Affairs with the instructions I send to the desk.

The Clerk began reading the motion of Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I have no desire to force the House to listen to this entire bill. It is six printed pages long. It is the present law with the exception that its provisions are continued until the end of the fiscal year 1903.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. To save time, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of my motion to recommit be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the motion.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first submit the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will it be in order now to ask to amend the instructions contained in that motion?

The SPEAKER. One thing at a time. The gentleman from New York has been on his feet while this motion is being considered. He has not as yet demanded the previous question. If the previous question is ordered by the House, no amendment will then be in order. If not, then an amendment will be in order. The question before the House——

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Has not the previous question been already ordered?

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will suspend. If the House will be patient we will reach the matter in order. The question now before the House is the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] to dispense with the further reading of the motion. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. HULL. I should like to couple with that a request that the motion of the gentleman from New York be printed in the RECORD. It will not be unless that is granted.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I have no objection to that, although I supposed it would go into the RECORD anyway.

The SPEAKER. Coupled with that is the request that the proposed bill be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion is as follows:

Mr. MCCLELLAN moved to recommit Senate bill 4300 to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report it back, forthwith, with the following amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That from and after the date of approval of this act the Army of the United States shall consist of 3 major-generals, 6 brigadier-generals, 10 regiments of cavalry, 7 regiments of artillery, 25 regiments of infantry, an Adjutant-General's Department, an Inspector-General's Department, a Judge-

Advocate-General's Department, a Quartermaster's Department, a Subsistence Department, a Medical Department, a Pay Department, a Corps of Engineers, an Ordnance Department, a Signal Corps, 30 chaplains, to be assigned to regiments or posts in the discretion of the Secretary of War, the officers of the Record and Pension Office, the officers and enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, the professors, corps of cadets, an Army service detachment and band at the United States Military Academy, and such other officers and enlisted men as may hereinafter be provided for: Provided, That when a vacancy shall occur through death, retirement, or other separation from active service, in the office of storekeeper in the Quartermaster's Department and Ordnance Department, respectively, now provided for by law, said offices shall cease to exist.

"SEC. 2. That each regiment of cavalry shall consist of 1 colonel; 1 lieutenant-colonel; 3 majors; 14 captains, 2 of whom shall be available for detail as adjutant and quartermaster; 16 first lieutenants, of whom 1 shall be available for detail as commissary and 3 for detail as squadron adjutants; 12 second lieutenants, 2 veterinarians, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 commissary-sergeant, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a regimental quartermaster-sergeant of cavalry; 3 squadron sergeant-majors, who shall be senior to and have the pay and allowances of first sergeants of cavalry; 1 band; and 12 troops organized into three squadrons of four troops each: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored cavalry. Each cavalry band shall consist of 1 chief musician; 1 chief trumpeter; 1 principal musician; 1 drum major, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant; 4 sergeants; 8 corporals; 1 cook, and 11 privates. Each troop of cavalry shall consist of 1 captain; 1 first lieutenant; 1 second lieutenant; 1 first sergeant; 1 quartermaster-sergeant, who shall have the pay and allowances of a sergeant; 6 sergeants, 6 corporals, 2 cooks, 2 farriers and blacksmiths, 1 saddler, 1 wagoner, 2 trumpeters, and 43 privates. Of the veterinarians provided for in this act, 1 shall have the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry and 1 shall have the pay of $75 per month and the allowances of a sergeant-major: Provided, That the veterinarian appointed to the first grade shall not be so appointed until he shall have passed an examination, to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, as to his physical, moral, and professional qualifications: Provided further, That the veterinarians now in the service who do not pass such competitive examination shall be eligible to the positions of the second class under such rules as are now prescribed by the regulations. The regimental sergeant-major and the regimental quartermaster sergeant provided for in this section shall have the pay and allowances of ordnance sergeants.

"SEC. 3. That each regiment of artillery shall consist of 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 16 captains, 2 of whom shall be available for detail as adjutant and quartermaster; 16 first lieutenants, 14 second lieutenants, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 band, and 14 batteries, of which 2 may be organized as field artillery.

"Each artillery band shall consist of 1 chief musician, 1 chief trumpeter, 1 principal musician, 1 drum major, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant; 4 sergeants, 8 corporals, 1 cook, and 11 privates.

"Each battery of heavy artillery shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 1 second lieutenant, 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, who shall have the pay and allowances of a sergeant; 8 sergeants, 12 corporals, 2 musicians, 2 mechanics, who shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of artillery; 2 cooks, and 52 privates.

"Each battery of field artillery shall consist of 1 captain, 2 first lieutenants, 1 second lieutenant, 1 first sergeant, 1 stable sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 12 corporals, 4 artificers, 2 musicians, 2 cooks, and 51 privates.

"In addition to the enlisted men specified there shall be 1 electrician sergeant to each post garrisoned by coast artillery having electrical appliances, who shall have the pay and allowances of an ordnance sergeant.

"SEC. 4. That each regiment of infantry shall consist of 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 14 captains, 2 of whom shall be available for detail as adjutant and quartermaster, 16 first lieutenants, of whom 1 shall be available for detail as commissary and 3 for detail as battalion adjutants; 12 second lieutenants, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 commissary-sergeant, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a regimental quartermaster-sergeant of infantry; 3 battalion sergeant-majors, who shall be senior to and have the pay and allowances of a first sergeant; 1 band, and 12 companies, organized into 3 battalions of 4 companies each: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored infantry.

"Each infantry band shall consist of 1 chief musician, 1 principal musician, 1 drum major, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant; 4 sergeants, 8 corporals, 1 cook, and 12 privates.

"Each infantry company shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 1 second lieutenant, 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, who shall have the pay and allowances of a sergeant, 4 sergeants, 6 corporals, 2 cooks, 2 musicians, 1 artificer, and 48 privates: Provided, That the limits of age for original enlistments in the Army shall be 18 and 35 years.

"SEC. 5. That all vacancies created or caused by the provisions of this act above the grade of second lieutenant in the line of the Army shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in the several arms, subject to the examinations now prescribed by law: Provided, That the additional second lieutenants now attached to each regiment of artillery shall be absorbed in the artillery or transferred to other arms where vacancies exist without loss of relative rank, leaving but one second lieutenant in each battery.

"Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled as now provided by law, except that no person shall be appointed from civil life before he shall have reached the age of 21 years nor after he shall have reached the age of 27 years, nor until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination as to his moral, physical, and educational qualifications.

"SEC. 6. That the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's departments shall consist of the number of officers now in those departments, respectively: Provided, That vacancies in the grade of major occurring in either department shall hereafter be filled from captains in the line of the Army: And provided further, That all such captains who have evinced marked aptitude in the command of troops shall be reported by their regimental commanders to the War Department and shall be entitled to compete for any such vacancy under such system of examination as the President shall prescribe.

"SEC. 7. That the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, Quartermaster's Department, Subsistence Department, Medical Department, Pay Department, Corps of Engineers, Ordnance Department, and Signal Corps shall consist of the officers and enlisted men now provided by law: Provided, That the battalion of engineers, and the officers serving therewith, shall constitute a part of the line of the Army: Provided further, That in time of war retired officers of the Army may, in the discretion of the President, be employed on active duty, other than in the command of troops, and when so employed they shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grades: And provided also, That no person in civil life shall hereafter be appointed a judge-advocate, paymaster, or chaplain until he shall have passed satisfactorily such examination as to his moral, mental, and physical qualifications as may be prescribed by the President; and no such person shall be appointed who is more than forty-four years of age: Provided further, That in case of the appointment of an officer who has served in a similar capacity during the war with Spain and has demonstrated his moral, mental, and physical qualifications for the position, then such examination shall not be required.

"SEC. 8. That the Chief of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general, and there shall be an assistant chief of said office, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major, and who may be appointed from civil life: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of Chief of the Record and Pension Office subsequent to the passage of this act said grade shall cease and determine, and thereafter the chief of said office shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel.

"SEC. 9. That the cooks authorized by this act shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of infantry.

"SEC. 10. That the corps of cadets shall consist of 1 from each Congressional district, 1 from each Territory, 1 from the District of Columbia, and 20 from the United States at large. They shall be appointed by the President, and shall, with the exception of the 20 cadets appointed at large, be actual residents of the Congressional or Territorial districts, or of the District of Columbia, or of the States, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed.

"SEC. 11. That so much of the acts approved July 7, 1898, as authorizes the assignment of certain officers of the Quartermaster's and Subsistence departments with increased rank and the continuance in service of certain volunteer officers of those departments for a period of one year after the close of the present war is repealed.

"SEC. 12. That to meet the present exigencies of the military service the President is hereby authorized to maintain the Regular Army at a strength of not exceeding 65,000 enlisted men, to be distributed amongst the several branches of the service, including the Signal Corps, according to the needs of each, and raise a force of not more than 35,000 volunteers to be recruited as he may determine from the country at large, or from the localities where their services are needed, without restriction as to citizenship or educational qualifications, and to organize the same into not more than 27 regiments organized as are infantry regiments of war strength in the Regular Army, and 3 regiments to be composed of men of special qualifications in horsemanship and marksmanship, to be organized as cavalry for service mounted or dismounted: Provided, That each regiment shall have one surgeon, with the rank of major; two assistant surgeons, one of whom shall have the rank of captain and one that of first lieutenant, and three hospital stewards: Provided further, That such increased regular and volunteer force shall continue in service only during the necessity therefor, and not later than July 1, 1901.

"All enlistments for the volunteer force herein authorized shall be for the term of two years and four months, unless sooner discharged.

"SEC. 13. That the President shall have power to continue in service or to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, brigadier-generals of volunteers, who, including the brigadier-generals of the Regular Army, shall not exceed 1 for every 4,000 enlisted men actually in service, and major-generals of volunteers, who, including the major-generals of the Regular Army, shall not exceed 1 for every 12,000 enlisted men: Provided, That Regular Army officers continued or appointed as general officers or as field or staff officers of volunteers, under the provisions of this Act, shall not vacate their Regular Army commissions: And provided further, That no general officers appointed under the provisions of this section shall be continued in service as such beyond July 1, 1901: And provided also, That any officer now in the Army, who was graduated at the head of his class at the United States Military Academy and who is not now in the Corps of Engineers, may be appointed to the Corps of Engineers with the same grade and date of commission that he would have if he had been appointed to the Corps of Engineers on graduation; but said commission shall not entitle an officer to any back pay or allowance.

"SEC. 14. That the President is hereby authorized to continue in service, or to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, officers of the volunteer staff, as follows:

"Three assistant adjutant-generals with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 6 assistant adjutant-generals with the rank of major.

"Three inspectors-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 6 inspectors-general with the rank of major.

"Five judge-advocates with the rank of major.

"Thirty quartermasters with the rank of major, and 40 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain.

"Six commissaries of subsistence with the rank of major, and 12 assistant commissaries of subsistence with the rank of captain.

"Thirty-four surgeons with the rank of major.

"Thirty additional paymasters with the rank of major.

"Four signal officers with the rank of major, 9 signal officers with the rank of captain, 9 signal officers with the rank of first lieutenant, and 9 signal officers with the rank of second lieutenant.

"Provided, That for each Regular Army officer of a staff corps or department who may be retained in or appointed to a higher volunteer rank in said staff corps or department than that actually held by him in the regular establishment there may be appointed one officer of volunteers of the lowest grade mentioned in this section for such staff corps or department, but no appointment shall be made which will increase the total number of officers, regular and volunteer, serving in any grade, above the number authorized by this act: And provided also, That all the volunteer staff officers herein authorized to be appointed or retained in the service shall be honorably discharged on July 1, 1901, or sooner if their services are no longer required: And provided further, That the officers herein authorized shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 15. That the officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army shall be mustered out of the military service of the United States and discharged as provided in the act of April 22, 1898: Provided, That enlisted men of volunteers who desire to remain in the military service, either in the Regular Army or the temporary force authorized by this act, may, if found qualified therefor, be transferred to and enlisted in such batteries, troops, or companies as may be below the maximum authorized strength, and when so transferred and enlisted shall be credited on their new enlistment with the periods of service rendered by them, respectively, as volunteers: And provided further, That the President is authorized to enlist temporarily in service for absolutely necessary purposes in the Philippine Islands volunteers, officers and men, individually or by organization, now in those islands and about to be discharged, provided their retention shall not extend beyond the time necessary to replace them by troops authorized to be maintained under the provisions of this act and not beyond a period of six months: Provided, also, That each and every provision of this act shall continue in force until July 1, 1903; and on and after that date all the general, staff, and line officers appointed to the Army under this act shall be discharged and the numbers restored in each grade to those existing at the passage of this act, and the enlisted force of the line of the Army shall be reduced to the number as provided for by a law prior to April 1, 1898, exclusive of such additions as have been, or may be, made under this act to the artillery, and except the cadets provided for by this act, who may be appointed prior to July 1, 1901: And provided further, That no officer who has been, or may be, promoted under existing law, or under the rules of seniority, shall be disturbed in his rank.

"SEC. 16. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit enlisted men of the United States Army to make allotments of their pay, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of their families or relatives, for their own savings, or for other purposes, during such time as they may be absent on distant duty, or under other circumstances warranting such action.

"SEC. 17. That no officer or private soldier shall be detailed to sell intoxicating drinks, as a bartender or otherwise, in any post exchange or canteen, nor shall any other person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue such general order as may be necessary to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect.

"SEC. 18. That all laws or parts of laws which conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. HULL. Now I move the previous question. I thought I had moved it to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That applied to the bill, but not to the motion to recommit made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A point of order.

The SPEAKER. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from New York to demand the previous question on his motion?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I do not. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Iowa moved the previous question, and said he thought he had done so before, in moving the previous question on the bill to the final passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised of any motion made by the gentleman from Iowa for the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HULL. I did make the motion, but the gentleman from Missouri insisted that he was recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri had not been recognized except for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HULL. I move the previous question.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa demands the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. In the interest of proper practice I wish to say that it seems to me that the gentleman from Iowa did move the previous question upon the bill to its passage. If that is true, then it included all motions, with the motion to recommit among the rest.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not take that view of it. The gentleman did ask for the previous question and that was ordered by the House upon the bill to its passage; but that does not preclude the House from voting on a motion to recommit. However, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] now asks for the previous question on the motion to recommit made by the gentleman from New York. That is the question now before the House.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions.

Mr. HULL. I call for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I join in the request for the yeas and nays made by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Now I ask again whether it will be in order to amend the motion to instruct?

The SPEAKER. No amendment of any kind can now be made. As many as are in favor of ordering this vote to be taken by the yeas and nays will rise in their places and remain standing until counted.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 246, answered "present" 2, not voting 38; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the claim against the United States of the Russian subject Gustad Isak Dahlberg, master and principal owner of the Russian bark Hams, based on his wrongful and illegal arrest and imprisonment by officers of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi, and, in view of the opinion expressed by the Department of Justice that the said arrest and detention of the complainant were wrongful and without the authority of law, I recommend the appropriation by Congress of the sum of $5,000 to reimburse the master and owners of the vessel for all losses and damages incurred by reason of his said wrongful and illegal arrest and detention.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 6, 1900.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in relation to the lynching, in La Salle County, Tex., on October 5, 1895, of Florentino Suaste, a Mexican citizen.

Following the course pursued in the case of the lynching of three Italian subjects at Hahnsville, La., on August 8, 1896, and in that of the lynching of the Mexican citizen Luis Moreno, at Yreka, Cal., in August, 1895, I recommend the appropriation by Congress, out of humane consideration, and without reference to the question of liability of the Government of the United States, of the sum of $2,000, to be paid by the Secretary of State to the Government of Mexico, and by that Government distributed to the heirs of the above-mentioned Florentino Suaste.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 6, 1900.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a communication from the Secretary of State, inclosing the annual report of the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics, with accompanying documents.

The attention of Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of State that 2,500 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Bureau.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 6, 1900.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to Executive Document No. 58, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of the communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of the appropriation for third secretary of embassy, Italy, which by mistake was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, when it should have gone to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Without objection, this change of reference will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PERSONAL REQUESTS OF MEMBERS.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FREER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. DAVEY, for five days, on account of important business.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. BRUNDIDGE, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Arkansas will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes) adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 7, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Pettus,
Bard,	Foster,	Lindsay,	Platt, N. Y.
Berry,	Frye,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Beveridge,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Hale,	McMillan,	Quarles,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Mallory,	Scott,
Clay,	Harris,	Martin,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Mason,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Stewart,
Deboe,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Taliaferro,
Dillingham,	Kean,	Perkins,	Teller,
Dolliver,	Kenney,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have responded to their names on the roll call. There is a quorum present.

GUSTAV ISAK DAHLBERG.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the claim against the United States of the Russian subject, Gustav Isak Dahlberg, master and principal owner of the Russian bark Hans, based on his wrongful and illegal arrest and imprisonment by officers of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi, and, in view of the opinion expressed by the Department of Justice that the said arrest and detention of the complainant were wrongful and without authority of law, I recommend the appropriation by Congress of the sum of $5,000 to reimburse the master and owners of the vessel for all losses and damages incurred by reason of his said wrongful and illegal arrest and detention.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 6, 1900.

FLORENTINO SUASTE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in relation to the lynching in Lasalle County, Tex., on October 5, 1895, of Florentino Suaste, a Mexican citizen.

Following the course pursued in the case of the lynching of three Italian subjects at Hahnsville, La., on August 8, 1896, and in that of the lynching of the Mexican citizen, Luis Moreno, at Yreka, Cal., in August, 1895, I recommend the appropriation by Congress, out of humane consideration and without reference to the question of liability of the Government of the United States, of the sum of $2,000, to be paid by the Secretary of State to the Government of Mexico and by that Government distributed to the heirs of the above-mentioned Florentino Suaste.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 6, 1900.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a communication from the Secretary of State inclosing the annual report of the Director of the American Republics, with accompanying documents.

The attention of Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of State that 2,500 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Bureau.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 6, 1900.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to section 6 of the act of Congress approved February 26, 1889, the report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 12283) in relation to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been handed a telegram addressed to the President of the Senate, which is of sufficient importance that it should be read to the Senate. It is dated New Orleans, La., December 6, and is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., December 6, 1900.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C:

The Southern Industrial Convention, now in session, passed the accompanying resolutions and directed they be sent to you to be read to the Senate:

Be it resolved, That the upbuilding of our American merchant marine is very important to the further development of Southern industry, and, therefore, we recommend to our National Congress the early passage of a ship subsidy bill for all American vessels, which shall be equitably based upon the tonnage actually carried, besides compensation for carrying the mails.

N. F. THOMPSON, Secretary.

I move that this important telegram, in the nature of a petition, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the pastors of sundry churches of Turtle Creek, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any post exchange, canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry druggists of Bellefonte, Pa., praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the executive committee of the Home Missionary Society of the Presbytery of Washington, Pa., and a petition of the Children's Aid Society of Washington County, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KYLE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Brookings, S. Dak., and a petition of the South Dakota Christian Temperance Union, praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish the Army canteen; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in our new island possessions; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented 157 petitions of citizens of New York, praying for the enactment of the Grout bill, so called, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KEAN presented 45 petitions of citizens of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of the Grout bill, so called, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented 13 petitions of citizens of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCOTT presented 11 petitions of citizens of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of the Grout bill, so called, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. QUARLES presented sundry petitions of business men of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation reducing the tax on beer; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented 23 petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of the Grout bill, so called, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Presbytery of Winona, Minn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 50 citizens of Illinois, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Decatur Brewing Company, of Decatur, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation reducing the tax on beer to $1 per barrel; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THURSTON presented a petition of sundry shippers of Omaha, Nebr., praying that the revenue-stamp tax on bills of lading and telegraphic messages be repealed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented 13 petitions of citizens of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of the Grout bill, so called, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Knox Post, No. 120, Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference to veterans in the public service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented three petitions of citizens of Maine, praying for the enactment of the Grout bill, so called, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be recalled that during the past few years there has been much agitation in the District of Columbia concerning the water supply. The death rate from typhoid fever in this city has been alarmingly large, much greater than in most of our American cities and seven or eight times greater than in the great European cities.

Some years ago the health authorities in Washington concluded that the wells of the city were contaminated, and most of the wells were closed, greatly to the disadvantage of the poor people of the District. That having been done, typhoid fever continued, and the death rate has increased rather than diminished.

The agitation now is that the water supply from the Potomac River is responsible for the continuance of typhoid, and that filtration of the water has become an absolute necessity. It is believed by the medical profession that if that shall be attended to the high death rate from typhoid will disappear.

The Medical Society of the District of Columbia, always alert in matters of this kind, appointed a committee of five distinguished physicians, Drs. Samuel C. Busey, G. Wythe Cook, George M. Kober, Z. T. Sowers, and William C. Woodward, who have taken this matter into very careful consideration, and after investigating it with great thoroughness these gentlemen have prepared a report in reference to the proper method to be employed to filter the water, and they also discuss the relative merits between what is called sand and mechanical filtration. They have reached the conclusion that sand filtration, while it is more expensive to install than mechanical filtration, is the desirable method to employ in this District. I am not myself prepared to express an opinion as to the wisdom of the conclusion that these distinguished gentlemen have reached, but think it very probable that it is correct. Of one thing I am fully persuaded, and that is that a filtration plant of the best possible kind should be installed at the earliest possible moment, and the movement in that behalf will have my earnest and cordial support.

I rise now, Mr. President, to present the report of this committee of the Medical Society of the District, and to ask that it may be printed as a document, and that 500 copies in paper covers be printed in addition for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not long?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a long document.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let a thousand extra copies be printed, 500 for the committee and 500 additional for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is a very proper suggestion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make it because there will be applications for copies to Senators not upon the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for an order that 500 copies for the committee and 500 additional copies for the use of the Senate be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire presents the paper to which he has referred and asks that it be printed as a document, and that 500 additional copies be printed for the committee and 500 for the use of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL TAX UPON MALT LIQUORS.

Mr. MASON. I present a statement from Mr. Rudolph Brand, of Chicago, president of the United States Brewers' Association, showing the effect of the present war tax on beer, and claiming that it is paralyzing their industry, and praying that the extra tax be repealed. I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR ON THE BEER TAX—BREWERS CLAIM IT IS PARALYZING THEIR INDUSTRY—A LARGE NUMBER OF FAILURES—PRESIDENT RUDOLPH BRAND, OF THE UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION, PRESENTS STATISTICS SHOWING EFFECT OF THE WAR TAX—CLAIMS MANY ESTABLISHMENTS ARE BEING CONDUCTED WITHOUT PROFIT—SMALL PERCENTAGE OF ENGLISH CAPITAL INVESTED.

Mr. Rudolph Brand, of Chicago, president of the United States Brewers' Association, with other representative brewers, is in the city, having come to Washington for the purpose of impressing upon the minds of the lawmakers the justice of their demand that the extra tax upon beer be repealed. When asked last night by a Post reporter as to the action taken by the committee relative to the tax reduction, Mr. Brand asserted that, in his opinion, the committee would have reached a different conclusion had it not been for many erroneous and untenable statements concerning the effects of the double war tax upon the brewing industry.

"Our recent letter to the Ways and Means Committee," said Mr. Brand, "does not cover the whole ground, as it was simply intended to supplement the arguments we submitted to the committee in April last."

Attention was called by Mr. Brand to the following extracts from the letter referred to:

"Since April the destructive effects of the double war tax have been augmented and aggravated to such an extent that a very large proportion of the smaller establishments have been forced into bankruptcy and out of business, or compelled to seek escape from utter ruin by combining with other breweries, equally hampered and harassed by a tax representing 40 per cent of the market price of their product and entailing losses which, for reasons explained in our previous statements, they can not recoup in the ordinary way in which any tax upon consumption is usually recovered. Since April, 1900, no less than fifteen combinations of from three to twelve once prosperous establishments have been formed under the distressing pressure of the double war tax, and this baneful tendency toward the destruction or the absorption of the smaller manufactories and the combination of large numbers of establishments, whose profits have been either wiped out or reduced to an infinitesimal minimum, is not confined to the smaller cities, but embraces such large brewing centers as Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburg, and others. But even these combinations offer no appreciable relief; they are mere makeshifts of a transitory character. The best proof of this lies in the fact that of the companies whose stocks are quoted in the trade papers, scarcely 20 per cent can pay any interest even on their preferred stock.

"If you consider what an immense cash capital it requires to place the finished product into the market, exclusive of the vast sums of money expended in the purchase of material, the payment of workmen, and the storage and distribution of malt liquors—not to speak of the interest on the capital permanently invested—you will readily perceive why the smaller brewer, whose establishment represents the savings of a lifetime and who has no accumulated available capital to draw upon, must necessarily succumb in an industrial struggle which the imposition of a double war tax has rendered almost hopeless even to those manufacturers who possess a considerable reserve of cash capital.

CIVIL WAR TAX NEVER REMOVED.

"This is only one side of the question, but it is the one which shows the pernicious effects of a most unjust tax in the most glaring light, and appeals to other sentiments besides that of justice in the abstract. In our opinion, it should not, however, require such appeals in order to bring about the immediate repeal of the entire extra war tax, superimposed upon the old war tax.

"There was no equitable justification for it at the time of its imposition, because the brewing industry had up to that time uninterruptedly paid the old war tax of $1 per barrel, while all other manufactures, products, professions, and occupations embraced in the original revenue system, as organized between the years 1861 and 1864, have not paid a single dollar into the Federal Treasury since the termination of the civil war, and do not now contribute one penny toward the Federal revenue. Is it unfair or unpatriotic to ask why one American industry, consuming almost exclusively those highly protected American products which are a source of wealth to the American farmer, should pay a double war tax, amounting to 40 per cent of the market value of its product, while all other American industries remain untaxed? It will not be deemed to be presumptuous, we trust, if we ask what justification there was for imposing or what good reason there is for continuing a tax of $2 upon a barrel of beer costing $5, in the face of the fact that at a time (thirty-five years ago) when the market price of beer was $12, a Republican Administration and a Republican Congress asserted and maintained that a tax of $1 'was fully up to the revenue standard and should not be increased.'" (See report of the Special Revenue Commission for 1865-66, p. 27.)

"We maintain that common justice imperatively demands the immediate repeal of the additional war tax upon malt liquors. In the entire war-revenue act of 1898 there is not a single tax item, excepting our own, that is unjust or inequitable in itself; none, excepting the beer tax, that has caused or is likely to cause widespread industrial ruin; none, again with the same exception, that must be borne by a comparatively small number of citizens for the exclusive benefit of all those numerous and immensely wealthy industries which, while protected by wise tariff laws, contribute not a single dollar to the internal revenue, and, finally, none that must ultimately affect such large masses of the poorer people.

"The most striking evidence of the correctness of our contention as to the inequality and injustice of the present tax rate lies in the fact that in 1866, when the receipts from internal revenue reached the highest point, viz, $310,906,984, the three revenue items which have remained in force (at reduced rates as to spirits) since the civil war only yielded $50,129,877, of which the sum of $5,115,140 was derived from malt liquors, then selling at $12 per barrel. The remainder, amounting to $260,777,107, came from sources of revenue the greater portion of which are not mentioned in the act which imposed upon our product an additional war tax of $1."

SMALL INVESTMENT OF ENGLISH CAPITAL.

"Is it true, as reported in a New York paper," Mr. Brand was asked, "that 80 per cent of capital invested in American breweries is owned by English capitalists?"

In answer to the question Mr. Brand produced figures, from which the following statement is compiled:

There are 24 consolidated companies, originally comprising 79 American breweries, in which English capital is invested. Three of these have been repurchased by their original owners. The total number of American breweries is 1,751. The total capital invested in the 76 English syndicate breweries is about $80,000,000. The total capital invested in all American breweries (computation based on $18 for every barrel produced and a production of 39,000,000 barrels, in round numbers) is $702,000,000.

Of the stock invested in syndicate breweries, fully 40 per cent is held by American citizens; hence the English capital invested in American breweries amounts to $48,000,000, or less than 7 per cent.

RECAPITULATION.

Number of syndicate breweries	76
Total number of American breweries	1,751
English capital invested in American breweries	$48,000,000
Total capital invested in American breweries	$702,000,000

Proportion of English capital, 7 per cent.

The capital invested in the breweries of Great Britain and Ireland amounted, according to official figures, to $1,050,000,000 when the production of beer in Great Britain and Ireland amounted to the equivalent of about 48,000,000 American barrels. This shows that our estimate is very low—certainly lower than the actual facts would warrant.

The larger establishments, like those of Ehret, Pabst, Busch, Schlitz, Lemp, Bernheimer, Ruppert, etc., are owned exclusively by American citizens, and all others, excepting the 76 syndicate concerns, are also exclusively in the hands of Americans, generally their founders or their offsprings, and most of these represent the savings of half a lifetime of arduous labor, economic methods, and frugal habits on the part of their owners.

GOVERNMENT POCKETS PROFITS.

"Although there was a decrease in the production of beer last year amounting to 1,000,000 barrels, does not the increase of 7 per cent shown this year weaken the argument of the brewers that the war tax was responsible for last year's decrease?" Mr. Brand was asked.

"This might, as I stated in my letter to the committee, be construed as an evidence of the industry's prosperous condition," said Mr. Brand, "but such a conclusion would be totally erroneous. Continued and ever-increasing prosperity created an increased demand for beer, which the brewers met by a corresponding supply; but in doing so very many realized no profit at all, while all the others manufactured at a very slight margin of gain. It is the Government that pockets the profits, while the brewers, rather than close up their establishments (as so many of them had to do of late), continue operations—some at a loss, others with the smallest possible profit, and many without any profit whatever; all hoping that the double war tax would be repealed at once.

"Besides this, the increase of 7 per cent following a decrease of 1,000,000 barrels in the preceding year only serves to emphasize the correctness of our general statements. In a period of such unusual prosperity as characterized the last two years, the natural increase in the production of beer would, in the absence of the exorbitant tax, have amounted to at least 25 per cent in each one of the prosperous years. If you analyze the development of the industry from 1863 up to date, you will find that, far from being an exaggerated estimate, this is rather lower than facts warrant. As an example, I may quote the increase in the production of malt liquors in the very first year of prosperity (1880) after the long period of depression following the panic of the fall of 1873. The production then increased from about 11,000,000 barrels in 1879 to about thirteen and one-third millions in 1880, being 20 per cent."

AN ERROR CORRECTED.

"By the way," continued Mr. Brand, "I heard a statement made that the increase in the consumption of beer since the civil war was not at all uniform, the inference intended to be conveyed being that the war tax had nothing to do with the decrease of 1899 and the inconsiderable increase of the past year. Now, the fact is that there never was a decrease in the production of beer, excepting in one instance, unless caused either by business panics or excessive taxation. The one single exception is a decrease of 1 per cent in the year 1868, the result of overproduction of the preceding two years, in which the aggregate increase amounted to 61 per cent. There was no decrease, in fact, excepting this one from 1863 to 1874, the year following the panic of 1873. In that period of business depression, which lasted six years, there were three slight decreases, followed in 1880, the first year of prosperity, by the enormous increase of 20 per cent. From 1880 to the next panic, in 1893, a period of thirteen years, there was not a single decrease. The next decrease was caused by the Raines law in the State of New York, the numerical limitation of saloons in some and the unfavorable results of the no-license vote in other States.

"The two years of the greatest prosperity ever experienced in our country brought to the brewers, as I have stated, a loss of 1,000,000 barrels in 1899, and an insignificant increase of 7 per cent in the past year. According to the nature of the industry and its product and the character of its development, as demonstrated by the figures which I shall give further on, there should at the least have been as large an increase in both years as is recorded for the first year of prosperity after the panic of 1873, viz, 20 per cent. Without the imposition of this unjust additional tax the Government would then have derived an enormously increased revenue from malt liquors, and American brewing, instead of being in a most deplorable condition, would to-day be as prosperous as all other trades."

BRITISH TAX ON BEER.

"How does the tax on beer in Great Britain compare with the American tax?" Mr. Brand was asked.

"The recent history of British beer taxation presents two very interesting and highly significant facts," he said. "The one is that when Gladstone endeavored to saddle the expense of the Egyptian war upon the brewers, or, as the British papers had it, upon the poor man, he was not only defeated in his object, but had to vacate his seat to make room for Salisbury. To defray the expenses of the present Boer war, the Government, among other taxes, imposed an additional tax of 1 shilling upon malt liquors, the tax then amounting to 6 shillings 8 pence upon a barrel of beer of 36 imperial gallons, equal to 43 American gallons; hence the present British beer tax, with the added war tax, is $1.35 upon the equivalent of an American barrel.

"It is to be considered, however, that the American brewer, although he gets less for his product than his British colleague, pays wages doubly as high as are being paid in Great Britain, and is at a further disadvantage, as compared with the British brewer, in so far as all the raw materials he uses are protected by a high tariff, which naturally increases the cost, while the British brewer has all the benefits of free trade. Furthermore, his economic condition is far more favorable, because the dispensers of his product are not harassed by excessive municipal and State taxes, as is the case in our country."

"What is the nature of the rebate of 7½ per cent now allowed upon the beer tax?"

"The rebate of 7½ per cent represents the losses sustained by the brewer by reason of leakage, the bursting of barrels, and the spoiling of beer, either in transit or in the hands of the dealers. In such cases the brewer not only loses entirely the value of his product, but also the $2 which he paid to the Government in the form of the stamp affixed to the vessels containing the liquid rendered unfit for use. It has been ascertained with almost absolute accuracy that the losses sustained by the brewer in this manner amount to 7½ per cent, and the allowance of this amount as a rebate is purely a matter of justice, and not at all a favor to the brewer, as some are inclined to regard it. A similar allowance is made in all beer-producing countries."

OTIS B. VANFLEET.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the bill (S. 5075) to correct the military record of Otis B. Vanfleet, I present the petition of Otis B. Vanfleet, his affidavit, and the affidavits of James Gregory, E. J. Collison, and S. A. Smith. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, for consideration in connection with that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT TO ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a joint resolution and to ask for its present consideration. It relates to a small matter connected with the District, and there is some reason why the joint resolution should be passed at once.

The joint resolution (S. R. 135) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to employ an additional assistant to the attorney was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are, authorized to employ an additional assistant to the attorney for said District, with compensation at a rate not exceeding $1,600 per annum from the date of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE AND INCREASE OF TRADE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Commerce instructed the chairman of the committee, the junior Senator from Maine, to report certain amendments to the pending shipping bill, so called. The committee directed the amendment to be printed in a bill indicating the amendments reported to-day from the amendment hitherto reported, and the junior Senator from Maine reports it to the Senate and asks the following order in relation to the bill:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies, in addition to the usual number, of Senate bill No. 727, known as the shipping bill, with the amendments proposed by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST. I should like to have the amendments read as they stand now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed by to-morrow morning and on every Senator's desk.

Mr. VEST. I should like to hear them this morning for certain reasons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read only the last amendments, those in large letters.

The Secretary read as follows:

In section 1, page 2, line 1, after the words "nineteen hundred," insert "and one;" so as to read:

"That from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1901, there shall be paid, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the owner or owners of any vessel duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens corporations created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), and being at the time of entry engaged in the foreign trade of the United States, which shall be entered in the United States from a foreign port, or from any port belonging to the United States, the trade between which and the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coast ports of the United States shall happen not to be confined to vessels of the United States, compensation as hereinafter provided; that is to say."

In section 1, page 3, line 15, after the word "her," insert "capacity for carrying commercial cargo," striking out all from the word "her" to the word "aforesaid," in line 9, on page 4; so as to make the amendment read:

No vessel shall be entitled to the full compensation under this clause unless she shall have cleared from a port of the United States with cargo to the amount of 50 per cent of her capacity for carrying commercial cargo; and any shortage in the amount of cargo required and defined as aforesaid shall diminish the amount of the compensation in this paragraph provided for in the proportion that such shortage bears to the total cargo or its equivalent so required.

In section 1, page 7, line 6, after the word "year," insert:

And in case the said Atlantic Ocean trade shall not require the whole amount of the said 70 per cent and the said Pacific Ocean trade shall require, in respect of the vessels engaged in said Pacific Ocean trade, the expenditure of more than the said 30 per cent of said $9,000,000 in any such year, there may be expended, pursuant to the provisions of this act, any sum within the said $9,000,000 remaining and not earned, as aforesaid, in respect of the vessels in the Atlantic Ocean trade.

In section 8, page 12, line 19, after the word "vessel," insert "while;" and in line 24, after the word "one," insert "and seven," striking out the words "six, nine, and ten;" so as to read:

(c) A vessel while employed in the coasting trade, a vessel on a voyage during any part of which she shall have carried passengers or cargo which, under the laws of the United States, could not lawfully have been carried by a foreign vessel, or a vessel employed in the fisheries, except as provided in sections 1 and 7 of this act.

In section 10, strike out from page 14, line 8, to page 16, line 7, inclusive, and insert:

(a) To such foreign-built steamships as were on the 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, engaged in an established freight or passenger business, or both, from a port of the United States, and as have received, or shall be fit to receive, the Class A1 in the Record of American and Foreign Shipping, or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit, and as were also on the said 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, actually owned by and then really representing the capital of a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens corporations created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), or a foreign corporation or association of which not less than a majority of the capital stock thereof was on the 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, actually owned by and really representing the capital of a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens corporations created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), upon such American owner or owners of such majority interest obtaining a full and complete transfer of and title to such steamships from the foreign corporation or association owning the same, and proving to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that all the foregoing stated requirements have been complied with.

(b) To such foreign-built steamships as shall have been under contract for construction and duly authenticated copies of said contract or contracts therefor shall have been filed with the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, and which contract or contracts shall have been in due course carried into execution and either completed or in the course of performance on or before the 1st day of January, A. D. 1900, and which steamship shall have been already completed under any such contract or contracts or shall, when built as provided for in this act and the registry requested, receive, or be fit to receive, the Class A1 in the Record of American and Foreign Shipping, or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit, such vessels having been actually and originally contracted for on or before the said 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens corporations created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), who shall have been such since the 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, or by a foreign corporation or association of which not less than a majority of the shares of the capital thereof shall have been actually owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens corporations created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), and really representing American capital on the said 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, and shall have continued to be so owned until.

On page 21, line 19, at the end of section 10, insert:

All fittings and machinery forming a part of the construction of vessels built in the United States under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, provided they can be obtained in this country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the order printing the bill with these amendments? Without objection, the order is made.

MESSENGER FOR OFFICIAL REPORTERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I report favorably, with an amendment, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, a resolution which was referred to that committee. I ask that it be read, and I also ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. ALLISON was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Official Reporters of the Senate, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said Official Reporters, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said Official Reporters, and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law, said appointment to date from the beginning of the present session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words at the end of the resolution, "said appointment to date from the beginning of the present session."

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DEBOE introduced a bill (S. 5077) to divide Kentucky into two judicial districts and to provide officials therefor and to fix the times and places of holding courts therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 5078) granting a pension to Charles Sabin Taft; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5079) for the relief of William H. Crawford; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5080) granting an increase of pension to James T. Chalfant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 5081) granting a pension to J. B. Whiting; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 5082) to provide for the holding of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 5083) granting an increase of pension to Charles Ambrook; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5084) granting a pension to Charles J. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee or Pensions.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 5085) to correct the military record of H. A. White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 5086) for the relief of the members of the First, Second, and Third Marine Corps, organized under the order of Maj. Gen. John C. Frémont, dated September 12, 1861, and also for the relief of the legal representatives of the deceased members of the said Marine Corps, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT ON FOREIGN LABOR LAWS.

Mr. KYLE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That from the plates of the Bulletins of the Department of Labor there shall be printed and bound in cloth, as a separate document, with introduction and index, 8,000 copies of a Report on Foreign Labor Laws, 1,000 copies for the Senate, 2,000 copies for the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for the Department of Labor.

FRANK E. KELLOGG.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4400) for the relief of Frank E. Kellogg, collector of the Sixth internal-revenue district of Missouri. It is a House bill, reported favorably by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and relieves the beneficiary from responsibility for some stamps that were destroyed in the office without any fault of his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read in full to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to release and discharge Frank E. Kellogg, collector of the Sixth internal-revenue district of the State of Missouri, from any liability he may be under to the United States by reason of the alleged loss of a certain book, No. 1929, containing retail liquor dealers' internal-revenue special-tax stamps of the value of $2,331.25, and the Auditor for the Treasury Department is hereby authorized to make the necessary entries upon his books showing the discharge of said Kellogg from such liability: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall first be satisfied that said loss really occurred, and that no damage has been or will be sustained by the United States by such release: And provided further, That the said Kellogg shall first execute a bond of indemnity to the United States, with sufficient surety, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the bill is all right, and if the report is not long I ask that the report may be inserted in the RECORD without reading. I want the RECORD to show why it is that we give this relief.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island, who reported the bill——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is no objection to having the report put in the RECORD?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island accompanied it with any report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I know about the case; I know it is all right; but I want the RECORD to show why it is passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Rhode Island did not present a written report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with an amendment the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 10, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 7, 1900.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 7, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire indefinitely, on account of sickness.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on December 6, immediately after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order to consider in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole, the bill (H. R. 3717) "making oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State and Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine." (Order made June 5, 1900, and changed on December 6 to Friday, December 7, 1900.)

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of these orders, the Clerk will report the bill to the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese, or any substance in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, transported into any State or Territory, and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon the arrival within the limits of such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted into the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles or substances had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in a separate and distinct form and in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter.

SEC. 2. That after the passage of this act the tax upon oleomargarine, as prescribed in section 8 of the act approved August 2, 1886, and entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not colored in imitation of butter; but when colored in imitation of butter the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 10 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of said act.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, in view of the brief time allowed to consider this bill—only one day—and the urgent demand of many gentlemen to occupy time, I wish to ask unanimous consent for general leave to print for ten days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for general leave to print upon this bill—for what length of time?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. For ten days, confined to the subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. For ten days, the debate to be confined to the subject-matter of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House comes here with a report approved by the majority of the Committee on Agriculture. It is but fair to say, however, that seven members of that committee, including the chairman, dissent and prefer to report a substitute bill of an entirely different character.

The SPEAKER. Will the House please be in order, and gentlemen take their seats?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Connecticut proceeds, I desire to inquire if there has been any attempt to agree upon the time when debate shall conclude and a vote be taken?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Not yet; but of course there will be an equal division of time.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. There are a good many gentlemen on this side, and doubtless on the other side, inquiring when the vote will be taken, and, if there has been any time agreed upon, I should like to be able to answer the question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if it is not possible to effect an agreement at this time, so that members may know about when the vote is to be taken. A number have asked me, and some of them want to stay here and hear the discussion, while others do not, but want to be here when the vote is taken.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. There are many gentlemen here who are anxious to know when the vote is to be taken.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is what I say.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. And if it is possible to agree on a time, or if it is expected that an attempt to reach an agreement will be made, that had better be done in the beginning.

Mr. GROUT. It has been thought it would be well enough to let the debate run for a time and then make some arrangement about closing the debate.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. The only trouble is this: We should dislike to have the debate proceed for two or three hours and then have a motion made for the previous question.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, there will be no snap judgment with reference to this bill; none whatever.

Mr. PAYNE. It strikes me it would be much easier to agree upon a limitation of debate before the debate begins than to have the debate proceed without such an understanding.

Mr. GROUT. Very well; if the gentleman so desires, an understanding can probably be reached now as to when the vote shall be taken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest that the general debate run until half past 4 o'clock, that then the debate under the five-minute rule proceed until half past 5 o'clock, at which time a vote be taken. That is only my suggestion. I am willing, of course, to abide by the wish of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I suggest that the vote be taken at 5 o'clock.

Mr. GROUT. It is expected that there will be two roll calls before this matter can be disposed of. One will be upon the bill which I understand is to be proposed as a substitute, and then the friends of the bill will want a roll call on the bill itself. Now, if we do not begin to vote until 5 o'clock, it will be half past 6 o'clock or 7 o'clock before the session closes.

Mr. PAYNE. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. GROUT. I would suggest half past 4 as the time for the conclusion of the debate, thus allowing time for the votes to be taken and still permitting us to close the session at a seasonable hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it proposed to limit the general debate on this bill to four hours and a half?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer that question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That arrangement would leave only two hours and a quarter on each side; and this is a very important bill.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman will be able to say a great deal in a small space of time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But there are other gentlemen to be considered besides myself.

Mr. GROUT. Doubtless they can do the same thing.

The SPEAKER. Is there any proposition submitted to the House?

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that the debate close and a vote be taken at half past 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's proposition draws no distinction between the general debate and the five-minute debate.

Mr. GROUT. This is a bill of but two sections. Debate under the five-minute rule amounts to practically nothing on such a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this bill close at half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

Mr. GROUT. Then let the debate run on a while.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest that the general debate run until 4 o'clock, that then the five-minute debate begin and run on until 5 o'clock, at which time the vote shall be taken.

Mr. GROUT. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill terminate at 4 o'clock, at which time the debate under the five-minute rule shall begin, and that the vote be taken at 5 o'clock.

Mr. GROUT. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] objects. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House comes here with a report approved by a majority of the Committee on Agriculture. It is fair to say, however, that seven members of that committee, including the chairman, dissent and prefer to report a substitute bill of an entirely different character.

The bill favored by the majority, and with which most of the members of the House are doubtless more or less familiar, is the Grout bill, without any change or amendment whatever. Substantially all there is of great importance in the bill is the reduction of the internal-revenue tax upon uncolored oleomargarine to the nominal rate of one-fourth cent per pound and an increase of the tax upon oleo colored in the semblance of butter to 10 cents per pound.

This increased taxation is believed by the majority of your committee to be justifiable and indispensable for the protection of the great dairy interests of the country from disastrous competition with a cheap and fraudulent article, illegally sold, and represented to be the pure product of the farm and dairy.

The clandestine sale of imitation butter has rapidly increased during recent years, and has now reached the danger point when more drastic restrictive measures are required. This illegitimate traffic is backed and upheld by interests and influences apparently beyond the power of State governments to successfully regulate and control.

Moreover, the present Federal laws are obviously inadequate to remedy or mitigate the evil, and additional national restrictive legislation is demanded by the farmers and producers of dairy butter as imperatively and immediately necessary.

The report accompanying the bill is not overdrawn and fairly sets forth indisputable facts. In this report the majority say:

We are of the opinion that the people have ample cause for alarm at the tremendous illegal growth of the oleomargarine traffic in this country during the past few years, which now appears to have reached proportions beyond the power of the States to successfully regulate or control, and the present Federal laws are apparently altogether inadequate for the emergency.

After carefully weighing the evidence and suggestions offered for remedies for the regulation of this traffic, we are constrained to hold that the provisions of H. R. 3717 offer the best practical solution of the difficulty.

We believe that the States should be protected in their rights to regulate their internal affairs to the fullest extent in relation to articles of food which have been adjudged adulterated or of a deceitful character, and we do not think that the interstate-commerce law of the Government should protect a deceitful imitation from the jurisdiction of the State's laws, even if the article in question is in the original package and is shipped from an outsider into the State in such package.

We find that the very foundation and cause of the enormous amount of fraud and illegal selling of oleomargarine is in the great profits which are derived from the sale of the imitation article because of its absolute counterfeit of butter, which enables unscrupulous dealers to impose upon unsuspecting customers. These profits are sufficiently large to cause the retailer to run the chances of detection and prosecution, and they are further emboldened and encouraged through the guaranties of the manufacturers of protection against prosecutions under the State laws.

Thirty-two States, having four-fifths of the entire population of the United States, absolutely forbid the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored to resemble butter. These laws have been upheld in the higher courts without a single exception, and the question has twice been passed upon favorably by the Supreme Court of the United States. Therefore the policy of a very large majority of our people is plainly against the sale of the article in such counterfeit form.

The tax of 10 cents per pound upon oleomargarine colored to resemble butter will not deprive the manufacturers and dealers or consumers of any great amount of legal right they now possess. Four-fifths of the colored article made is sold illegally now, as indicated by the reports of the Treasury Department, and the only effect of this tax, even were it prohibitive upon this class of oleomargarine, would be to prevent the manufacture of an article the sale of which is contrary to the laws of thirty-two States of the Union.

This tax will bring the cost of the colored article up to a figure that will take from it the possibility for the large profits which have been the incentive to violate the laws of the State and Government and defraud innocent purchasers, while the reduction of the tax on oleomargarine in its natural color from 2 cents to one-fourth cent per pound will make it possible for the man who really desires to consume oleomargarine to procure it at a much lower cost than heretofore, the only difference being that it will not contain coloring matter, which not even the opponents of this measure claim contributes anything to its palatableness or nutritive value.

We believe the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine will continue under this measure and that those who desire a cheap substitute for butter will purchase the uncolored article. The only difference is that the counterfeit article, colored in imitation of butter, will no longer be accessible to hotel keepers, restaurant keepers, and boarding-house proprietors at such prices as will be an inducement for them to deceive the guests, as is now, we believe, absolutely universal where it is served, and thus another class of consumers who have been subjected to imposition for more than twenty years will be able to know whether they are eating butter fat or hog fat when they spread their bread. If colored oleomargarine is served, it will be because it is better and not because it is cheaper than butter.

Serious conditions require drastic measures, and it certainly appears from the testimony of those representing the producers of butter, as well as from the admissions of the witnesses for the other side, that those who are engaged in this oleomargarine traffic have absolutely no regard for State laws, and regard the public as their legitimate victim, in whose behalf they resent the interference of the General Government. The continued existence of such a condition we can not but believe furnishes a demoralizing example to our people in trade, who are being tutored by this oleomargarine interest in the art of evasion and defiance of the legally constituted authorities.

The Agricultural Committee had the Grout bill under consideration for nearly three months. Full and exhaustive hearings were given to all comers, and to every interest directly affected by the proposed legislation.

Representatives of the National Dairymen's Union and its allied organizations, with middlemen representing legitimate dealers in dairy products, have been heard in behalf of the bill. Representatives of the manufacturers of oleomargarine, of stock growers, of producers of cotton-seed oil and other affected interests, have appeared in opposition.

The broad sunlight and X-rays of inquiry have been turned on in investigating and endeavoring to find a solution of a difficult and embarrassing problem. Much time has been given and great patience exercised, with the result that the majority of your committee are of the opinion that the best hope of improving and protecting the great dairy industry rests in enacting the Grout bill into law.

It is claimed by the manufacturers of oleomargarine that its production is a legitimate business; that oleo is a wholesome food, honestly made, and sold by the manufacturers for what it is, without deception. This may be true of the larger manufacturers, but it is not always the fact with some manufacturing firms, for I have before me the engraved letter head of a prominent manufacturer, reading, in bold characters, "Union Dairy Company, manufacturers of choice oleomargarine," and like misleading devices are used by other manufacturers and many dealers, all indicating an intention of misleading and deceiving prospective purchasers and consumers of dairy butter.

Middlemen and retailers constantly and unscrupulously exhibit and fraudulently sell to an unsuspecting public oleomargarine put up in the form of creamery print butter with wrappers conspicuously labeled as "Clover Hill Creamery," "Crystal Spring Dairy," etc.

It is a notorious fact, of which many of us have personal knowledge, that oleo, sometimes called "butterine," is put up in this manner and sold even in the markets of Washington, almost within the shadow of the Capitol.

The imposition is still more apparent and reprehensible when the purchaser, believing he is buying butter, frequently pays 25 cents or more per pound, or a price approximating the cost of pure creamery butter.

It was shown at the committee hearings that the best quality of oleomargarine, put up and packed ready for market, only costs about 10 cents per pound, including the revenue tax of 2 cents. The statement made by Secretary Gage regarding oleomargarine also shows conclusively that the average cost of the finished product is only slightly in excess of 8 cents a pound before the revenue tax is paid; yet consumers are constantly compelled to pay from 20 cents upward per pound. With such a margin of profit, who shall say that a 10-cent tax will prevent the continued manufacture and sale of oleomargarine?

In connection with this I quote from the official reply of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to the inquiry of Congress:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1900.

SIR: In compliance with your instructions in responding to House resolution of May 8, 1900, I have the honor to submit herewith data therein called for.

The original forms in which this information is submitted to this office are not only very large in bulk, but voluminous in number, and can not very well be transmitted; besides, they are a part of the records of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, and should not, therefore, leave the custody of the Treasury Department.

The data submitted discloses the kinds of material used, the amount of each ingredient, and the per cent that each bears to the total amount of oleomargarine produced in the country for the periods named, and it is believed furnishes all the information intended to be called for in the resolution.

Very respectfully,

G. W. WILSON, Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Quantities and kinds of ingredients used in the production of oleomargarine in the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899; also the percentage each ingredient bears to the whole quantity.

Material.	Pounds.	Percentage each ingredient bears to the whole.
Neutral lard	31,297,251	34.27
Oleo oil	24,491,769	26.82
Cotton-seed oil	4,357,514	4.77
Sesame	486,310	.53
Coloring matter	148,970	.16
Sugar	110,164	.12
Glycerin	8,963	.01
Stearin	5,890	.007
Glucose	2,550	.003
Milk	14,200,576	15.55
Salt	6,773,670	7.42
Butter oil	4,342,904	4.76
Butter	1,568,319	1.72
Cream	3,527,410	3.86
Total	91,322,260	100

Or, more definitely stated, the quantity, character, and value of ingredients used in the production of oleomargarine for the time specified above are as follows:

Material.	Pounds.	Value per pound.	Total value.
		Cents.
Neutral lard	31,297,251	8	$2,503,780.08
Oleo oil	24,491,769	9	2,144,917.69
Cotton-seed oil	8,700,418	6	522,025.08
Sesame oil	486,310	10	4,863.10
Coloring matter	148,970	20	29,296.00
Sugar	100,164	4	4,406.50
Glycerin	8,963	10	896.30
Stearin	5,890	8	459.60
Glucose	2,550	3	76.50
Milk	14,250,576	1	142,005.76
Salt	6,772,670	1	67,726.70
Butter	1,568,319	20	313,663.80
Cream	3,527,410	5	176,370.50
Butter oil	4,342,000	6	260,520.00

Average value per pound of materials, 7.00 cents.
Average cost of packages (extreme), one-half cent per pound.
Highest possible cost all expenses connected with manufacturing, 1 cent per pound.
Internal-revenue tax, per pound, 2 cents.
Total cost to manufacturer of finished product, average, 10.59 cents.
Finished product quoted at from 11½ cents for lowest grade to 18 cents for highest quality, averaging, probably, 14 cents per pound.

We all know with what persistence information regarding the quality, character, and value of oleomargarine was withheld and refused, both by the manufacturers and by the Internal-Revenue Office—information that was only obtained from the Bureau in response to an imperative request of the House of Representatives.

When this disclosure was made it became perfectly evident why exact information was withheld. We now, for the first time, have exact knowledge of from just what oleomargarine is made, as well as of what it costs to produce the finished product.

The Secretary's report also makes plain the fact that an effort was deliberately made to hoodwink and mislead the gentlemen representing the cotton-growing States by falsely representing that a very large percentage of cotton-seed oil was used in the manufacture of this substitute for butter, while the Bureau report reveals the fact that in the manufacture of oleomargarine a little more than 10 per cent of cotton-seed oil and of so-called butter oil made from cotton seed was used; or, as another surprising disclosure reveals, less than two-thirds of the percentage of milk and butter consumed in disguising this fraud and assisting in giving the semblance, color, and flavor of dairy butter.

I commend this fact to the consideration of Southern members who have been bunkoed into the belief that much larger quantities of cotton-seed oil are used and that this consumption of a Southern product is of great importance to the South Atlantic and Gulf States.

That this fact is becoming recognized in the South is shown by the comments of some of the Southern papers. I quote from one of these, the Jacksonville Times-Union, of Florida:

The cotton-seed oil men of the South who defended the oleomargarine manufacturers to secure a market for their product now learn that little clean vegetable oil is needed in the composition of the sham butter and that they have pulled the chestnuts out of the fire again for others to eat. Few amateurs can grasp the full meaning of protection for revenue only in the current politics of a faithless generation.

It now appears that the entire aggregate amount of cotton-seed oil used in the manufacture of oleomargarine is only about 2 per cent of the total production of that oil. This small percentage is not likely to be materially reduced by the passage of this bill, for the manufacture and consumption of oleomargarine, both colored and uncolored, will still continue, and even if honestly sold the quantity produced and sold is likely to rather increase than diminish.

The following letter from W. L. Taber, of the Producers' Price-Current, fairly indicates the effect of the proposed legislation:

NEW YORK, May 21, 1900.

DEAR SIR: In relation to our note in Producers' Price-Current of last Saturday relative to the oleo agitation in Pennsylvania, and the consequent increased demand from that source, I would like to say, that since this agitation began there has been a marked increase in the consumption of butter in Pennsylvania. The result of this is that Philadelphia merchants have been unable to secure sufficient supplies at home and have been large buyers on this market. To just what extent I can not say, but our receivers report constant sales to them, and this demand has been a potent factor in shaping the course of our market, during the past week at least. One receiver mentions having shipped 1,000 tubs within two weeks to Philadelphia, and others have shared largely in the trade.

I thought possibly this information might interest you in connection with the present investigation of the subject of oleo legislation by the Agricultural Committee.

Very truly, yours,

W. L. TABER,
Reporter of the Butter Market for the Producers' Price-Current.

Hon. E. STEVENS HENRY,
Agricultural Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

It is alleged that the passage of this bill will destroy a great industry and prevent the further manufacture of oleomargarine. The fallacy of this claim is evident when we remember that 32 States of the Union now have laws prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter, namely (in order of population, census of 1890):

	Population.		Population.
New York	5,997,853	South Carolina	1,151,149
Pennsylvania	5,258,014	Nebraska	1,058,910
Illinois	3,826,351	Maryland	1,042,390
Ohio	3,672,316	West Virginia	762,794
Missouri	2,679,184	Connecticut	746,253
Massachusetts	2,238,943	Maine	661,086
Michigan	2,093,889	Colorado	412,198
Iowa	1,911,896	New Hampshire	376,530
Kentucky	1,858,635	Washington	349,390
Georgia	1,837,353	Oregon	313,767
Tennessee	1,766,518	Vermont	332,442
Wisconsin	1,686,880	South Dakota	328,808
Virginia	1,655,980	Utah	207,905
Alabama	1,513,017	North Dakota	182,711
New Jersey	1,444,933	Delaware	168,493
Minnesota	1,301,826
California	1,208,130	Total population	50,117,440

The States and Territories which have not yet passed laws prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter are, with populations:

	Population.		Population.
Texas	2,235,523	New Mexico	153,593
Indiana	2,192,404	Montana	132,156
North Carolina	1,617,947	Idaho	84,385
Kansas	1,427,096	Oklahoma	61,834
Mississippi	1,289,700	Wyoming	60,705
Arkansas	1,128,179	Arizona	59,620
Louisiana	1,118,587	Nevada	45,761
Florida	321,422
Rhode Island	345,506	Total population	12,604,790
District of Columbia	230,392

These laws, while varying in form, express the opinion of the law-making representatives of the 60,000,000 people now living in the States named; and for your information I have summarized these laws, as follows:

ALABAMA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved February 18, 1895.)

No article which is in imitation of pure yellow butter, and is not made wholly from pure milk and cream, shall be manufactured, sold, or used in any public eating place, hospital, or penal institution, etc.; but oleomargarine, free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted. It must be stamped with its name.

ARIZONA.

No dairy laws.

ARKANSAS—MUST BE LABELED.

(Approved April 2, 1885.)

Substitutes for butter, whether in wholesale or retail packages, shall be plainly labeled "Adulterated butter," "Oleomargarine," or such other names as shall properly describe them. In hotels, etc., dishes containing said articles must be plainly marked in same manner.

CALIFORNIA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 4, 1897.)

Imitation butter and cheese is defined as any article not produced from pure milk or cream, salt, rennet, and harmless coloring matter, which is in semblance of butter or cheese and designed as a substitute for such. Shall not be colored to imitate butter or cheese, and must be in such form as will advise consumer of its real character. Every package must be plainly marked "Substitute for butter" or "Substitute for cheese" and accompanied by a statement giving name of manufacturer, ingredients, etc., a copy of which must be given to each purchaser, with verbal notice, at the time of sale, in connection with which words like 'creamery," "dairy," etc., are prohibited. Patrons of eating places shall be notified if substitutes of butter or cheese are used. Prohibited in State charitable institutions.

COLORADO—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 1, 1895.)

All articles not produced from pure milk or cream, in imitation of pure cheese or yellow butter, are prohibited; but oleomargarine and filled cheese are permitted if free from color or other ingredient to cause them to look like butter or cheese. They must be made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of their real character. Cheese containing any foreign fats, oleaginous substances, rancid butter, etc., shall be branded "imitation cheese."

CONNECTICUT—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Public Acts, 1895.)

Imitation butter, defined as any article resembling butter in appearance and not made wholly, salt and coloring matter excepted, from cow's milk, is prohibited; but oleomargarine or imitation butter, free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner aa will advise consumer of its real chaaacter, is permitted. Words like "butter," "dairy," etc., shall not form a part of its name or appear on its package. Imitation butter shall be sold only in labeled packages, or registered places which display signs, and purchasers shall be informed orally of the character of the article at the time of sale. Use of imitation butter in public eating places, bakeries, etc., must be made known by signs.

DELAWARE—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Passed May 8, 1895.)

The manufacture or sale of any article not produced from unadulterated milk or cream, which is in imitation of pure yellow butter or designed to take the place of pure cheese, is prohibited; but oleomargarine is permitted if in a distinct form, free from butter color, and sold in such manner as to show its real character; it shall be plainly marked "Oleomargarine."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—BRANDING LAW.

(Approved March 2, 1895.)

Substances in semblance of butter or cheese, not made exclusively of milk or cream, but with the addition of melted butter or any oil, shall be plainly branded on each package "Oleomargarine," and a label, similarly printed, must accompany each retail sale.

FLORIDA—MUST NOTIFY GUESTS.

(Approved February 17, 1891.)

The sale of any spurious preparation, purporting to be butter, is prohibited. Guests at hotels, etc., must be notified if oleomargarine or other spurious butter is used.

GEORGIA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved December 16, 1895.)

Imitation butter and cheese are defined as any article not produced from pure milk or cream—salt, rennet, and coloring matter excepted—in semblance of butter or cheese and designed to be used as a substitute for either. Shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese. Every package must be plainly marked "Substitute for butter" or "Substitute for cheese," and each sale shall be accompanied by verbal notice and by a printed statement that the article is an imitation, the statement giving also the name of the producer. The use of these imitations in eating places, bakeries, etc., must be made known by signs.

IDAHO—BRANDING REQUIRED.

(Approved January 27, 1885.)

Brand required for sale of oleomargarine or butterine, imitation butter, or mixture imitating butter. These shall not be sold as butter.

ILLINOIS—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved June 14, 1897.)

Imitation butter is defined as any article not produced from pure milk or cream—salt, rennet, and coloring matter excepted—in semblance of butter and designed to be used as a substitute for it. Shall not be colored to resemble butter. All packages must be plainly branded "Oleomargarine," "Butterine," "Substitute for butter," or "Imitation butter." Each sale shall be accompanied by notice to the purchaser that the substitute is imitation butter.

INDIANA—LABEL LAW.

Butter other than that made from pure milk, when sold or used in hotels, etc., must be plainly labeled "Oleomargarine."

IOWA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Passed in 1893.)

Imitation butter or cheese is defined as an article not produced from pure milk or cream—salt, rennet, and coloring matter excepted—in semblance of butter or cheese and designed to be sold as a substitute for either of them. Shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese. Every package shall be plainly marked "Substitute for butter" or "Substitute for cheese," and each sale shall be accompanied by a verbal notice and a printed statement that the article is an imitation, the statement giving also the address of the maker. The use of these imitations in hotels, bakeries, etc., must be made known by signs.

KANSAS.

No law.

KENTUCKY—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Act of 1898.)

Oleomargarine, butterine, or kindred compounds, made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the customer of its real character, and free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, is permitted.

LOUISIANA—LABEL LAW.

(Approved July 6, 1888.)

Such substances as oleomargarine, butterine, bogus butter, etc., shall be plainly labeled to indicate their composition. They shall not be sold as butter.

MAINE—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 27, 1895.)

Any article in imitation of yellow butter or cheese and not made exclusively of milk or cream is prohibited.

MARYLAND—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Passed in 1888.)

The manufacture, sale, or use in public eating places of any article in imitation of and designed to take the place of pure butter or cheese, and not made wholly from milk or cream, is prohibited. Mixtures of any animal fats or animal or vegetable oils with milk, cream, or butter shall be uncolored and marked with names and percentages of adulterants, and this information shall be given to purchasers.

MASSACHUSETTS—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved June 11, 1891.)

An article made wholly or partly out of any fat or oil, etc., not from pure cream, and which is in imitation of yellow butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine, free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted. It shall not be sold as butter, nor shall words like "dairy," "creamery," etc., or the name of any breed of dairy cattle, be used in connection with it. All packages exposed for sale must be plainly marked "Oleomargarine," and labels similarly marked must accompany retail sales. Stores where it is sold and wagons used for delivery must display signs, and hotels, etc., using it must notify guests. Persons selling oleomargarine must be registered and conveyors licensed.

MICHIGAN—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 15, 1897.)

Any article not made wholly from milk or cream, and containing melted butter, fats, or oils not produced from milk, and which is in imitation of pure butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine, free from color or any ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted; its sale as butter is prohibited; signs must be displayed where it is sold or used, and its original packages must be plainly marked "Oleomargarine" if the article contains suet or tallow, or "Butterine" if it contains lard; retail sales shall be made from a package so marked, and a label similarly printed and bearing the name of the manufacturer shall be delivered with each sale; shall not be used in any public institution. (N. B.—The above law was invalidated in 1897 by the supreme court because of the fact that the enacting clause was omitted when it passed the senate.)

MINNESOTA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved 1899.)

This law prohibits the sale of oleomargarine made in imitation of butter, and took the place of the pink law of 1891.

MISSISSIPPI—LABEL LAW.

(Approved March 9, 1882.)

Packages of oleomargarine or similarly manufactured butters shall be plainly labeled with the correct name of their contents, and the product shall be sold by that name. A privilege tax of $5 is imposed upon persons selling the articles named.

MISSOURI—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 19, 1895.)

Imitation butter is defined as every article not produced wholly from pure milk or cream, made in semblance of and designed to be used as a substitute for pure butter; it shall not be sold as butter; shall not be colored to resemble butter unless it is to be sold outside the State; original packages shall be plainly stamped "Substitute for butter;" in hotels, etc., vessels in which it is served must be marked "Oleomargarine" or "Impure butter."

MONTANA—TAXED 10 CENTS A POUND.

(Penal code of 1895.)

Any article in semblance of butter or cheese and not made wholly from milk or cream must be plainly labeled "Oleomargarine" or "Imitation cheese," and a printed label bearing the same word or words must be delivered to the purchaser with retail sales. Places where these articles are sold or used must display signs, and information as to their character be given if requested. Dealers must pay a license of 10 cents a pound on each pound sold.

NEVADA—BRANDING LAW.

(Approved February 14, 1881.)

Any article in semblance of butter, but not made exclusively of milk or cream, or containing melted butter, shall be in packages plainly marked "Oleomargarine."

NEBRASKA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 16, 1895.)

Imitation butter and cheese are defined as any article made in semblance of and designed to be used as a substitute for pure butter or cheese and not produced wholly from pure milk or cream, salt, rennet, and harmless coloring matter. These articles, including any having melted butter added to them, shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese; shall be plainly marked "Imitation butter," or "Imitation cheese;" verbal and printed information of the character of the articles, and address of the maker, shall be given at time of sale; signs shall be displayed in public eating places where used.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 29, 1895.)

Any article not made wholly from unadulterated milk or cream, which is in imitation of pure yellow butter or cheese, is prohibited, unless in packages plainly marked "Adulterated butter," "Oleomargarine," or "Imitation cheese." A label printed with the words on the original package shall be delivered with each retail sale. Oleomargarine, free from color or ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted. Notice of the use of substitutes for butter in hotels, etc., shall be given to patrons.

NEW JERSEY—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 22, 1886.)

Any article made wholly or partly out of any fat, oil, etc., not from pure milk or cream, artificially colored in imitation of pure yellow butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine and imitation cheese are permitted, if free from artificial color and in original package encircled by a wide black band bearing the name of the maker and having the name of the contents plainly branded on them with a hot iron. Retail sales shall be accompanied by a printed card on which the name of the substance and the address of the maker are plainly printed, and the customer shall be orally informed of the character of the article at the time of sale.

NEW MEXICO.

No law.

NEW YORK—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 10, 1893.)

The terms oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese means any article in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively from unadulterated milk, or having any oil, lard, melted butter, etc., as a component part. Imitation butter: The manufacture of oleomargarine or any article in imitation of butter wholly or partly from fats or oils not produced from milk, or the sale or the use in hotels, etc., of such articles, is prohibited. No article intended as an imitation of butter and containing oils, fats, etc., not from milk, or melted butter in any condition, shall be colored yellow.

NORTH CAROLINA—LABOR LAW.

(Ratified February 28, 1895.)

Oleomargarine and butterine are defined as articles manufactured in imitation of butter, and which are composed of no ingredient or ingredients in combination with butter. Original packages shall be labeled with chemical ingredients and their proportions.

NORTH DAKOTA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Laws of 1899.)

Law prohibits manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter.

OHIO—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved May 16, 1894.)

WYOMING.

No dairy laws.

The following official table, prepared by the Department of Agriculture, indicates the remarkable increase in the production of oleomargarine, and also makes plain the fact that only about 3 per cent of the quantity annually manufactured is exported, and Professor Pierson, assistant chief of the Dairy Division, pertinently remarks, "These figures furnish strong evidence that it is sold not only for use as butter, but as butter itself:"

[a] Two cents per pound. [b] Without tax.

In my own State of Connecticut we have a very efficient dairy commission, and the laws are effectively enforced, with the result that while the sale of colored oleo is prohibited, considerable quantities of uncolored are sold and used. This is undoubtedly the case in other States where similar laws are enforced.

I have in my hands several bills of sale of uncolored oleomargarine, given by a Chicago manufacturer, being actual sales made to customers. This manufacturer also claims to have agencies in Philadelphia, Boston, Washington, Richmond, and other large cities, all indicating that unless there is a considerable and regular demand for the uncolored article these agencies would not be established and maintained.

I read from a bill rendered, without giving the purchaser's name:

CHICAGO, January 25, 1900.

William J. Moxley, manufacturer of fine butterine.

Two 56-pound packages uncolored oleomargarine prints, 112 pounds, at 13 cents a pound, $14.56.

It will be observed that the price paid, 13 cents per pound, is much lower than the usual market price of the colored article, enabling the retailer to sell with a fair profit at from 16 to 18 cents a pound.

With such facts in evidence, who shall say that by the prevention of the fraudulent sale of colored oleo at prices nearly approximating the cost of butter, together with a reduction in the cost of the uncolored article of nearly 2 cents per pound, enabling its sale at a price not exceeding 15 cents per pound, the laboring man or another who chooses or is forced to use oleomargarine in place of butter will not be benefited?

Certainly, none can deny that the great consuming public should be protected from the grasp of unscrupulous manufacturers and trusts, and if a combination of beef and hog fats, cotton-seed oil, and other waste or refuse products is to be made, colored and sold as a substitute for farmer's butter, then the manufacture and sale should be conducted openly and honestly rather than secretly and fraudulently.

The present Congress has been in session more than six months. Many important legislative measures have been enacted into laws, benefiting the financial, commercial, and manufacturing interests of the country, while very little has been done for agriculture. Why not now do something for the farmers? The passage of the Grout bill is asked for, and will be approved, not only by the farming and dairy interests, but by all lovers of fair play, fair trade, and honest dealing. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. How much more time have I?

The SPEAKER. Forty minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I yield the control of the time of the majority, except this hour, to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand this matter. The gentleman can reserve the remainder of his hour, but he can not cut off gentlemen on the other side from occupying their first hour.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I transfer the control of the bill to the gentleman from Vermont, reserving the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. Nothing can be done now, except that the gentleman can reserve the remainder of his time; and the Chair must recognize some one opposed to the bill.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. All right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to discuss at length or in detail this proposed legislation, but simply to state to the House in a general way the position of the minority in regard to it, and I shall leave to my colleagues of the minority of the Agricultural Committee the task of explaining in detail the substitute bill which we shall offer in lieu of the Grout bill, and the legal and constitutional questions involved.

On one point, however, first of all, the minority wish to be thoroughly understood—i. e., they are just as sincere and just as earnest in their wish and their determination to prevent the fraud now practiced, not by the manufacturers, mark you, but by the retail butter dealers, in the sale of oleomargarine as self-respecting men can be, and they believe the substitute bill which will be offered by them at the proper time will reduce the possibility of this fraud to a minimum.

In examining this proposed legislation the first question which naturally arose was, Is oleomargarine a wholesome food product? On this point I wish to read the testimony of many well-known chemists and scientific men, and I ask the close attention of the House to the character of this testimony, because I have found many members in absolute ignorance on this point, and many with the idea that it was a vile, filthy, and unwholesome stuff.

Prof. S. C. Caldwell, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., says:

While not equal to fine butter in respect to flavor, it nevertheless contains all the essential ingredients of butter, and since it contains a smaller proportion of volatile fats than is found in genuine butter, it is, in my opinion, less liable to become rancid. It can not enter into competition with fine butter, but so far as it may serve to drive poor butter out of the market, its manufacture will be a public benefit.

I have also the testimony of Prof. C. F. Chandler, professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York; Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania; Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey; Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station and professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College, New Haven; Prof. C. A. Goessmann, of Amherst Agricultural College; Prof. Charles P. Williams, professor in the Missouri State University; Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, professor of physiology in the University of New York; Prof. W. O. Atwater, director of the United States Government Agricultural Experiment Station at Washington; Prof. Henry E. Alvord, formerly of the Massachusetts Agricultural College and president of the Maryland College of Agriculture, and now chief of the dairy division of the United States Department of Agriculture, and Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University.

This evidence was enough to convince the minority that oleomargarine was a nutritious and wholesome article of food, and therefore entitled to a place among the food products of the country.

Now, what does the Grout bill propose to do with this nutritious and wholesome food product? I will read you, and again I ask the most careful attention of the House to what the most strenuous advocates of the Grout bill told our committee.

Let me refer first to the testimony of Mr. Adams, pure-food commissioner of the State of Wisconsin. In his testimony before the committee on March 7, 1900, he says:

There is no use beating about the bush in this matter. We want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business.

That is what he says, and he ought to know.

Then here is the testimony of Charles Y. Knight, secretary of the National Dairymen's Union. In a letter to the Virginia Dairyman, dated March 18, 1900, he says:

Now is the time for you to clip the fangs of the mighty octopus of the oleomargarine manufacturers who are ruining the dairy interests of this country by manufacturing and selling, in defiance of law, a spurious article in imitation of pure butter.

Observe, this gentleman undertakes to say what the oleomargarine manufacturers are doing. I deny his statement. They are not doing what he charges. It is the retail dealers in butter who are doing it.

Mr. MCCLEARY rose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I decline to be interrupted. The gentleman understands, of course, that I do not mean to be discourteous.

Mr. Knight continues:

We have a remedy almost in grasp which will eliminate the manufacture of this article from the food-product list. The Grout bill, now pending in the Agricultural Committee of the House of Representatives in Congress, meets the demand.

Mr. W. D. Hoard, ex-governor of Wisconsin and president of the National Dairymen's Union, stated in his testimony before the committee, March 7, 1900, as follows:

To give added force to the first section of the bill, it is provided in the second section that a tax of 10 cents a pound shall be imposed on all oleomargarine in the color or semblance of butter. In plain words, this is repressive taxation.

Let me say that the first section of the bill to which this gentleman refers always met the approval of the Committee on Agriculture and was reported by them favorably and passed two years ago.

Mr. Hoard and Mr. Knight are officers of the National Dairymen's Union, the organization that framed the second section of the Grout bill and sent it to the gentleman from Vermont to introduce. They certainly ought to know what object they set out to accomplish through the means of this second section, and they had the courage to boldly avow it before the committee.

Just here, the minority of the Agricultural Committee parted company with the National Dairymen's Union, for we do not believe that the Congress ought to ruin one American industry to benefit another, and that is just the object sought by these men by their own confession.

I want to touch very briefly on the color question. It is claimed by the extreme butter men that yellow is the natural butter color, and that practically no other food product has the right to use it. If that claim is true, what shade of yellow is it entitled to? Here are samples of butter purchased by me this morning, and no two of them are alike in color. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact every sample before you is artificially colored.

Mr. MCCLEARY. How does the gentleman know that those samples are butter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I bought them of a reputable dealer in Center Market, this city.

Mr. STEELE. What is the objection, whether they are butter or oleomargarine, if they are not unwholesome?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not entering into that question now. I am simply showing that butter is colored all sorts of shades.

Mr. DAHLE. How does the gentleman know that those are colored specimens of butter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am a butter maker myself.

Mr. DAHLE. I am, also.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As a matter of fact, every sample which I here exhibit is artificially colored.

Mr. Speaker, it is only in the months of May and June—and I speak as a practical butter maker myself when I make the assertion—that creamery butter, and that, of course, is the butter of commerce, has a decided yellow color or tint, and that color disappears entirely, or almost so, when the fall and winter sets in. The truth of the matter is that we all color our butter for the purpose of making it uniform in appearance and to meet the demands of the trade throughout the country, just as the wagon maker has to paint his wagons to meet the demands of his trade and to make his goods pleasing to the eye of his customers.

Let me read to you an advertisement in the Chicago Dairy Produce Journal, which appears right on the front page and where no honest butter maker, or anybody else who looked at the Journal, can possibly miss seeing it. It says:

The conventions are over. Between hay and grass you will want a butter color that can be depended upon to give your butter the true June shade. That color is Wells Richardson Co. Improved, the kind that has no mud.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you color the butter that is placed upon the market for the purpose of representing anything else but butter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I deny, Mr. Speaker, that butter has the copyright, patent right, or any other right to any particular color, whether yellow or otherwise.

Mr. GAINES. Was the butter the gentleman exhibited here genuine?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not able to answer the gentleman. I bought it, I will state, from a reputable dealer in the Center Market in this city, as I have stated. If it is not genuine, then I was misled. If the gentleman has any doubt about it, he can take the samples I have submitted to the Agricultural Department and have them tested for himself.

Mr. GAINES. For what purpose did you present these samples here?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the purpose of showing to the House that the color of butter is a varying quantity.

Mr. GAINES. It is understood to be genuine butter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I bought it for that purpose and to exhibit it on the floor of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I need not say anything more in regard to the color question of butter, except that if coloring oleomargarine a shade of yellow helps to perpetrate a fraud, then the coloring of butter is actually a fraud, because it makes the consumer believe, and necessarily, that fall or winter or white butter of any season of the year is June butter, which is generally considered the best. Therefore, there is nothing whatever in the color question.

Mr. Speaker, before sitting down, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter which I think will interest personally every member, and I do not know but that it affects the dignity and good standing of this body before the country. During the last two weeks of the campaign just closed there was scattered broadcast through my district and through many other districts by the National Dairymen's Union, through one Knight, its secretary, and therefore its agent, this circular. [Showing the House copy of a circular representing oleomargarine manufacturer in prison garb tendering money to member.]

It is a cowardly attack—by innuendo—upon the integrity of many members of this body who dare to differ from them. I can hardly believe that the National Dairymen's Union approve of methods employed by their secretary in this matter. But if they do not, they should disavow these methods and dismiss from their service an agent who is guilty of such practices; otherwise, they themselves are knowingly guilty of the miserable, cowardly attack upon the integrity of many members of this House, and neither they nor their opinions nor their wishes are deserving of any consideration at our hands.

I will print as a part of my remarks the minority report of the committee.

The report is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The minority of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives beg leave to submit the accompanying bill, which we offer as a substitute for H. R. 3717, known as the Grout bill.

We first wish to bring to the attention of the House proof positive that oleomargarine is a wholesome and nutritious article of food, and is therefore entitled to a legitimate place in the commerce of our country. In substantiation of this statement we beg to submit the following testimony taken before the committee:

"OPINIONS OF LEADING SCIENTISTS.

"Prof. C. F. Chandler, professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York, says: 'I have studied the question of its use as food, in comparison with the ordinary butter made from cream, and have satisfied myself that it is quite as valuable as the butter from the cow. The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food.'

"Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, says: 'Butterine is, in my opinion, quite as valuable as a nutritive agent as butter itself. It is perfectly wholesome, and is desirable as an article of food. I can see no reason why butterine should not be an entirely satisfactory equivalent for ordinary butter, whether considered from the physiological or commercial standpoint.'

"Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey, says: 'I am able to say with confidence that it contains nothing whatever which is injurious as an article of diet, but, on the contrary, is essentially identical with the best fresh butter, and is superior to much of the butter made from cream alone which is found in the market. The conditions of its manufacture involve a degree of cleanliness and consequent purity in the product such as are by no means necessarily or generally attained in the ordinary making of butter from cream.'

"Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station, and professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College, New Haven, says: 'It is a product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is for all ordinary and culinary purposes the full equivalent of good butter made from cream. I regard the manufacture of oleomargarine as a legitimate and beneficent industry.'

"Prof. S. C. Caldwell, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., says: 'While not equal to fine butter in respect to flavor, it nevertheless contains all the essential ingredients of butter, and since it contains a smaller proportion of volatile fats than is found in genuine butter it is, in my opinion, less liable to become rancid. It can not enter into competition with fine butter; but so far as it may serve to drive poor butter out of the market its manufacture will be a public benefit.'

"Prof. C. A. Goessmann, of Amherst Agricultural College, says: 'Oleomargarine butter compares in general appearance and in taste very favorably with the average quality of the better kinds of dairy butter in our markets. In its composition it resembles that of ordinary dairy butter, and in its keeping quality, under corresponding circumstances, I believe it will surpass the former, for it contains a smaller percentage of those constituents which, in the main, cause the well-known rancid taste and odor of a stored butter.'

"Prof. Charles P. Williams, professor in the Missouri State University, says: 'It is a pure and wholesome article of food, and in this respect, as well as in respect to its chemical composition, fully the equivalent of the best quality of dairy butter.'

"Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, professor of physiology in the University of New York, says: 'I consider that each and every article employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine butter is perfectly pure and wholesome; that oleomargarine butter differs in no essential manner from butter made from cream. In fact, oleomargarine butter possesses the advantage over natural butter of not decomposing so readily, as it contains fewer volatile fats. In my opinion, oleomargarine is to be considered a great discovery, a blessing for the poor, and in every way a perfectly pure, wholesome, and palatable article of food.'

"Prof. W. O. Atwater, director of the United States Government Agricultural Experiment Station at Washington, says: 'It contains essentially the same ingredients as natural butter from cow's milk. It is perfectly wholesome and healthy and has a high nutritious value.'

"Prof. Henry E. Alvord, formerly of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, and president of the Maryland College of Agriculture, and now chief of the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture, and one of the best butter makers in the country, says: 'The great bulk of butterine and its kindred products is as wholesome, cleaner, and in many respects better than the low grades of butter of which so much reaches the market.'

"Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University, says: 'As a result of my examination, made both with the microscope and the delicate chemical tests applicable to such cases, I pronounce butterine to be wholly and unequivocally free from any deleterious or in the least objectionable substances. Carefully made physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter.'"

Professor Wiley, Chief of the Division of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, also appeared before the committee and testified to the nutritive and wholesome qualities of oleomargarine.

The Committee on Manufactures of the United States Senate, in a report dated February 28, 1900, finds, from the evidence before it, "that the product known commercially as oleomargarine is healthful and nutritious."

Judge Hughes, of the Federal court of Virginia, in a decision, says:

"It is a fact of common knowledge that oleomargarine has been subjected to the severest scientific scrutiny, and has been adopted by every leading government in Europe as well as America for use by their armies and navies. Though not originally invented by us, it is a gift of American enterprise and progressive invention to the world. It has become one of the conspicuous articles of interstate commerce and furnishes a large income to the General Government annually."

Believing that this testimony establishes beyond controversy that oleomargarine is a nutritious and wholesome article of food, the main question to be considered is the complaint that fraud is practiced in its sale.

The only just complaint (indeed, the only complaint) against the existing oleomargarine law consists in the facility with which the retail dealer, in selling from the original or wholesale package and substituting a new and unmarked wrapper, may violate the law. There is nothing in H. R. 3717 (known as the Grout bill) which would decrease the temptation or increase the difficulty of such violations. On the contrary, the increased taxation would either be fraudulently evaded, or else would force the honest manufacturer out of business. H. R. 3717 merely increases taxation without providing any new or additional penalties or any new methods to prevent the sale of oleomargarine as butter, either in its colored or uncolored state. In fact, the radical advocates of the Grout bill do not seek this end, as they have declared in their testimony before the committee and in declarations elsewhere that their sole intention is to absolutely crush out the manufacture of oleomargarine and eliminate it as a food product.

In substantiation of this assertion we quote the following:

Mr. Adams, pure food commissioner of the State of Wisconsin, in his testimony before the committee on March 7, 1900, said:

"There is no use beating about the bush in this matter. We want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business."

Charles Y. Knight, secretary of the National Dairy Union, in a letter to the Virginia Dairymen, dated May 18, 1900, writes:

"Now is the time for you to clip the fangs of the mighty octopus of the oleomargarine manufacturers, who are ruining the dairy interests of this country by manufacturing and selling in defiance of law a spurious article in imitation of pure butter. We have a remedy almost in grasp which will eliminate the manufacture of this article from the food-product list. The Grout bill, now pending in the Agricultural Committee of the House of Representatives in Congress, meets the demand."

W. D. Hoard, ex-governor of Wisconsin and president of the National Dairy Union, stated in his testimony before the committee on March 7, 1900, as follows:

"To give added force to the first section of the bill, it is provided in the second section that a tax of 10 cents a pound shall be imposed on all oleomargarine in the color or semblance of butter. In plain words, this is repressive taxation."

In view of this testimony the minority believe they are justified in claiming that the Grout bill, if enacted into law, would destroy the business of the legitimate oleomargarine manufacturers. In other words, Congress is being asked to ruin one industry to benefit another; and this, in the opinion of the minority, is a thing Congress ought not to do. The minority believe it to be class legislation of the most pronounced kind and would establish a precedent which, if followed, would create monopolies, destroy competition, and militate against the public good.

The substitute bill offered by the minority would, in our opinion, eliminate all possibility of fraud, and would compel the manufacturers of and dealers in oleomargarine to sell it for what it really is and not for butter. The substitute offered is practically an amendment to sections 3 and 6 of the existing oleomargarine law. The licenses for manufacture and sale of this article are not changed, and are as follows: Manufacturers, $600 per annum; wholesale dealers, $480 per annum; retailers, $48 per annum, while the penalties imposed for violations of the law are materially increased. We quote in full section 2 of the substitute bill, and ask for it the careful and thoughtful consideration of the House, believing that it is just and fair to all the interests involved:

"SEC. 2. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word 'oleomargarine' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word 'oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and then shall be put by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers, with the word 'oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and marked, stamped, and branded in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale as butter any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months; and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

One of the claims made by the friends of the Grout bill is that it will protect the interests of the farmer. We call attention to the fact that every ingredient that enters into the manufacture of oleomargarine is as much a product of the farm as is butter, and that such ingredients are made more valuable on account of their use in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Your committee has had before it representatives of both the cattle and hog raisers of the country and also representatives of the cotton industry, and they are unanimous in their opinion that their business will be materially injured and the price of their product lowered by the passage of the Grout bill and the destruction of the oleomargarine industry.

The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine does not interfere with the growth and prosperity of the butter industry. Statistics show a much greater percentage in the increase of the production of butter than in the production of oleomargarine. Though similar in ingredients, they are not strictly competing, as the oleomargarine is practically all bought by the poorer class of our people.

In justification of this statement we have received a large number of petitions from the labor organizations of our country protesting against the passage of this bill for the above-given reasons.

It being possible to keep oleomargarine in a sweet and sound condition much longer than butter, it is also used extensively in the mining and lumber camps, on exploring and hunting expeditions, on ships at sea, and by armies in the field.

The claim made by the friends of the Grout bill that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine has greatly depreciated the price of butter will not obtain when it is known that there is now manufactured in the United States nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds of butter annually, and it is positively known that there only were 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine manufactured last year, which shows that the amount of oleomargarine produced is about 4 per cent of the amount of butter produced. Therefore, the argument that oleomargarine in any material sense controls the price of butter is not justified by the facts.

The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine have in no way depreciated the price of butter, as more butter is being sold at higher price in this country than ever before, as shown by testimony.

It is a suggestive fact that those sections of our country which are most exclusively devoted to the dairy interests are blessed with the greatest prosperity, as brought out in the testimony of ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, before our committee, who said that a few years ago land was worth only $15 an acre in that State, but as the State began to be devoted more exclusively to the dairy interests land had rapidly appreciated in price, and that farmers had gotten out of debt, had paid their mortgages, and the land is now worth the sum of $80 per acre, this price averaging much higher than agricultural lands in other parts of the country.

In conclusion, the members of the Committee on Agriculture who have joined in this minority report beg to assure the House and the country in the most solemn manner possible that it has been their earnest intention, and is now their determination, to do everything possible to be done to enforce the sale of oleomargarine as oleomargarine and to prevent its sale as butter. To prevent fraud, and not to stamp out an industry, has been and is our purpose. We believe that it ought to be the sole purpose of all legislation and the sole motive of all just men.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5053. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900; and

S. 5024. An act granting permission to Capt. B. H. McCalla, United States Navy, and Commander William C. Wise, United States Navy, to accept decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 4400. An act for the relief of Frank E. Kellogg, collector of the Sixth internal-revenue district of Missouri.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I desire to resign the charge of this bill on the floor of the House to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. McCLELLAN. Do I understand that the gentleman yields the remainder of his time?

The SPEAKER. No; only the control of the bill, as he has suggested.

Mr. McCLELLAN. No arrangement has been made as to the time for debate?

The SPEAKER. None.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then I suppose the gentleman from Connecticut has only an hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont, by this arrangement, will be placed in charge of the bill instead of the gentleman from Connecticut, and may make such motion with reference to its consideration in the House as he desires.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed at half past 4 o'clock to-day and that the time shall be equally divided between both sides, the control of the proposition being in the hands of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] and the minority report in the hands of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and also that the time between half past 4 and 5 o'clock be devoted to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, the vote to be taken at 5 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. That is not sufficient time for the discussion of a bill which is as important as this bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] who reported this bill for yielding to me its custody. It is an old acquaintance, and I am glad to see it, after much tribulation, so well on its way through the House.

I wish also to thank the gentleman and all others of the majority of the Committee on Agriculture for the resolute fight made by them in committee in behalf of the bill, and for bringing it into the House against great odds with a favorable report. It is a bill, sir, in which the whole body of the American people is interested. It looks to the suppression of fraud upon a food product that is consumed by every man, woman, and child of our 76,000,000 people. It seeks to stop the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine for butter. Over 104,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured and sold last year, and probably not 1 pound in a thousand of this strange compound but what was consumed by a confiding public, supposing it to be butter. This was an average of about 1¼ pounds of this stuff per capita of our entire population, and I expect we all ate our allowance.

The amount of butter sold in the markets of the country is estimated to be about 800,000,000 pounds annually. Thus do we see that about one-ninth of what is sold to the American people as butter is really oleomargerine. One supposes he is eating butter; but the chances are one in nine that he is eating oleomargarine, and this is the case whether one sits at table in a hotel, restaurant, boarding house, or perchance in the house of a friend, unless that friend resides on a farm where honest butter is made.

Mr. HILL. How about the rest of the things on the table?

Mr. GROUT. Very likely, not all pure, but they are not up for consideration in this bill. We will discuss other food adulterations when they are before us. This bill is leveled at the biggest fraud of them all, one of colossal proportions, and if we can handle this the smaller food adulterations will be all the more easily dealt with. One point at a time, if you please.

Every ninth pound of what passes for butter through the channels of trade in the United States is oleomargarine. Think of it, and tell me if the people of this country are not entitled to relief from this dirty fraud? Tell me also if the makers of butter, which costs at least 17 or 18 cents per pound, are not entitled to relief from the destructive competition of this villainous stuff, which costs not over 6 or 7 cents per pound, but is sold for the price of butter?

This could not be done were it not for the false color that is given it. In its natural state it is colorless. The trouble all comes from giving it a color not its own, the color of butter—always yellow. The oleomargarine men complain because butter is sometimes colored, but the coloring of butter only intensifies a little its natural color—the color that belongs to it, the color by which the world knows it, the color that this false product seeks in order that it may palm itself off for butter.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Do I understand the gentleman to assert to the House that the manufacturers of butter do not color it?

Mr. GROUT. No; we know that it is sometimes colored. We know that, to meet a varying taste, coloring matter is introduced into butter. I myself think it a foolish practice. I think that the taste of anyone which requires artificial coloring matter in butter is an abnormal and perverted taste. It were better to let it go in its natural color. My friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, showed us some samples here a few minutes ago, claiming them to be highly colored. I undertake to say that a good Jersey cow, well fed, in the month of December—for this is supposed to be a December product, or November at the farthest—a good Jersey cow, well fed on good, fresh hay and a suitable supply of corn meal properly intermixed with shorts, so that it shall not cloy her, will color her butter as well as the specimens which the gentleman put on exhibition here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I distinctly stated that I referred to the butter of commerce. I did not refer to butter made on private farms from the milk of Jersey cows, well fed with corn meal and all that sort of thing. I referred to the butter of commerce, not to the butter produced by private dairies.

Mr. GROUT. The butter of commerce, Mr. Speaker, is largely produced from Jersey cows, of which there is a vast number in the country, and which are constantly becoming more numerous.

The Jersey is the proper butter-making cow and is so recognized the world over. But we will not dwell upon that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, 32 States have prohibited the sale of oleomargarine when colored like butter. Those 32 States contain 62,000,000 of the people of this country. That shows what 32 States think of colored oleomargarine. And I want every member of this House, when he comes to vote on this bill, to remember what his own State has done on the subject. He will find that in 32 instances the sale of oleomargarine colored like butter is prohibited. The practical effect of this bill will be to bring into harmony the State and Federal laws. I will now explain briefly the provisions of the bill and then yield to others, taking time hereafter to answer points that may be raised if not satisfactorily answered by gentlemen who will follow me.

The first section of the bill simply puts oleomargarine and all imitation butter products under control of the State law the moment they enter the State from another State, the same as though manufactured within the State. This section is an almost exact reproduction of the Wilson law relative to intoxicating liquors and on which there has been a decision of the Supreme Court holding the law to be constitutional. It was to overcome the original-package decision that the Wilson law was passed. It had previously been held by the Supreme Court that articles brought from one State into another were entitled to one exchange, one sale, before the local laws could reach them. And while this decision was concerning the rights of a package of intoxicating liquor, the same principle would apply to all interstate transactions. I repeat, the Wilson law has been held by the Supreme Court to be constitutional. Hence there can be no question as to the constitutionality of this first section.

But let me say, further, that the Supreme Court, in the case of Plumley vs. The State of Massachusetts, which came up on a writ of error, has held that under the police power of the State oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter was subject to control of State laws, inasmuch as it was calculated to deceive. The man Plumley was convicted under the anti-color law of Massachusetts of selling oleomargarine for butter, and fined and imprisoned. He brought a writ of habeas corpus in the supreme court of that State on the ground that the Massachusetts statute was unconstitutional, but the court held that the proceeding was regular. Then he brought his case to the United States Supreme Court on a writ of error, and that court affirmed the decision. In other words, that court held in exact accordance with section 1 of this bill. Some one says, "Then why the necessity for this section?"

I will tell you why. That decision was rendered by a divided court. The Chief Justice and two associate justices dissented from the view taken by the rest of the court, whose opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan. And lest on some evil day the Supreme Court, in the mutations of time, may hold the other way—because this is a vexed question, with millions of dollars behind it—I say lest they may hold the other way, the dairymen of the country want this provision written in the statute law of the land as well as in the decisions of the Supreme Court, thus establishing a double guaranty for the States to exercise their police power to prevent fraud and crime whenever an article enters one State from another, the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. This is the purpose which section 1 will serve.

Now, some one may say, with this section, and with the laws in 32 States prohibiting the sale of colored oleomargarine, Why does not that settle the question? My friend from Texas nods smilingly, as if it ought to; but it does not, and I will tell you why. Mr. Speaker, it is because the enormous profits arising from the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine for butter present an overpowering temptation to the manufacturer and retailer to sell it for butter and at the price of butter. These profits could not have been less than fourteen or fifteen million dollars on the 104,263,651 pounds produced during the last fiscal year. The cost per pound was a little over 8 cents, with the tax paid. It was sold all the way from 15 or 16 cents, for that which went to hotels, restaurants, and boarding houses, to 20 or 30 cents per pound, for which price the enterprising retailer works off some of it for the best dairy butter. Think of it. Fourteen or fifteen million dollars profits!

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Then, as I understand the gentleman, the dairy interests are proposing this measure on account of the enormous profits?

Mr. GROUT. Not simply because of profits, but because they are fraudulent profits. The dairymen propose this measure because of the fraud that is perpetrated upon them by the sale of oleo as butter, and they mention the profits as the inducement for people to enter into this business and practice this fraud. They also refer to these enormous profits as stimulating and encouraging the fraud. Not only do the butter men propose this measure and make these suggestions, but the whole American people, all of whom eat butter, propose it in the interest of honest dealing and that they may know what they are eating.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. One other suggestion, with the permission of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. This, then, in the way of a suggestion, that if the bill proposed by the minority——

Mr. GROUT. Do not take me away from this point. I desire to close as soon as possible and yield to others.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Does not the gentleman from Vermont think that if the bill proposed to the House by the minority were enacted every protection that the people of this country could have would be afforded?

Mr. GROUT. I do not think they would have one particle more protection than they have now; and later, when this substitute bill has been presented, if some other speaker does not absolutely riddle it, I will give attention to it myself. I shall not, however, just now discuss it, but do wish to explain the bill before the House, and make plain the way in which, as I believe, it will stop the fraud, and then I will yield the floor to others.

Mr. Speaker, lest these interruptions have turned aside the attention of the House, let me ask that gentlemen keep in mind the point I am endeavoring to make, viz, that State control as given by the first section of the bill and the anti-color laws of the States are found insufficient to suppress the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter. A simple statement of the facts will prove this. We already have State control under the Supreme Court decision in the Plumley case, and we have anti-color State laws, but still oleo is sold as butter.

Right here let me again tell you why. It is because of the enormous profits realized therefrom, and of which I have already spoken. Does anyone question the cost of this stuff as already given? If so, let me tell the House that Armour & Co., in a legal proceeding, stated that it cost less than 5 cents per pound, exclusive of the tax. But that was a few years ago, when the greases of which it is made were somewhat cheaper than now. I hold in my hand a prospectus issued by a company now erecting an oleomargarine factory in this city, in which the cost is given as 5.54 cents per pound, not including the tax. This stuff is sold to the hotel men, the boarding house and restaurant keepers at 15 or 16 cents per pound. These men put it off in turn on their unsuspecting guests for butter, and thus the fraud is accomplished. But as to the retail dealer——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me to correct his statement where he has read the cost? He has only read the cost of the material; but if he will read the cost of labor, paper, tubs, etc., he will find that that is 1.38, and, with the internal revenue, 8.92 cents, and not 5.54 cents, as he has stated.

Mr. GROUT. I stand corrected in part, but the 5.54 cents did not include the tax. I see, however, in another paragraph below the one from which I read, a further estimate, which is for labor, paper, tubs, etc., 1.38 cents, which would make it 6.92 cents instead of 5.54 cents. But the retail dealer, Mr. Speaker, has another job on his hands. To reap his harvest he must sell it for butter. Now, I wish I had some of the samples of oleomargarine which I have, so that you may see how it is done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] will have them here.

Mr. GROUT. I want my own samples. Will the Doorkeeper——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman manufacture it himself?

Mr. GROUT. No; I am neither a manufacturer nor a defender of it. Will the Doorkeeper ask that the samples in the room of the Committee on Expenditures of the War Department be brought in?

Mr. FLEMING. Possibly the gentleman can get them in the restaurant.

Mr. GROUT. No, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say I have tasted of the butter served in the restaurant below several times. In order to tell butter from oleomargarine by the taste you have to wait a little. It takes a little time to do it. You must not be in a hurry. The sense of smell also helps to a conclusion. Instead of the delicate aroma and fine flavor of pure butter, oleomargarine gives you the odor of dead flowers and the taste of the charnal house. I am glad to say I have never tasted anything but butter in this restaurant, and I have had my tasters after it several times. It is in many places, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think in this Congress it would very likely be found in the restaurants in the Capitol in the face of the present agitation, however it might be in more peaceful times. But to go back to the seller. He enters into the business of selling the stuff, and he works it off all the way from 18 to 30 cents a pound, and is able to do this because it is colored like butter. He takes it—and I can read to you from original circular letters of manufacturers, if I had the time, I have them here—that he takes it with the guarantee from the manufacturers that they will see him harmless "on account of fines, costs, and expenses because of State law."

That is what they do. They defy the State laws. They stand right behind the retailer and tell him to sell the goods and they will take care of him, and he does sell the goods. The manufacturers undoubtedly make the retailer, who is going to get from 18 to 30 cents a pound for what he sells, pay rather more for the product than do the hotel, restaurant, or boarding-house keepers, because there is a larger margin of profits for him. I do not say this is so; it may not vary at all. But it is clear that from 10 to 20 cents profit per pound is divided between the manufacturer and retailer on all that he handles. It is also clear that the retailer goes forward with his business in spite of local laws. He is doing it all over the country. In this city there are 50 or 60 oleomargarine indictments which have been on the calendar over four years. There are in the State of Pennsylvania nearly a thousand indictments for the illegal sale of oleomargarine, many of which are three and four years old. It was only last year in Pennsylvania——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the matter with the cause of justice in that State?

Mr. GROUT. What is the matter with the cause of justice in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, from which the gentleman comes, where the judges, made by the oleomargarine manufacturers and retailers, make oleomargarine decisions which ought to make an American blush for shame? I repeat, what is the matter in Chicago, where hundreds of retailers sell oleomargarine for butter, in defiance of law, a specimen of which I will show you in a moment from the sample packages I have here.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Vermont does not answer my question. The people of the State of Illinois are alive on this issue; but I ask the gentleman, what is the matter with the cause of justice in the State of Pennsylvania? The gentleman from Vermont has made a very serious charge, and if there is any such delay I would like to know it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; after saying to the gentleman from Illinois that there are just such delays not only in Illinois, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia, but in every State where oleomargarine is sold except New York, which appropriates $60,000 annually for the prosecution of oleomargarine cases.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand now the gravamen of the gentleman's objection to the existing laws is that they are not executed by the State authorities?

Mr. GROUT. Precisely so, and because of the immense corruption fund growing out of the vast profits arising from the fraudulent sale of this article for butter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Never mind why. Upon that I want to ask the gentleman from Vermont this question: How does he hope to remedy this evil of misfeasance and nonfeasance on the part of the State law officers by relegating this to the State legal machinery, as he does in the text of this bill?

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I will tell the gentleman how. That is the very question I wanted the gentleman to ask, only he is a little ahead of the proper place in my argument. I answer, by putting a 10-cent tax, just as the second section of this bill provides, upon all oleomargarine colored to imitate butter, and by so much cut down the enormous profits now realized, and thus take away the inducement to work it off as butter. Ten cents added to the cost of production will carry it up into the neighborhood of the cost of producing butter, and then you have not this great margin of profit, amounting to millions of dollars annually—$14,000,000 or $15,000,000 last year—constantly tempting to a violation of the law. That is how I would remedy this evil.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. GROUT. If the gentleman from Mississippi will excuse me, I thought I had answered it; but if I have not made myself understood by the gentleman, I will try to.

I said the 10-cent tax would cut down the profits and remove the temptation to sell oleo for butter. Is there any doubt about this? Let us figure it out right here. The article costs something less than 7 cents per pound to manufacture; call it 7; add present tax, 2 cents, it makes 9. It is sold to the consumer for butter at from 15 to 30 cents per pound; call the average 22 cents. This leaves an average profit of 13 cents per pound, which on last year's product would amount to $14,560,000. Now, if instead of 2 cents tax added to 7 cents, cost of production, 10 cents tax be added, it would make the article cost 17 cents per pound, leaving 5 cents for profit for the manufacturer and retailer, making a total profit on last year's production of $5,200,000 only.

Now, who believes that these oleo folks would put forth the same effort and go to the same lengths to fraudulently market 104,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine for $5,200,000 profit that they would if they got the old profit, $14,560,000. The Lord's Prayer says: "Lead us not into temptation." But the way the law now stands there are $14,560,000 as a standing annual temptation to fraudulently sell oleomargarine for butter. And is it any wonder that the manufacturer of this fraudulent product guarantees the man who sells, against fines, costs, and expenses on account of State laws? Is it any wonder that with $14,560,000 in hand prosecutions for violations of the local laws are held up? Who doubts that this vast fund, the very harvest of fraud, would be used without scruple to clear the field for the sale of oleomargarine? And who fails to see that when the profits are taken away, as they will be by this 10-cent tax, there is no inducement left, or if any, very little indeed, for the retailer to make himself a criminal under State law in the sale of oleo for butter? The manufacturer no longer has such profits that he feels like guaranteeing against State laws, and the retailer lets the stuff alone. The moment the business ceases to be profitable it ceases altogether. This 10-cent tax takes away the profit, and that is how it will stop the fraud. It deals with the question fundamentally. It lays the ax at the very root of the fraud by cutting away the profits.

Another way of putting it is this: The 10-cent tax is only on the right to color the product in imitation of butter, and the fraud is practiced by means of the color. It is therefore only a tax on the fraud. This tax is believed to be large enough to stop the coloring by making the sale of the colored article unprofitable and thereby stop the fraud.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me ask gentlemen to unfold the packages I will have passed around and see what they can find about them that indicates that they are oleomargarine.

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman from Vermont answer a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. MERCER. A few moments ago the gentleman referred to a large corruption fund that had been created by the manufacturers of oleomargarine. Do I understand the gentleman to be quoting from the Salem, Ill., speech? [Laughter.]

Mr. GROUT. No, sir; the Salem, Ill., speech, having been made by a distinguished Nebraskan, will, of course, be carefully studied by all Nebraskans, and I expect the gentleman from Nebraska can repeat the whole speech. Now, let me ask, gentlemen of the House, What do you find indicating that these packages contain oleomargarine? Not a thing, of course. Now, look at me, will you, every member? On top of this package you will find a little flap. Unfold it and you will find the word "oleomargarine" printed in accordance with the law of the United States, but carefully concealed from view. It is stamped, but it is deftly folded away so that no one would mistrust that it was there, and the chances are that not one in one hundred would ever unfold that little flap and discover it. This is a fair sample of the whole business. These packages were bought of a house in Chicago, Ill., which State is represented in part by my amiable friend the gentleman from Aurora. The grocer from whom these were obtained professes to sell nothing but butter—advertises nothing for sale but butter. These were bought for butter; and you will find on the back of the wrapper the name of the man who bought each package and the price he paid.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman pretend to say that in my Congressional district there are any of these industries devoted to the manufacture of oleomargarine?

Mr. GROUT. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the gentleman know that I represent one of the best dairy districts in America?

Mr. GROUT. Yes; that is true. Neither the gentleman nor his constituents deal in oleomargarine. They do not believe in it. They make butter. But I thought the sale of these packages by a grocery man in a city of his own State in defiance of both United States and State law might give the gentleman a glimpse of the devious methods resorted to to sell the stuff for butter. I also thought that these fraudulent sales to these 20 different men of these 20 packages of oleomargarine, when butter was called for and the price of butter paid, would give the gentleman and the House some idea of the difficulty of stopping these sales till the profits were so reduced as to take away the inducement. Impose this 10-cent tax and you will stop the profits, and at the same time stop this fraudulent business. You will at the same time relieve the whole American people of an imposition at once unsavory and unscrupulous, and the struggling, hard-working butter makers of the country of a competition both dishonest and damaging. At the same time, if it be true that people really prefer oleomargarine, but want it colored to resemble butter, they can have it at no greater cost than now and still pay this tax.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman consent to an amendment to this bill placing an equal tax of 10 cents a pound upon all butter that is artificially colored?

Mr. GROUT. No.

Mr. FLEMING. Why?

Mr. GROUT. I have already fully explained the reason. I can not stop to explain it again. In a word, it is because yellow is the proper color of butter.

Mr. FLEMING. Then why put an artificial coloring substance into the butter? Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. GROUT. There is no object, except to meet varying tastes. Some people want a high color, others do not. There is no fraud in this. The butter always tells its own story. The color in butter is always a small consideration, bearing on its value.

Mr. FLEMING. Why color it at all?

Mr. GROUT. I have said that I prefer butter without artificial coloring matter; but others want it colored, and if they do there can be no objection.

Mr. FLEMING. If you put a tax on artificially-colored butter the same as on oleomargarine——

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman allow me to complete my answer? I do not yield further at present. As I have said, the natural color of butter is yellow. It has been that color ever since Jael, the wife of Heber, the Kenite, "brought forth butter in a lordly dish." If it is varied a little by artificial coloring no one is deceived. The coloring matter is put in simply to meet different tastes. The butter itself tells its own story. The color, as I have said, does not enter into the element of value of the butter except to a very small per cent, five points, I believe, in a hundred. If butter is bad, it tells you of it. If it is rancid, you can not help but know it. If it is off-flavor, that is perfectly plain. If the residuum of the barn gets into it, you have full notice; it condemns itself; no one need be deceived. And if it is colored a little more than the natural product of the cow, to meet the taste of some particular class of customers, there is still no fraud practiced. But in regard to oleomargarine, the color of butter is given it so that the article may wear the garb of butter, for the express purpose of being sold as butter.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GROUT. I am taking too much time, and I must decline to yield further. I hope the gentleman will excuse me and ask his question of some other speaker. Let me explain one other feature of the bill. I said a moment since that if people really want oleomargarine and want it colored, really prefer it to butter, as the oleo folks claim, they could pay the 10-cent tax and have the article in an honest, straightforward manner as oleomargarine, without paying for it any more than they are now paying. But they do not want it. The oleo folks' claim that they do is a "whopper." There is not a word of truth in it. It is one of the falsehoods of this false business. For such, however, as really want oleomargarine, as feel that they can not afford butter, but want a cheaper grease for their bread, the bill reduces the present tax of 2 cents a pound to a quarter of 1 cent per pound on all that is not colored in imitation of butter, thus favoring its production at the lowest possible cost. It will then cost the consumer less than one-half what it does now. It will not cost the manufacturer, tax and all, over 7 cents per pound, and can be carried to the consumer with a good profit at 10 cents per pound, precisely the same thing, with all its nutritive properties except color alone, which feeds only the eye. I repeat this can be done at less than one-half what it costs him now. But I deny that it is as wholesome as butter. I wish I had time to fully develop this point. I say this article is not altogether wholesome.

It may suit the stomach of the average workingman, but it is true that it is not assimilated by the delicate, and is a burden with most people of sedentary habits.

The very fact that it contains either stearin or paraffin to make the soft oils used in its manufacture, especially cotton-seed oil, stand up and look and act like butter proves conclusively its difficulty of digestion.

Paraffin is a by-product of coal oil, and used to protect from weather bronze and marble, and is quite as indigestible as either. Joseph G. Geisher, State chemist of New York, found 10 per cent of paraffin in several samples of oleomargarine seized in Brooklyn in July, 1899—6 pounds of paraffin in each of several 60-pound tubs of oleo.

Stearin is the hard tallow from which candles are made, and, as is well known, candles are so hard that one can be shot through an inch board.

Oleomargarine, made as it is out of soft fats and oils, must contain one or the other of these hard, stiffening substances to make it stand up and behave itself like butter, and solidity and firmness in warm weather are among the boasted excellences of the product. There was never a pound of oleomargarine made that did not of necessity contain one or the other of these hard, indigestible substances; and who will claim that this stuff is as healthful as butter? The strong, copper-fastened stomach may handle it with impunity, but what of the weak and the delicate, on whom this vile counterfeit is foisted every day?

The oleo folks talk much about the pure ingredients out of which it is made. They do not tell you that the oil extracted from the garbage of our great cities goes to the oleo factories. But according to Street-Cleaning Commissioner Iglehart, of Baltimore, it does. (See Baltimore American of August 17, 1900.) They do not tell you that horse fat is especially adapted to making oleomargarine, and that in an article on the horse in Frank Leslie's Monthly, July, 1894, this fact is stated as showing the uses to which the horse is put. They do not tell you that renderers' grease from the rendering establishments in our great cities, which gather up all the dead animals, from whatever cause, goes to the oleo factories. But this fact is shown by proof in court in a legal proceeding in the city of New York in 1884 to suppress the nuisance at Hunters Point, which consisted of a boiling and rendering establishment; and though this was some time ago, no one will claim that the habits and morals of the oleo tribe have improved with time.

Now, I do not say that the fat from the horse that died of the glanders or the dog that died of rabies may not be made chemically pure by the process through which they put it. But who wants this grease for butter? The oleo folks say many good people prefer it to butter if it can only be colored to look like butter. But there is a growing belief that the word of the oleo folks can not always be taken for truth. In short; no one believes this.

But enough; I must leave this and other phases of the subject to be elaborated by those who follow. I have already taken more time than I intended. I have explained the provisions of the bill and indicated what I believe the effect of it will be if it becomes a law. I believe the 10-cent tax will stop the manufacture of colored oleomargarine by making the article cost so much that the profits will not induce men to undertake its sale for butter. I believe at the same time that the greatly reduced tax on the uncolored article, and the very low price at which it can be furnished, will result in a considerable output in that form, which will be used by working men, chiefly those engaged in mining and lumbering. I believe, in short, that this tax provision in the second section will compel oleomargarine to go upon the market for just what it is, which is all that the friends of honest butter are contending for. This done, the days of colored oleomargarine are numbered. Most of the 38 oleomargarine factories now running will make room for 1,000,000 additional cows, and the butter maker, whose business now suffers from this competition, will feel the relief as from a nightmare and will rejoice that he is at last permitted to reap the fruit of honest toil; that he is no longer compelled to compete with a fraudulent product. And the whole American people will be thankful that they are relieved at last from this oily monster, which now lurks for entrance into every household and for a place at every table.

Mr. GRIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. GROUT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRIGGS. I would like to know if the gentleman would support or accept an amendment to his bill requiring the dairies which color their butter to stamp the same as colored?

Mr. GROUT. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that question will answer itself. I covered that point substantially in what I said about coloring butter, and I must not take more time in discussing it. I will, however, print with my remarks extracts from a speech which I delivered in the House in 1886, at the time the oleomargarine law now on the statute book was enacted. What was true of this fraud then is true of it now. I reserve the remainder of my time.

OLEOMARGARINE.

[Extracts from remarks of William W. Grout, of Vermont, in the House of Representatives.]

Tuesday, May 25, 1886.

An ancient writer of high repute said: "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Oleomargarine is one of them. It must have been the very one that crowded in ahead of all others upon Solomon's sorrowing vision as he bewailed the departure of man from the "upright." In all the crookedness of man, in both ancient and modern times, the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine must stand first among his false and deceptive works. It is in the first place a counterfeit. It is studiously made to resemble in all respects butter. And the resemblance is so close that only the microscope or a chemical analysis will detect the difference; and some assert that neither the microscope nor chemistry can tell the one from the other.

But this last is one of the falsehoods of this false business, to which is always added, "If science can not tell the difference, then what is the difference? Why is it not as good as butter?" But I repeat, this should be branded as a falsehood. Certainly Professor Taylor's microscope reveals even to the unpracticed eye an unmistakable difference, much like the difference between the green leaf of spring and the dead leaf of autumn. To this many gentlemen on this floor can testify. But it is a counterfeit, a confessed counterfeit, better calculated to deceive than the most skillful counterfeit of the current coin or paper money of the United States. Like the pirate, who displays a friendly flag, it sails under false colors; and like the pirate and the counterfeiter it takes from others without giving an equivalent in return. It is manufactured for 8 or 9 cents per pound and sold to the consumer for 20 or 30 cents per pound; not for what it is, but for pure butter; just as the counterfeit dollar is passed, not for what it is, but for what it appears to be.

But it is said that the manufacturer sells to the dealer for just what it is. In most instances very likely. So does the maker of counterfeit money supply the one who puts it into circulation for just what it is; but never at a fair profit only on what it cost him to make it. He would want at least about one-half the whole fruit of the fraud; just as he who steals a horse would be willing to pass it to the receiver at perhaps half its value, who in turn would have a margin left for his share. So it is with this oleomargarine trade. Between the first cost and the price paid by the consumer enormous profits cluster along the way. If these profits were legitimate, no fault could be found; but they are won by fraud. They are made by selling oleomargarine for butter. Not one pound in a million of this counterfeit stuff is bought and eaten by the consumer for what it is. Like the counterfeiter's victim, who "took it for a dollar," one always buys butter, but in blissful ignorance he too often eats oleomargarine. The only way one can be certain is to establish a chemist's laboratory in his kitchen and plant a microscope by his plate.

* * * * * * *

If oleomargarine be the poor man's blessing, as is claimed, it should be secured to him at the poor man's price. But this will never be till compelled, as proposed by this bill, to go upon the market in no guise but its own and under no name but its own. As oleomargarine it will pay the tax proposed by this bill, and then reach the poor man's table at much less cost than it now does; if, indeed, it be fit to eat, of which a word in a moment. But it now sells for the price of butter, from 20 to 30 cents per pound, and leaves the poor man without the blessing which it falsely promises him. It thus gathers in $15,000,000 ill-gotten gains annually, the very harvest of fraud itself, and at the same time strikes a staggering blow upon an honest industry in which millions of the working men and women of this country now gain only a hard-earned livelihood.

Now this is oleomargarine, an acknowledged counterfeit, but deceitfully passed for the true; intrenched behind the millions it has filched from the people in the name of butter; false to its promises to the poor: the disturber of our industries; the very embodiment of falsehood and fraud. And yet this false-faced monster sits with us familiarly at table in the dress of an old friend, and makes his oily way into the very citadel of man's affections. Then if in the silent watches of the night the stomach becomes suspicious that it may be "entertaining an angel unawares," and yearns for information as to the character of this nocturnal visitor, which the friends of oleomargarine tell us comes as an angel laden with blessings for the race, it is respectfully referred to the Patent Office reports. [Laughter.]

Volume 5 is taken down and opened to page 329, and the poor benighted stomach asks if the angel was made under patent No. 148767, which is as follows: "This substitute for butter" "consists of a base of yolk of eggs, butter, and milk, agitated in a zinc vessel that has been coated with a solution of niter." But hearing no response, it takes down volume 22 and opens to page 1489, and reads in patent No. 266777 this formula for making a "substitute for butter," "consisting of cotton-seed oil or other vegetable oils treated with a solution of caustic soda in combination with farinaceous flour, which had previously been thoroughly cooked in salt water, as described; incorporating and agitating the mass, working in the oil, milk, coloring, and flavoring as per process described." But still there is no response.

There can be no certainty of the parentage of the child in this patent; and lest the wondering stomach may find some worse formula for the manufacture of angels, it takes down volume 28 and looks hopefully for the pedigree of its particular guest in patent No. 301782, found on page 173:

"The process consists in first forming a soap emulsion of the fats or fatty oils with caustic soda; then precipitate the lyes; then applying chlorinated alkaline lye, or chlorinated gas, to the soap emulsion, as described."

But this formula is found to be so full of lyes (lies) and sounds so much like a receipt for making soap that the bewildered stomach abandons the inquiry, declaring in tones of astonishment that oleomargarine is, indeed, the mystery of mysteries—a far profounder mystery than hash or sausage. [Laughter.]

Let not this sad tale of a child without a father divert attention from the fact—let it the rather fix the mind upon it—that so long as bastard butter is sold for the genuine no purchaser can be sure but that he is eating it, nor can he be sure either of what ingredients it may be composed. It presents the well-known condition of every illegitimate birth, namely, an uncertain paternity; and as a doubtful place in the pedigree may let in bad blood, so uncertainty as to the ingredients of counterfeit butter admits the possibility that they may be unclean and unwholesome. Who can look with entire composure upon this possibility? Who will say that the things we eat ought not, like Cæsar's wife to be above suspicion?

It will not be pretended but that a substitute for butter made according to the formula of M. Mégé, the French inventor, is a wholesome food product. But this can not be said of all the American devices in which lard and vegetable oils and tallows take the place of margarine oil and in which various acids and alkalis are used, some of which, as everyone knows, are not only unwholesome but absolutely dangerous. The following are a few of the many articles named in the many patents granted for the manufacture of substitute butter: Bisulphate of lime, borax, salicylic acid, benzoic acid, orris root, cotton-seed oil, bicarbonate of soda, glycerin, capsylic acid, alum, capsic acid, sulphite of soda, cows' udders, sulphuric acid, pepsin, tallow, lard, salt, cornstarch, butyric ether, caustic potash, castor oil, chalk, slippery-elm bark, caul, oil of sesame, oil of sunflower seed, olive oil, turnip-seed oil, broma chloralum, chlorate of potash, oil of sweet almonds, oil of peanuts, peroxide of manganese, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calf, nitrate of soda, mustard-seed oil, nitric acid, dry blood, albumen, sugar, butyric acid, bicarbonate of potash, and caustic soda.

One of the great packing establishments in Chicago has of the Elgin creameries the buttermilk in which to baptize, in the name of butter, probably a thousand tons a year of this counterfeit product; and pay for it—if the statement of their agent now in charge of their goods in the Central Market in this city can be relied upon, for he made the statement to me—$100 per day. Now, this is almost equal to the wag's formula for making a first-class article of chicken soup for boarding-house consumption, namely, drive a hen through a dish of hot water. O tempora! O mores! [Laughter.]

But enough about the character of counterfeit butter. It may be that the cheap grease known in the market as "neutral grease," when subjected to treatment by the alkalis and acids named in the various imitation-butter formulas, is not absolutely unwholesome, for chemistry works wonders in the transformation of physical substances. I say this may be; but suppose it is, who wants to eat it? That this "neutral grease" is to a great extent used in the manufacture of these imitation products no reasonable person will doubt. The different formulas themselves prove it by the chemical agents which they contain for the manifest purpose of deodorizing and correcting it. Besides, as everyone knows, it is a counterfeit and a fraud; and who is verdant enough to suppose that the counterfeiter would be at all scrupulous as to the materials he used in his business? The object is to make the counterfeit article at the least possible expense for the sake of the greatest possible profit. And if "neutral grease" can be obtained at one-fourth or one-third the expense of tallow or lard, who for a moment doubts which the counterfeiter would use?

But this stuff, even if not absolutely unwholesome, is not fit for a self-respecting American citizen to eat. It might answer for a Digger Indian, who lives on snakes, or for the Mexican peon, who in his poverty consumes with avidity every organic part of the animal, excepting only the horns, hoofs, hair, and bones. It might answer for these, but it does not comport with our American civilization. It is no credit to it. It has no proper place in it, and it could not exist for a moment except through fraud and imposition. The American people can be in better business. With "cattle upon a thousand hills," and many, many thousand hills scattered all over our vast domain, where now grows wild grass or stands "the forest primeval," but where hardy husbandmen might graze and milk their herds of kine, and thrifty housewives might emulate the virtue and valor of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, who "brought forth butter in a lordly dish," does it not seem like small business, like the disreputable business it is, for an able-bodied American citizen to be trying to find out how chemistry can extract from "cow's udders" the oil that shall give to tallow and lard and the intestinal and offal fats and "neutral grease" and the vegetable oils the taste of butter, thereby enabling the unscrupulous to sell them, after they are washed in buttermilk, for butter, and thus put these cheap and nasty fats in competition with the golden issues of the housewife's churn?

And this brings me to the chief reason for the passage of this bill, namely, the ruinous effect of this dishonest competition upon the great, in fact the greatest, industry of this country—an industry which, while it gives employment to millions of capital and millions of men and women, is yet made up from an aggregation of humble interests which, when treated fairly, only afford very small profits in return for much hard work.

Dairying is the largest single branch of American agriculture. The butter, milk, and cheese produced for the last year, as estimated by reliable experts, amounted to the enormous sum of $564,559,500. This is more than four times the value of the entire oat crop of the country; more than five times the value of the pig-iron product; more than twice the value of the iron and steel product; about four and one-half times the value of the cotton crop; and about $150,000,000 more than the entire wheat crop of the country. The amount invested in milch cows is about $700,000,000—more than the entire capital stock of all the national banks of the country.

Not only is dairying the great leading branch of our agriculture, but it is so related to every other branch of that great industry that when it suffers the whole feels the depressing effect. Especially is this true in our older States, where the soil, well-nigh exhausted by long-continued cropping, is arrested from further deterioration and brought back to a high degree of fertility by dairy farming, and thus worn-out lands are restored and more of every kind of agricultural product is produced, more forage for animals and more food for man. It is estimated that in dairying at least four millions of our population are employed, while agriculture in all its branches gives employment to almost one-half of our entire population, who therefrom feed and clothe themselves and feed and clothe the other half.

Without agriculture we should go both hungry and cold. We should relapse into barbarism, should go back to the skins of beasts for clothing and hunt again the wild boar for food. A thrifty agriculture makes every other work of civilization possible. Without it the earth, the source of all wealth, would fail to yield her fruits and every other enterprise and industry would languish. We have already seen that the dairy interest is the very soul itself of our agriculture. Now, shall this interest be preserved, or shall it be sacrificed, not to a fair competition—if the competition were fair no fault would be found—but to a downright fraud, to a filthy counterfeit, masquerading in the stolen livery of the very industry it is seeking to overthrow? [Applause.]

Even if the competition were fair it would still present a serious question of public policy; one not only involving public health, but the public intelligence and morals also, namely, whether we should kill out the dairy industry and cease to be a butter-eating people and feed upon the coarser and more cloying animal fats, thus taking a step back toward the raw tallow and lard which were the delight of our Saxon ancestors in the forests of Germany. It involves also another question which takes strong hold upon the labor problem, which has long vexed the governments of Europe, and now threatens the peace and prosperity of this Republic. It is this: Whether a few capitalists giving employment to a few thousand men shall be allowed to overwhelm with a fraudulent business an honest industry which gives employment to millions, and which is the very cream of that grand pursuit which, through the common mother of the race, provides for us all.

You have just passed a labor-arbitration bill and sent out a special committee to collect data for the adjustment of the delicate relations between capital and labor. But right here, in the disposition of this bill, is an opportunity to deal with the labor question from the very foundation, and in a way to dispense with arbitration bills and special committees, or make them a standing necessity. It has been said that "an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." Enactments preventive of threatening evils are always wiser than the wisest provisions for the correction of those evils after they are developed. It is always the highest achievement of legislation to formulate laws which in their practical operation shall reconcile antagonisms and bring all interests into harmony. This can only be done by giving all men and all honest enterprises a fair chance.

Now, pass this bill and you take an important step in both remedial and preventive legislation. You at once relieve the dairy industry of the killing fraud which now completely paralyzes it. And as one of the immediate results the milch cows, which as shown by the last report of the Commissioner of Agriculture were depreciated during the last year to the amount of $32,751,392, will be restored and doubtless somewhat advanced. This vast sum will thus be added to the exchangeable value of property not belonging to capitalists but to the millions of hard-working men who own those cows and are struggling to pay with the income from them the mortgages which capital holds upon their farms.

Not only this, but the number of cows will be greatly increased. There will not be slaughtered 30,000 of them for beef in the city of Chicago for the year to come, as your committee reported there was in the year that is past. They will be wanted for the dairy. To this extent, certainly, there will be an increased demand upon those who breed cattle for beef; and that branch of agriculture, now sadly discouraged, will take a fresh start. More hay and grain must be provided for the support of this increased number of animals, both for beef and the dairy, and more men found to feed and care for them. A corresponding demand for labor on the farm will surely follow and will draw off from the employ of the great corporations, to which all surplus labor tends, the discontented ones who are now the leaders in labor disturbances, but who would find in the great open field of agriculture, every department of which would feel the impulse of a restored dairy industry, an opportunity to gain for themselves and their families a subsistence; nay, more, a competence; and this is how the passage of this bill would begin to solve the labor problem. It would begin at the right end of it. [Applause.]

It would be more to the point than arbitration bills and investigating committees. A restored dairy industry would surely occupy, with valuable improvements, new areas of land and as surely restore to fertility the old, much of which now lies fallow, thus adding millions to the productive and taxable wealth of the country. Nor is this all. A return to the production of honest butter would restore our export trade. For the last five years, since false butter has usurped the place of the true, there has been a steady decline in the annual export of American butter. That which was bought and shipped for genuine too often turned out to be spurious. As a result, no dealer would risk the sale of American dairy products in foreign markets, and the trade fell off.

The extent of this decline is shown by the fact that in 1881 the total amount of American dairy exports was $22,636,272. In 1885 it was but $14,086,055, a decrease in four years of $8,548,220. Instead of this there should have been an equal or greater increase. There is still another humiliating fact in this connection. It is this: Much of the butter which we exported in 1885 was not handled by American merchants, but by Canadian merchants, who first bought in our markets and shipped to Canada. Then, when reshipped from Canadian ports, it would go upon the European markets as Canadian butter, which is not yet under suspicion like our own, for there the manufacture of oleomargarine is absolutely prohibited. But let this same butter, perhaps perfectly pure, be shipped from an American port or by an American merchant, and it could be sold only at a reduced price.

Thus, because of these fraudulent imitations, is the commerce of this the foremost people in all the earth driven like a culprit to the use of an alias in order to make its way into foreign markets; thus also are American merchants deprived of the profits of handling this merchandise in those markets; thus is an annual outlet for nearly $9,000,000 worth of dairy products closed and the business to that extent depressed; and thus as a people are we that amount poorer than we should be if that trade were not interrupted. We have that amount less annually of circulating medium, that amount less of gold and silver; for remember that our foreign exchange is always in gold and silver. Now, pass this bill and give to American dairy products a reputable entrance into foreign markets, and you will bring into the United States within the next ten years of foreign gold $35,000,000 at least, and probably more. * * *

Pass this bill and you correct all the evils arising from counterfeit butter and put not only the dairy industry but the whole vast industry of agriculture upon a career of prosperity; and in its train shall follow all the other industries and the arts and the best culture of a progressive civilization. Refuse it, and you perpetuate all the evils above enumerated and engender others which in turn shall "become the hatch and brood of time." You deliberately protect a fraud which is sapping the very foundations of the farmer's success and crippling his every effort to get on in the world. You help capital, which holds the mortgage on his farm and owns also the oleomargarine factory, to destroy the butter market and thus deprive him of his last opportunity to keep down the interest on that mortgage, and then take from him the farm itself and turn him into the street a vagabond and a tramp; and when next you hear from him he is in the front rank of some labor agitation. Then, to tide over the troubles produced by your unwise legislation, a Congressional investigating committee will be in order.

By refusing this bill you continue a policy calculated to destroy the hope of the husbandman and drive not a few only but thousands from agriculture into other departments of labor already overcrowded. Can you afford to do this? Can you afford to break down and disperse into other pursuits the hardy tillers of the soil, thus lessening the number of producers and increasing the number of consumers? A sound public policy lies in just the opposite direction—in developing and fostering every department of our agriculture, whereby enough may be gathered of the products of the earth to feed and clothe and preserve from distress and agitation all other departments of industry, and at the same time contribute in the most effectual manner possible to the national wealth. But enough. The general wisdom of this bill will not be disputed. Its justice to the farmer must be admitted. The salutary effect it will have upon our industries is apparent. The general demand of the American people for wholesome articles of food calls for it.

* * * * * * *

The absolute power over commerce between the States given by the Constitution to the National Government is one of the principal badges of the national sovereignty. It is an important, far-reaching power, and should be duly magnified. The future will bring it into exercise more than the past has done. The rapidly increasing commerce between the States will require from Congress constant supervision, and new rules will be required as new emergencies arise. In interstate commerce, which will increase with our increasing numbers and better facilities for intercommunication, shall be found the strongest future bond of union between these States. A free and fair interchange of commodities between the remote sections of the country will to our political and social relations add the ties of trade, than which between peoples and States none are stronger; and thus, in a vast domestic commerce, so regulated by Congress as to be mutually beneficial to all sections and all industries, shall be heard—

"In the rushing wheels
"Of trade's tumultuous jar"—

the richest music of the Union.

Down the future, as our population becomes denser and our commercial rivalries sharper and our accumulated wealth greater, who can tell how this controlling authority of the National Government may be used to allay those rivalries, to check the greed of monopolies, to protect one State against the fraudulent products of another, and bring all departments of our domestic commerce, which is but the sum of our domestic industries, into such relations with each other as that each part shall contribute to the vigor of every other part, and thus create a harmonious system in which labor shall find employment, capital shall have its own, and every honest industry a fair chance? Now, this will be the problem for the future statesmen of this country to solve. This problem is, in fact, crowding upon us to-day. We have seen how this measure before us reaches out into all these questions. We have also seen that Congress has a double power over the subject. Let us, then, rise to the occasion and pass this bill. [Applause.]

Saturday, May 29, 1886.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege—the privilege of not being classed with any set of men whose convictions are at all "mixed" upon the question now under consideration; the privilege, to be more specific, of not going into the RECORD in this debate as from the State of Pennsylvania, as yesterday's issue, on page 5254, in giving remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], puts me. Ordinarily, sir, I might not object to being credited to the grand old State of Pennsylvania—the State of "brotherly love," the nobility and hospitality of whose people are proverbial; but I can not permit it in this connection, for the reason that her Representatives on this floor are somewhat "mixed" on this question of oleomargarine, some of them showing a strange disposition to pay their devotions at the shrine of this myriad monster, this mixed mystery of the modern magician. Hence, I ask that the RECORD at the point I have indicated may be corrected and that I may be credited where I belong.

Mr. KELLEY. Pennsylvania makes no objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROUT. I thank you, sir, Mr. Chairman, only for the kind consent of the distinguished gentleman it might have been difficult.

Mr. BAYNE. My friend will allow me to suggest that when the vote shall be taken on this bill it will be found that the Representatives of Pennsylvania are not very much "mixed."

Mr. GROUT. Very likely; but I want to be credited where I belong, since Judge Kelley is willing I should be; and that is to the little but constant State of Vermont, whose people neither make nor eat oleomargarine, but do make 25,000,000 pounds of butter annually, with which you may butter your bread and not feel under the knife blade as you do it the wiggling kick of a million animalcules. [Laughter.]

But, since the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my friend Colonel Bayne, speaks hopefully of the Pennsylvania delegation, let me ask that this correction be made without prejudice to him and without prejudice also to all others of that delegation who prefer butter to oleomargarine. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Speaker, the Grout bill and the substitute recommended by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture are practically amendments to the oleomargarine act which became a law on the 2d day of August, 1886. That law then enacted provides for a tax on oleomargarine of 2 cents a pound; it also provides that the manufacturers shall pay an annual license of $600. Wholesale dealers shall pay a license of $480, and retail dealers a license of $48 annually. I submit as part of my remarks a copy of H. R. 3717, known as the Grout bill, the substitute recommended by the minority of the committee and their report.

A bill (H. R. 3717) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine.

Be it enacted, etc., That all articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese, or any substance in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, transported into any State or Territory, and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon the arrival within the limits of such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted into the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles or substances had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in a separate and distinct form and in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter.

SEC. 2. That after the passage of this act the tax upon oleomargarine as prescribed in section 8 of the act approved August 2, 1886, and entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not colored in imitation of butter; but when colored in imitation of butter the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 10 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of said act.

SUBSTITUTE FOR H. R. 3717.

A bill to amend sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approve August 2, 1886, and also to define manufacturers and dealers and to provide for the payment of special taxes by them.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That special tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine shall be imposed as follows: Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600 per annum. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer thereof.

"Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer therein; but a manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells oleomargarine of his own production only at the place of its manufacture in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer on account of such sales.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities not greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be regarded as a retail dealer therein.

"SEC. 2. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word 'oleomargarine' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word 'oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers and marked, stamped, and branded with the word 'oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months; and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The minority of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives beg leave to submit the accompanying bill, which we offer as a substitute for H. R. 3717, known as the Grout bill.

We first wish to bring to the attention of the House proof positive that oleomargarine is a wholesome and nutritious article of food, and is therefore entitled to a legitimate place in the commerce of our country. In substantiation of this statement we beg to submit the following testimony taken before the committee:

"OPINIONS OF LEADING SCIENTISTS.

"Prof. C. F. Chandler, professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York, says: 'I have studied the question of its use as food, in comparison with the ordinary butter made from cream, and have satisfied myself that it is quite as valuable as the butter from the cow. The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food.'

"Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, says: 'Butterine is, in my opinion, quite as valuable as a nutritive agent as butter itself. It is perfectly wholesome, and is desirable as an article of food. I can see no reason why butterine should not be an entirely satisfactory equivalent for ordinary butter, whether considered from the physiological or commercial standpoint.'

"Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey, says: 'I am able to say with confidence that it contains nothing whatever which is injurious as an article of diet, but, on the contrary, is essentially identical with the best fresh butter, and is superior to much of the butter made from cream alone which is found in the market. The conditions of its manufacture involve a degree of cleanliness and consequent purity in the product such as are by no means necessarily or generally attained in the ordinary making of butter from cream.'

"Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station, and professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College, New Haven, says: 'It is a product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is for all ordinary and culinary purposes the full equivalent of good butter made from cream. I regard the manufacture of oleomargarine as a legitimate and beneficent industry.'

"Prof. S. C. Caldwell, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., says: 'While not equal to fine butter in respect to flavor, it nevertheless contains all the essential ingredients of butter, and since it contains a smaller proportion of volatile fats than is found in genuine butter, it is, in my opinion, less liable to become rancid. It can not enter into competition with fine butter, but so far as it may serve to drive poor butter out of the market, its manufacture will be a public benefit.'

"Prof. C. A. Goessmann, of Amherst Agricultural College, says: 'Oleomargarine butter compares in general appearance and in taste very favorably with the average quality of the better kinds of dairy butter in our markets. In its composition it resembles that of ordinary dairy butter, and in its keeping quality, under corresponding circumstances, I believe it will surpass the former, for it contains a smaller percentage of those constituents which, in the main, cause the well-known rancid taste and odor of a stored butter.'

"Prof. Charles P. Williams, professor in the Missouri State University, says: 'It is a pure and wholesome article of food, and in this respect, as well as in respect to its chemical composition, fully the equivalent of the best quality of dairy butter.'

"Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, professor of physiology in the University of New York, says: 'I consider that each and every article employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine butter is perfectly pure and wholesome; that oleomargarine butter differs in no essential manner from butter made from cream. In fact, oleomargarine butter possesses the advantage over natural butter of not decomposing so readily, as it contains fewer volatile fats. In my opinion, oleomargarine is to be considered a great discovery, a blessing for the poor, and in every way a perfectly pure, wholesome, and palatable article of food.'

"Prof. W. O. Atwater, director of the United States Government Agricultural Experiment Station at Washington, says: 'It contains essentially the same ingredients as natural butter from cow's milk. It is perfectly wholesome and healthy, and has a high nutritious value.'

"Prof. Henry E. Alvord, formerly of the Massachusetts Agricultural College and president of the Maryland College of Agriculture and now chief of the dairy division of the United States Department of Agriculture, and one of the best butter makers in the country, says: 'The great bulk of butterine and its kindred products is as wholesome, cleaner, and in many respects better, than the low grades of butter of which so much reaches the market.'

"Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University, says: 'As a result of my examination, made both with the microscope and the delicate chemical tests applicable to such cases, I pronounce butterine to be wholly and unequivocally free from any deleterious or in the least objectionable substances. Carefully made physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter.'"

Professor Wiley, chief of the Division of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, also appeared before the committee and testified to the nutritive and wholesome qualities of oleomargarine.

The Committee on Manufactures of the United States Senate, in a report dated February 28, 1900, finds, from the evidence before it, "that the product known commercially as oleomargarine is healthful and nutritious."

Judge Hughes, of the Federal court of Virginia, in a decision says:

"It is a fact of common knowledge that oleomargarine has been subjected to the severest scientific scrutiny, and has been adopted by every leading government in Europe as well as America for use by their armies and navies. Though not originally invented by us, it is a gift of American enterprise and progressive invention to the world. It has become one of the conspicuous articles of interstate commerce and furnishes a large income to the General Government annually."

Believing that this testimony establishes beyond controversy that oleomargarine is a nutritious and wholesome article of food, the main question to be considered is the complaint that fraud is practiced in its sale.

The only just complaint (indeed the only complaint) against the existing oleomargarine law consists in the facility with which the retail dealer, in selling from the original or wholesale package and substituting a new and unmarked wrapper, may violate the law. There is nothing in H. R. 3717 (known as the Grout bill) which would decrease the temptation or increase the difficulty of such violations. On the contrary, the increased taxation would either be fraudulently evaded or else would force the honest manufacturer out of business. H. R. 3717 merely increases taxation without providing any new or additional penalties or any new methods to prevent the sale of oleomargarine as butter, either in its colored or uncolored state. In fact, the radical advocates of the Grout bill do not seek this end, as they have declared in their testimony before the committee, and in declarations elsewhere, that their sole intention is to absolutely crush out the manufacture of oleomargarine and eliminate it as a food product.

In substantiation of this assertion we quote the following:

Mr. Adams, pure food commissioner of the State of Wisconsin, in his testimony before the committee on March 7, 1900, said:

"There is no use beating about the bush in this matter. We want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business."

Charles Y. Knight, secretary of the National Dairy Union, in a letter to the Virginia Dairymen, dated May 18, 1900, writes:

"Now is the time for you to clip the fangs of the mighty octopus of the oleomargarine manufacturers who are ruining the dairy interests of this country by manufacturing and selling in defiance of law a spurious article in imitation of pure butter. We have a remedy almost in grasp which will eliminate the manufacture of this article from the food product list. The Grout bill, now pending in the Agricultural Committee of the House of Representatives in Congress, meets the demand."

W. D. Hoard, ex-governor of Wisconsin and president of the National Dairymen's Union, stated in his testimony before the committee on March 7, 1900, as follows:

"To give added force to the first section of the bill, it is provided in the second section that a tax of 10 cents a pound shall be imposed on all oleomargarine in the color or semblance of butter. In plain words, this is repressive taxation."

In view of this testimony the minority believe they are justified in claiming that the Grout bill, if enacted into law, would destroy the business of the legitimate oleomargarine manufacturers. In other words, Congress is being asked to ruin one industry to benefit another; and this, in the opinion of the minority, is a thing Congress ought not to do. The minority believe it to be class legislation of the most pronounced kind and would establish a precedent which, if followed, would create monopolies, destroy competition, and militate against the public good.

The substitute bill offered by the minority would, in our opinion, eliminate all possibility of fraud, and would compel the manufacturers of and dealers in oleomargarine to sell it for what it really is and not for butter. The substitute offered is practically an amendment to sections 3 and 6 of the existing oleomargarine law. The licenses for manufacture and sale of this article are not changed, and are as follows: Manufacturers, $600 per annum; wholesale dealers, $480 per annum; retailers, $48 per annum, while the penalties imposed for violations of the law are materially increased. We quote in full section 2 of the substitute bill, and ask for it the careful and thoughtful consideration of the House, believing that it is just and fair to all the interests involved:

"SEC. 2. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word 'oleomargarine' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word 'oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and then shall be put by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers, with the word 'oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and marked, stamped, and branded in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale as butter any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months; and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

One of the claims made by the friends of the Grout bill is that it will protect the interests of the farmer. We call attention to the fact that every ingredient that enters into the manufacture of oleomargarine is as much a product of the farm as is butter, and that such ingredients are made more valuable on account of their use in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Your committee has had before it representatives of both the cattle and hog raisers of the country, and also representatives of the cotton industry, and they are unanimous in their opinion that their business will be materially injured and the price of their product lowered by the passage of the Grout bill and the destruction of the oleomargarine industry.

The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine does not interfere with the growth and prosperity of the butter industry. Statistics show a much greater percentage in the increase of the production of butter than in the production of oleomargarine. Though similar in ingredients, they are not strictly competing, as the oleomargarine is practically all bought by the poorer class of our people.

In justification of this statement we have received a large number of petitions from the labor organizations of our country protesting against the passage of this bill for the above-given reasons.

It being possible to keep oleomargarine in a sweet and sound condition much longer than butter, it is also used extensively in the mining and lumber camps, on exploring and hunting expeditions, on ships at sea, and by armies in the field.

The claim made by the friends of the Grout bill that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine has greatly depreciated the price of butter will not obtain when it is known that there is now manufactured in the United States nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds of butter annually, and it is positively known that there only were 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine manufactured last year, which shows that the amount of oleomargarine produced is about 4 per cent of the amount of butter produced. Therefore, the argument that oleomargarine in any material sense controls the price of butter is not justified by the facts.

The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine have in no way depreciated the price of butter, as more butter is being sold at higher price in this country than ever before, as shown by testimony.

It is a suggestive fact that those sections of our country which are most exclusively devoted to the dairy interests are blessed with the greatest prosperity, as brought out in the testimony of ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, before our committee, who said that a few years ago land was worth only $15 an acre in that State, but as the State began to be devoted more exclusively to the dairy interests land had rapidly appreciated in price, and that farmers had gotten out of debt, had paid their mortgages, and the land is now worth the sum of $80 per acre, this price averaging much higher than agricultural lands in other parts of the country.

In conclusion, the members of the Committee on Agriculture who have joined in this minority report beg to assure the House and the country in the most solemn manner possible that it has been their earnest intention, and is now their determination, to do everything possible to be done to enforce the sale of oleomargarine as oleomargarine and to prevent its sale as butter. To prevent fraud and not to stamp out an industry has been and is our purpose. We believe that it ought to be the sole purpose of all legislation and the sole motive of all just men.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the substitute presented by the minority that in any way alters or changes the per-pound tax or license fee on manufacturers of or dealers in oleomargarine. The Grout bill proposes to increase the tax on colored oleomargarine to 10 cents per pound and decrease the tax on uncolored oleomargarine to one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, and it is claimed by the friends of the Grout bill that if the tax of 10 cents per pound is placed on colored oleomargarine it will prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale of that commodity.

The minority of the committee can not find in any particular provision of the bill where it will change the law except as to an increase or decrease of the tax, and make the sale of oleo subject to the State laws when shipped from one State into another. No safeguards are thrown about the sale of this product for the prevention of fraud upon the general public in the proposed bill. The substitute bill we believe, on the contrary, will prevent fraud in the sale of oleo.

I have here on my desk samples of oleo for the purpose of giving an ocular demonstration of the sale of oleomargarine under the present law—a demonstration of the operation of the sale of oleo under the Grout bill, and of the sale of the same product under the substitute bill submitted by the minority of the committee.

I wish to state that the minority of the committee have no feeling in this matter except that fair treatment should be given to the legitimate industry. It has been their effort to frame a bill to prevent the fraudulent sale of this product. We do not charge that dead cats and dogs are being manufactured into butter as has been suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut that they are probably used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. That sort of talk is humbug. I am confident that there is not a gentleman in this House who believes that cats and dogs or any matter repugnant to taste or deleterious to health is used in the manufacture of the oleomargarine that is sold on the market throughout this country.

A few days ago I read the speeches that were made here in 1886 on the subject of oleo, and I found all sorts of charges about deleterious matter said to be used in oleo in those days, but I had thought no gentleman at this time would have the hardihood to state to this House that there is anything in oleomargarine but pure and nutritious matter.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORIMER. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. GROUT. Do you deny that paraffin is put in oleomargarine?

Mr. LORIMER. I emphatically deny that paraffin is put in oleomargarine, and if it were necessary to prove it, it is only necessary to say that paraffin is selling to-day at a higher price than you can buy oleomargarine for at retail in the markets in this city. Why, Mr. Speaker, paraffin is now selling, I am informed, for 15 cents a pound wholesale. There was a time when paraffin could be bought for 7 cents.

Mr. GROUT. Do you deny that it has been found in oleomargarine, put in to stiffen it and make it stand up like butter?

Mr. LORIMER. I deny the statement that it is now or has been used in oleomargarine, and I say to you that no statement was made before our committee, backed up by any expert, to that effect.

Mr. GROUT. Has your attention been called to the analyses made by the State chemist of New York of half a dozen tubs of oleomargarine found in Brooklyn some year and a half ago, of which 10 per cent was paraffin.

Mr. LORIMER. I have recollection of a gentleman who said he was the State chemist of the State of New York appearing before the Agricultural Committee, stating that paraffin was used in oleomargarine, and we asked him to submit testimony that we might use in our hearings to present to Congress, and told him that he could submit it at any time prior to the publication of the testimony; but up to date we have received no statement from that gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LORIMER. Gladly.

Mr. TAWNEY. You say that no deleterious substances are used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. Is it not possible for substances deleterious to health to be used and the consumer not know anything about it?

Mr. LORIMER. Yes, my friend, it is possible for substances deleterious to health to be used in oleomargarine.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And also in butter.

Mr. LORIMER. But it is also possible to use deleterious substances in butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can you make butter out of anything except cream or milk?

Mr. LORIMER. I have known of butter being shipped from butter territory that had oleo oil in it. I do not know whether you would call it butter or oleomargarine.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that some of the very dairymen in this association who are back of this bill use—have we not been led, at any rate, to believe that they used—oleo oil very largely in their so-called butter that they would protect now at the expense of oleomargarine?

Mr. LORIMER. From testimony before the committee I have that impression——

Mr. GROUT. Who gave the testimony? Will the gentleman allow me to ask him to refer to it in the printed testimony?

Mr. LORIMER. I think it was Mr. Oliver, of North Carolina. I am not exactly certain, but I know you will find in the testimony of one of the cotton-seed oil men a suggestion that oleo is now used and will be used in butter more extensively than it now is if the Grout bill should pass.

Mr. GROUT. It was merely a suggestion. It was not stated as a fact.

Mr. LORIMER. I do not say that there was any such statement made as a fact.

Mr. GROUT. Anybody can make a suggestion.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that the minority of the commitee are in favor of stamping out fraud in the sale of oleomargarine, and it is admitted by every member of the committee that fraud is and has been perpetrated in the sale of oleomargarine, and I propose to show to the House to-day just how those frauds are committed, to show to the members of the House how they would continue to perpetrate fraud under the Grout bill, and to show the House how absolutely impossible it would be to perpetrate fraud under the substitute submitted by the minority of the committee.

I have here a firkin of oleomargarine, with the Government stamp upon it, as provided under the oleomargarine law. This is sold by the manufacturer to the wholesaler or retailer. A purchaser comes into a store and asks for a pound of butter. The grocer goes back into his ice box and takes out of this oleo firkin a pound of oleo and sells it as a pound of pure butter. In many instances they put the stamp upon the paper and turn it in; but very frequently it is sold for butter. This the minority of the committee admit. And the minority seek to prevent this fraud by the passage of the substitute. Under the law oleo may be put up in rolls and packed in boxes or crates for shipment, about the size of this box I have on my desk, with the Government stamp upon it, as provided by law.

Nothing is required to be stamped upon the roll to indicate what it is. No mark is required in the firkin to indicate its contents. A purchaser asks the storekeeper for a roll of butter. The keeper wraps up a roll of oleo, and nobody is the wiser. This is the way a fraud is perpetrated upon the purchaser. Fraud is committed by the retail dealer; but it is not in testimony before our committee that any manufacturer has ever failed to comply with every letter of the law. Now, suppose you pass the Grout bill. What is there in the Grout bill that will prevent the selfsame operation and perpetration of fraud as it is now perpetrated under the present law?

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LORIMER. Certainly.

Mr. GROUT. The Grout bill takes that coloring matter away, so that they can not fool anybody in the product.

Mr. LORIMER. The Grout bill takes that coloring matter away, but it does not prevent anybody from committing fraud. He who wishes to commit fraud and take the chance will color oleo and sell it for butter, and the incentive to do it when the tax is increased to 10 cents per pound from 2 cents is much greater than under the present law.

Mr. GROUT. Does the gentleman intend to be understood that it will be done by the manufacturers?

Mr. LORIMER. No; I intend to be understood that anybody who is now fraudulently selling oleomargarine would color oleomargarine after it is sent to their store and sell it at the increased price for butter.

Mr. GROUT. But is it not a fact that it can not be reworked unless it is remelted and refashioned? Is not that the fact?

Mr. LORIMER. I am not absolutely certain that it is; I am not absolutely certain that it is not so; but I am absolutely certain that a man who sells it fraudulently would very soon find a way to do the coloring.

Mr. Speaker, under the Grout bill a package of oleomargarine that is fraudulently sold would be sold just the same as it is sold under the present law. There is no difference in the operation of the two laws. There is nothing excepting the 10-cent tax, which absolutely wipes the oleomargarine manufacturer out of business. Gentlemen favoring the Grout bill hope to prevent the sale of oleomargarine by stamping out the industry.

You have not in your bill one safeguard thrown around the sale of oleo to prevent fraud. It is absolutely absurd, Mr. Speaker, to talk of preventing the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine by increasing the tax to 10 cents a pound. I think that under a tax of 10 cents a pound there would be more oleomargarine sold fraudulently than there is now. Right on that point I would like to call attention to this fact. The gentlemen who have spoken here this afternoon have tried to create the impression that almost all the oleomargarine sold in this country is sold for butter by the retailers. We had in testimony before the committee, from Mr. Wilson, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that less than 10 per cent of it is sold fraudulently. This talk of it all being sold fraudulently is absolutely without foundation.

Now, I wish to show how oleo would be sold under the substitute presented by the minority of the committee. The substitute provides, first, that oleo must be put up in not larger than 2-pound nor smaller than 1-pound packages; there shall be no larger than 2 nor smaller than 1 pound package. It is put up in the factory. When it is patted into a 1 or 2 pound roll, the word "oleomargarine" shall be stamped on the 1-pound or 2-pound roll of oleo. Then this substitute provides that a wrapper shall be placed about the package, with the name of the manufacturer, printed in large letters, the word "oleomargarine," as this roll that I hold in my hand, "W. J. Moxley, high grade of oleomargarine," in big letters.

The size of all these letters is to be determined upon by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Then another wrapper may be placed upon the package, and the word "oleomargarine" must be printed upon that wrapper. Following that, the substitute provides that the internal-revenue stamp shall be wrapped around the package. Now, this blue ribbon represents an internal-revenue stamp. It is absolutely impossible, under the operation of this substitute, to sell a pound of oleomargarine for anything but what it is.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LORIMER. Certainly.

Mr. PEARRE. How will that protect the public any more than the law now protects them?

Mr. LORIMER. I was just about to come to that point.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman permit me to add another question?

Mr. LORIMER. Let me answer the first, and I will answer any other question you desire to ask. The substitute provides that no portion of a pound package or 2-pound package shall be sold. It provides that these packages shall not be broken, and the stamp shall not be broken, and it can only be sold in the original package.

Mr. PEARRE. Exactly.

Mr. LORIMER. Yes.

Mr. PEARRE. Now, the Government gets its revenue from the manufacturer when that stamp is put on the package?

Mr. LORIMER. That is true.

Mr. PEARRE. Then the incentive for the Goverment to track down the violator of the law does not exist, but ends when that package leaves the factory. Is not that true?

Mr. LORIMER. I do not believe that it is true.

Mr. PEARRE. Is not that true?

Mr. LORIMER. I have more confidence in the Government than to believe that it is true.

Mr. PEARRE. Do not you know that the act of 1886 has failed in its original purpose, as passed by the Congress of the United States, because after the Government collected its revenue it did not have the incentive to enforce the police provisions of that bill?

Mr. LORIMER. Just a moment. How does the gentleman harmonize that statement with the fact that we have quite a number of fellows in the penitentiary to-day, placed there by the Government authorities for violating the oleomargarine act?

Mr. PEARRE. I do not want the gentleman to answer my question by asking another, but I will answer his. The people of the United States who desire to eat butter in preference to oleomargarine have gotten after the public officials to such an extent that they have brought about a small number of prosecutions, a very small number, and secured an almost infinitesimal number of convictions compared with the great number of violators of the oleomargarine law.

Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. LORIMER. The tobacco sold in this country to-day is put up and sold in the same way that the substitute would regulate traffic in this product and protect the butter against the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine.

Mr. PEARRE. I do not care anything about tobacco.

Mr. LORIMER. No; the gentleman does not care for anything, only to drive the oleomargarine interests out of business. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEARRE. And the gentleman from Illinois does not care for anything except to advocate and defend the oleomargarine interests, if he desires to make this a personal matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORIMER. The only thing I am advocating and defending in this House, on this oleomargarine proposition, is fair play, and that we shall not establish a precedent in this House for future time, stamping out any legitimate business in the interest of another. [Applause.]

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. LORIMER. No; I decline to yield further to the gentleman, because it is evident that he has made up his mind to put the oleomargarine manufacturers out of business, and if I should talk to him eight weeks I could not convince him.

Mr. McCLEARY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LORIMER. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY. I infer from your statement that you believe that the oleomargarine business could not succeed except by this fraud.

Mr. LORIMER. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. McCLEARY. That the only way they could sell it is by coloring it to resemble another product.

Mr. LORIMER. I did not say that. The gentleman says the only way to sell it would be to sell it by making it resemble something else. The real truth, Mr. Speaker, is that the commercial butter two months from now will be as white as chalk when it is taken from the churn, and it will only be yellow after it is artificially colored.

Mr. McCLEARY. But when it is colored it is what it purports to be; it is butter.

Mr. LORIMER. Colored butter. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. And when he sells oleo, it is colored oleo? [Laughter.]

Mr. LORIMER. Now, nobody on this side of the question will undertake to say that they sell butter for anything but what it is. Our contention is that butter is not naturally of the yellow June color all the year round. Here is a roll of colored butter, artificially colored, and here is a roll of butter made one week ago, and gentlemen will see how light colored it is. Six weeks from now it will be as white as that paper on your desk.

Mr. McCLEARY. But it will still be butter.

Mr. LORIMER. It does not have the natural yellow color all the year round. We contend, if you place any yellow substance in butter for the purpose of making it look good and make it more palatable to those who consume it, oleo manufacturers have the same right to place it in the oleomargarine for the same purpose. We contend that it is not counterfeiting butter by adding a yellow substance to the oleo. What we propose to do is to prevent any fraud in its sale by the passage of this substitute. You know that all the tobacco sold in this country is sold with a stamp across the top, and I do not remember of hearing for a good many years of any fraudulent sale of tobacco put up in that way.

On cigars we put a stamp around the box, as my friend beside me suggests, and I am certain, and I know the gentlemen in this House, too, are satisfied, that if this substitute is passed we will never hear anything about a fraudulent sale of oleomargarine in this country. If it were not for the desire of certain gentlemen to kill the oleo industry, I do not know of a man on the floor but what would accept this substitute. The bill H. R. 3717 is not to compel oleo to be sold for what it is. It is being urged by gentlemen in favor of the Grout bill to stamp the oleomargarine industry out of existence. That is all there is to it. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLEARY. If the gentleman will pardon an interruption, I would like to ask him how he can make that statement when this bill specifically provides that oleomargarine uncolored shall have the tax upon it reduced.

Mr. LORIMER. I will tell the gentleman how I can make that statement. This tax was inspired not by members of this House, but by gentlemen who want to stamp out the oleomargarine industry. They made their statements before the Committee on Agriculture. The pure-food commissioner of the State of Wisconsin, after he had furnished this testimony, said:

> There is no use of beating about the bush. We want to pass this law and drive oleomargarine manufacturers out of business.

Ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, in winding up his statement, said:

> This is repressive taxation.

And the secretary of the Dairymen's Union, Mr. Knight, wrote a letter to a butter man in Virginia, which appears in the report of the minority of the committee, in which he stated that—

> The Agricultural Committee is now considering a bill that will effectually stamp out the oleo industry, and that is what we want.

I have talked with many gentlemen on this floor who favor this bill, and they have said to me that that is why they are going to vote for it.

Mr. McCLEARY. This industry, as defined in the gentleman's statement, means undoubtedly the industry of making colored oleomargarine.

Mr. LORIMER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. NEVILLE. Is it not true that butter would not be stamped out of existence by an anti-color law? And if that is true, then why will this 10 per cent tax stamp out oleomargarine?

Mr. LORIMER. I would answer the gentleman's question in this way: I am willing to vote for an amendment that would prevent the coloring of either oleomagarine or butter.

Mr. NEVILLE. That does not answer the question.

Mr. LORIMER. I do not think that such a tax would effectually stamp out the sale of butter, but it would not bring as high a price in its white state as it brings when it is colored. I admit that fraud has been perpetrated and is being perpetrated every day.

Mr. NEVILLE. But, if such a tax would not stamp out the butter business, if it would not prevent the sale of butter, then, if oleomargarine is sold upon its merits, why would such a tax stamp oleomargarine out of existence?

Mr. LORIMER. One reason is because colored butter would be more palatable. If I should go out to-day to buy a substance to put upon my bread, I would just as willingly take high-grade oleomargarine as good butter; but if I were called upon to decide between high-grade white oleomargarine and yellow butter, yellow butter is more palatable, and I would prefer it; and I think that everybody else would decide in favor of the colored article, because it would be more palatable.

The whole purpose of the Grout bill, and the gentlemen know it, is to prevent the sale of yellow oleomargarine, in order to stamp it out of existence. What is the use of fooling about the matter? We might as well be fair with each other.

Mr. TONGUE. Does the gentleman think that the manufacturers of oleomargarine color their product for the mere purpose of pleasing the eye, or is the object to induce the people to buy the product in the belief that they are buying butter? In other words, is the coloring in the interest of art or in the interest of fraud?

Mr. LORIMER. I believe that oleomargarine is colored by the manufacturers because they think in that form it is more salable, for the reason that it is more palatable—more pleasing to the eye.

Mr. TONGUE. Do they not believe that it will be more salable because people who buy it believe it to be butter and would not otherwise buy it?

Mr. LORIMER. No; but suppose that to be so; what we propose to do is to pass the substitute in order that oleomargarine shall be put up in such a way that it will be absolutely impossible to sell it for anything but what it is.

Mr. TONGUE. When the wrappers are off, what protection will there be for the public against the sale of this article as butter?

Mr. LORIMER. There is the impress on the oleomargarine itself.

Mr. TONGUE. When that has been removed, what then?

Mr. LORIMER. Nothing.

Mr. THROPP. Is it not true that the coloring matters used in this manufacture are neutrals; and, if so, how do they add to the palatability of the oleomargarine?

Mr. LORIMER. When you sit down to a table that is clean and pleasant in appearance, in comparison with one that has a dirty tablecloth, you enjoy your meal best at the clean table.

Mr. THROPP. Then it is the question of appearance?

Mr. LORIMER. Palatability, that is all. People think the article they consume is more palatable, and enjoy it more. Now, why should we discriminate in favor of one industry as against the other?

Mr. THROPP. My object was simply to inquire whether the coloring matter added to the quality of the oleomargarine.

Mr. LORIMER. Everybody knows that it does not.

The only complaint, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, is that oleomargarine has been manufactured and sold fraudulently as butter. The only complaint that gentlemen make on the floor of the House is that it is sold as such. If that be so, and we simply desire to stamp out the fraudulent sale of it, as we should, then let us adopt legislation that looks to that end. It is a very simple matter, if that is what you wish to accomplish. The only legislation—the only bill that is submitted to the House that will accomplish that end—is the substitute which is now before us.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I have fully and thoroughly demonstrated the fact that there is nothing new in the Grout bill to stamp out the fraudulent sale of this product in the markets of the country. Because, if it can be sold fraudulently under the present law, there is nothing whatever in the Grout bill which changes the law to prevent the same fraud. The substitute bill affords a safeguard against this fraud, and under its provisions it is possible to shut out the fraudulent sale of this product. I am absolutely certain, Mr. Speaker, that if the substitute is adopted, oleomargarine can be sold and will be sold only for what it is. Thus the fraud would be absolutely cured.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] suggested that oleomargarine was shipped from the city of Chicago to a dealer somewhere in the East and sold at 13 cents a pound, and suggested that this was because of the fact that it was sent in its natural white color. Now, the truth of the matter is that you can buy as much oleomargarine, either white or yellow, as you wish in the factories in the city of Chicago or in any factory in the United States at 12½ cents a pound. The color has nothing to do with the present price of oleomargarine, and the friend of the gentleman in the East who purchased at 13 cents a pound was actually paying a half cent a pound higher than the market price where it is made. So there is nothing in that argument.

I do not know, of course, how carefully the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] has figured the statistics on the subject of butter, but at the adjournment of the House in June last I made a comparison, and from the statistics which were then available the amount of oleomargarine manufactured and sold in this country, as compared with the butter manufactured and sold, was a little over 4 per cent—quite considerable less the 5 per cent of the total amount. Now, I remember well, also, that before oleomargarine was manufactured and sold at all, in the city of Chicago, of buying butter in small quantities at 12, 13, 14, 15, or 16 cents a pound.

But since the manufacture of oleomargarine has been started it has been absolutely impossible, at least within the last two or three years, to buy butter at the Elgin factory at a less price than 16 cents a pound even at wholesale. And yet, before oleomargarine became a product in the market of the country, I was able to buy butter at the price I have stated, and there must have been a profit between the manufacturer and the retailer at some point when I purchased butter at from 12 to 16 cents. This proves the fact that the argument which has been made by gentlemen on the other side that the sale of oleo depreciates the price of butter is entirely without foundation, and the records of the market of the country, I venture to assert, will not bear out their assertion.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest dairy industry probably in the United States is in the State of Illinois. I have lived in Chicago for thirty years, and am perfectly willing to take up the statistics on the sale of butter in that city with the gentleman from Vermont, and I am sure they will establish the fact that the price of butter has not been as low since oleo has come on the market as it had been before.

I am absolutely positive that the manufacture of oleomargarine has not affected the price of butter in any respect, but it has furnished the poor with a wholesome article of food in seasons when they could not afford to buy butter on account of its high price, say in the winter months, for instance.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question for information. Am I talking in my own time or am I consuming the time belonging to the chairman of the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPKINS). The gentleman, as a member of the committee, is entitled to an hour in his own right. He has nineteen minutes of that time left.

Mr. LORIMER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of the time.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Agriculture reported favorably the bill under discussion (H. R. 3717) after carefully weighing all the evidence for and against it. Thirty-two States of the Union, containing a population of over 50,000,000, have passed laws forbidding the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored to resemble butter. These laws have been upheld in the courts, and twice sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. No State has ever repealed one of these laws. The law enacted in 1886 placed a tax of 2 cents per pound upon oleomargarine in order to enforce the clause requiring the branding of every package sold. The revenue has been collected by the Government, but the law has not been enforced, except in rare cases, against the offenders. The more the branding clause of the law of 1886 is violated the greater the revenue, because the oleomargarine pays the tax when sold for what it is or as butter.

The tax of 10 cents imposed by this bill would be collected on all oleomargarine colored to resemble butter. The collection of this tax would likely result in taking out the large profit now realized by the retailers in the counterfeit article, and tend to even up the profits on butter and colored oleomargarine. We have abundant evidence to show that the cost of oleomargarine is about 7 cents a pound. The tax of 10 cents imposed upon the colored to resemble butter would make it stand at 17 cents. These two articles, then, if of even value, as some claim, would have the same chance in an open market, while the oleomargarine uncolored could be sold for 10 or 12 cents to those who preferred to buy it in the natural state.

On one side of this contention stands a great agricultural interest, backed by millions of farmers and the large bulk of the consumers, as well as hundreds of thousands who are engaged in buying and selling butter. On the other hand we have the manufacturers of oleomargarine and the dealers, who in at least 32 of the States are evading or violating the laws. In passing this bill we will have public opinion strongly and broadly behind us.

Three vocations are asking this legislation—the dairymen, the small farmers throughout the country, who perhaps are the greatest sufferers, and the retail dealers in butter. The letters and petitions from my own district indicate this. I have received a great number of letters urging the passage of this bill, not only from the farmers of the six counties I represent, but from the retail dealers of the city of Richmond and many of the citizens of that city. As a sample of the many letters from the counties, I quote the following:

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY, VA., March 12, 1900.

DEAR SIR: The measure now before Congress, the Grout bill, seems to me to be a great improvement on the present law relating to oleomargarine.

Let the poor have it cheaply, but compel them to sell it as it is made—white in color.

When it is colored to imitate butter it is a fraud that injures farmers. Dairy interests should be fostered in your district.

There are few if any farmers in this section who have anything like money gain to show for the last ten years of hard work.

It seems to me that the best thing we can do to improve our farms and improve this section is to produce stock and dairy products.

All the farmers I have seen approve of the Grout bill. I trust you have or will vote for it.

Yours, truly,

S. E. MORSE.

Hon. JOHN LAMB.

Here is another, even more pronounced:

SABOT ISLAND, VA., February 24, 1900.

DEAR SIR: If you know as much about the disreputable competition which we people have to contend with who are endeavoring to do an honest business in the production of an honest article of butter, we do not believe you would hesitate long about getting down to work for the passage of the Grout bill taxing butterine 10 cents per pound when made in semblance of butter and giving the States the right of jurisdiction over imitations as soon as they enter the State.

We are willing that all who want oleomargarine shall have it, but we want it fixed so that people who do not want it will not have to have it palmed off on them for butter.

We are willing to reduce the tax on that oleomargarine which is made so it will comply with the State laws of our thirty-two principal States, but the revenue law as it now stands is a detriment rather than an aid in carrying out the wishes of the people. Please give us your support in getting the Grout bill passed.

Respectfully, yours,

W. S. SANDERS.

Hon. JOHN LAMB,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

These letters from farmers might be multiplied indefinitely. As showing the feeling of another class, here is a sample from the dealers and commission merchants.

RICHMOND, VA., March 26, 1900.

DEAR SIR: As president of the Richmond, Va., Branch of Commission Merchants of the United States, I write in the interests of the Grout bill, that you give it your support, believing its passage will meet with the approval of the people of the Third district.

I have understood you have received few letters from merchants here claiming it would not be to the interest of Richmond people for the passage. I beg to differ with them, and only think they wrote in their own personal interest as dealers, direct or indirectly, and must say if some change don't take place the butter interest in Virginia is of short duration. And what then will become of our farmers whose main support is the cow? Hoping again our request will meet with your hearty support, I am,

Very truly, yours,

W. F. SEYMOUR,
President Richmond Branch N. L. C. M. of the United States.

Hon. JOHN LAMB, Washington, D. C.

Here is another equally to the point:

RICHMOND, VA., March 26, 1900.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, dealers in pure butter in the city of Richmond, Va., note with pleasure the active interest and work manifested by you in the Grout bill, which raises the tax on oleomargarine made in semblance of butter from 2 to 10 cents per pound, the sale of such oleomargarine being forbidden by the laws of our State; also provides for the lowering of the tax on that which will meet the requirements of our State laws from 2 cents to one-fourth cent per pound, and gives the States jurisdiction over imitation dairy products upon entering their borders. We highly commend your position in this matter, and assure you that your attitude can not affect the interest of anybody in our State who is complying with our State laws, while the accomplishment of the object which you seek to attain would put thousands of dollars into the pockets of the people of your State now going into the coffers of bogus makers of other States.

The merchants of this city are all in favor of this law except those dealing in the bogus article.

Yours, very respectfully,

W. W. SPRATLEY & CO.

Hon. JOHN LAMB, Washington, D. C.

Here is an extract from a letter inclosing a petition, largely signed, in favor of the Grout bill:

DEAR SIR: I have not been able to see the trade or private citizens as I would like, else would send you hundreds of more names. We know the sentiment of Richmond on this line, and know it is against the sale of this bogus stuff, and we know you will do what you think is just and right, and are willing to trust you in this matter, as well as all others.

S. F. PADGETT & CO.

Here is one that presents in concise form three reasons for the passage of this bill that will appeal to the minds and hearts of these Representatives:

RICHMOND, VA., March 26, 1900.

DEAR SIR: We write in the interests of the Grout bill to beg for it your vote and influence.

Because the manufacture of butterine has almost destroyed the butter interests in this State; because it is not right that the few who are making this bogus butter should add to their millions at the expense of every poor woman in the land who owns a cow; because the business in oleomargarine or butterine encourages deception, it being regularly advertised and palmed off as genuine butter, and it is so advertised now in this city. I mention but few of the many reasons that call for the passage of this Grout bill, and beg you to support the bill.

Yours, truly,

J. D. McINTIRE.

Hon. JOHN LAMB, Washington, D. C.

The editor of the Southern Planter, a leading agricultural journal of the South, published in Richmond, Va., writes as follows:

DEAR SIR: I hope that we may count on you using all your influence in favor of the Grout bill now before the Agricultural Committee. The dairying interest in the South, and especially in Virginia, is becoming a large one, and this bill is of great importance to that interest.

Yours, truly,

J. F. JACKSON.

A petition from the merchants and citizens of Richmond, Va., numerously signed, asking for the passage of this bill, says in part:

We highly commend your position in this matter and assure you that your attitude can not affect the interest of anybody in this State who is complying with our State laws, while the accomplishment of the object which you seek to attain would put thousands of dollars into the pockets of the people now going into the pockets of bogus butter makers of other States.

We believe the bill a just and honest one, and we further know that public opinion demands it, and, were it put to a vote with our people, that 90 per cent of the people would vote for it. We further assure you that 90 per cent of our people who buy oleomargarine buy and eat it for butter, as we have never seen or heard of oleomargarine being advertised as oleomargarine, but always as puro or fine creamery butter. See the deception used.

These letters and petitions clearly indicate the views of my constituents on this important subject, and I take it that the same opinions are held by a large majority of citizens of the rest of the State.

The commissioner of agriculture of the State of Virginia, in a letter of recent date written to me on the subject, says:

The merchants make such a large profit from the sale of oleomargarine they prefer handling it to butter, and it has consequently ruined the dairy interest in this State. Ten years ago the dairy business in this State was developing splendidly, but now most of them have closed up on account of competition of oleomargarine. Our farmers are heavy losers on this account.

The failure of our farmers to keep a large number of cows and raise more stock is hurtful to the agricultural advancement in this State.

The State board of agriculture at its last meeting, November 30, unanimously passed a resolution requesting the Congressmen and Senators of this State to support the Grout bill.

I produce this witness, and could easily add many others, to offset the declaration made in the very able report of the minority of the committee that "the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine does not interfere with the growth and prosperity of the butter industry."

The minority report also says:

The oleomargarine is practically all bought by the poorer class of people. In justification of this statement we have received a large number of petitions from the labor organizations of our country protesting against the passage of this bill for the above given reasons.

I have never received a petition from a labor organization protesting against the passage of this measure, although there are fifty to seventy-five organizations in the two cities I represent, and fully 10,000 laborers. In fact, I have had only two letters, and two telegrams from my district protesting against the Grout bill, while I have received hundreds favoring its passage. The opponents of this measure have a good deal to say about oleomargarine as a cheap food for the poor. You will observe that the poor, for the most part are silent on this bill. We take it that they desire good butter and not a counterfeit. Some say oleomargarine is the poor man's butter, and that the tax on this article comes finally out of his hard earnings. I have a few letters on this line. For such as these Shakespeare gives an answer:

Mark you this, Bassanio,
The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose.
An evil soul, producing holy witness,
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek;
A goodly apple rotten at the heart;
O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

[Applause.]

We claim that the advocates of this measure, who ask that the force of law be turned against the counterfeit, are the best friends of the poor.

When this measure is enacted into law the uncolored article can be sold at 10 or 12 cents a pound. This will be the poor man's opportunity. He pays now from 15 to 25 cents for oleomargarine. The minority report claims that this bill, if enacted into law, would destroy the business of the oleomargarine manufacturers, and cite in proof of this the strong language of a few of the gentlemen who testified before our committee. In reply I beg to quote the language of my colleague, who drew the majority report.

We believe the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine will continue under this measure, and that those who desire a cheap substitute for butter will purchase the uncolored article. The only difference is that the counterfeit article, colored in imitation of butter, will no longer be accessible to hotel keepers, restaurant keepers, and boarding house proprietors at such prices as will be an inducement for them to deceive their guests, as is now, we believe, absolutely universal where it is served, and thus another class of consumers, who have been subject to imposition for more than twenty years, will be able to know whether they are eating butter fat or hog fat when they spread their bread. If colored oleomargarine is served it will be because it is better, and not because it is cheaper than butter.

The minority report has a good deal to say about the healthfulness of this article and quotes a number of professors of chemistry in proof of their contention.

On the other hand, there are a great number of reports in England, France, and this country going to show that the effects of oleomargarine are harmful. On this point I beg to refer you to the able argument of ex-Governor W. D. Hoard, made before the Committee on Agriculture March 17, 1900, and printed in the hearings before that committee.

But we hold it immaterial to this discussion whether this article is wholesome or not. The object of this bill is to secure honesty in trade; to protect the public pocket, rather than the public health. We are not called upon to prove that oleomargarine makes people sick. We are required to prove that the sale of the great bulk of the product is permeated with fraud and that it is purchased for and as butter by consumers who would not want it were it not colored in imitation of a more valuable product.

The substitute bill so earnestly advocated by the minority members of the Committee on Agriculture will not, for many reasons, meet the difficulty.

First. It attempts to legalize the coloring of oleomargarine against which thirty-two States of the Union have passed laws.

Second. It will completely destroy the butter interest of the country.

Third. The temptation to fraud will only be removed in the degree that the price of the article is lowered by the absence of competition, for the hotel, restaurant, and boarding-house keepers can buy from the retail butter dealers any number of these original 1 and 2 pound packages and put it upon their tables as butter, removing easily the impress made on the packages. The present law, bad as it is, will be far preferable to the substitute. There is not much in this substitute about the coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter. Indeed, the advocates of the substitute ask you why it is not as permissible to color oleomargarine as it is to color butter. We reply: Because they are not colored for the same purpose. Butter is not colored to resemble a superior article and impose on the consumer.

Oleomargarine is colored to make it resemble a better product. It is colored to deceive the consumer. The coloring adds nothing to the food value of the article. The proposed taxation against colored oleomargarine works no hardship to the consumer. Those who want this fat substitute for butter can buy it much cheaper in its natural state. The Grout bill, when enacted into law, will force out this color or semblance to butter; will check or entirely destroy the fraud; will protect the great army of producers of butter from competition with a counterfeit, and will enable those who want a cheap food to buy this oleomargarine at a fair price in the market, knowing what they buy and what they are eating.

But the opponents of this measure say the cattle raisers of this country will be injured, and our minority committee grow eloquent over the evils of taxing one industry to benefit another. They appear more interested for the dead cow than the living animal. If the dairy interest be destroyed or crippled and the cows are sold off and slaughtered, as is being done in some districts to an alarming extent, what about an increase of beef cattle and feeders? Will not the falling off in this way lose to the cattle raisers more than the 40 or 50 cents per head now claimed for the sale of oleo oil? You will find this a two-edged sword cutting both ways. [Applause.]

We do not propose to sacrifice the cow's udder in order to save a few cents on the beef fat.

Pass your substitute allowing the coloring of oleomargarine. Let this counterfeit that can be made at about one-third the cost of genuine butter and sold at about one-half and leave a margin of profit drive the great dairy and butter interests to the wall, and the effect will not be confined to those extensive interests alone, but will be felt in every nerve of our great system—through thousands of happy homes it will be felt. Helpless women and defenseless children even now cry unto you for help. These cries will be turned into curses when your special privilege to the few shall have deprived them of the sale of the last pound of butter that brought to their cheerless homes 3 pounds of sugar. Impoverished mother earth, that has been forced to give without receiving back, will enter protest. Let us not, I pray you, sacrifice the cow for her tallow.

> Oh, what a noble cow was here undone,
> When Brindle's self destroyed her favorite son!
> Yes, she too much indulged thy fond pursuit,
> She sow'd the seeds, but death has reap'd the fruit.
> 'Twas thine own genius gave the final blow,
> And help'd to plant the wound that laid thee low;
> So the struck milker stretch'd upon the plain,
> No more through waving grass to browse again,
> View'd her own tallow on the fatal dart,
> And wing'd the shaft that quiver'd in her heart.

[Applause.]

But there is another interest that will suffer, we are told, if the Grout bill passes.

The manufacturers of cotton-seed oil claim that their interests will suffer if the oleomargarine manufacturers are crippled or destroyed by the operations of this bill. It is well known that the foreign demand for cotton-seed oil is great now and constantly increasing. There is a demand from every country on the globe for this article. The small quantity used in the manufacture of oleomargarine can not affect to any appreciable degree the sale of cotton-seed oil. The amount used is only 7 per cent, as reported by the Secretary of the Treasury in response to an inquiry from this House.

The broad-minded statesmen from the cotton States here will not refuse their vote for a measure proposing to check or destroy a fraud that is being perpetrated upon the people of this country, even were temporary inconvenience or loss to follow for their own Heaven-favored land, with a monopoly in cotton itself, now commanding $50 a bale. With cotton manufactories springing up all around them, with the cereals flourishing in every State, with cattle upon a thousand plains, with hogs everywhere, and cows not yet counted by the 1900 census, what damage can come to them through the loss of a market for a few thousand gallons of oil, made from the seed that a few years ago they hauled out for manure? I do not think these brave and noble people who have endured so much and are now advancing so marvelously in material development would have us vote to cripple the great butter and dairy interest of the whole country, in which they have a deep and increasing interest themselves, in order to encourage the manufacture of cotton-seed oil.

As a matter of fact, the 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine manufactured each year and valued at $12,450,000 only contains $207,500 worth of cotton-seed oil, which is only $24,000 to each of the cotton-growing States. Suppose this estimate too low; that $500,000 is nearer right. Then $50,000 for each of these 7 States is a mere bagatelle. The last report shows 17 manufacturers of oleomargarine in 8 States. There were 164 wholesale dealers. There are nearly 10,000,000 people in this country directly interested in the dairy can. The fraudulent sale of oleomargarine hurts each one of them. Shall the 17 have their way against the 10,000,000?

But there is a weightier reason than the value of oil bearing on the minds of my Southern colleagues. They claim that it is an improper exercise of Congressional authority to destroy business through Federal taxation. The opposite view has been held by distinguished authorities. The Supreme Court, in McCulloch vs. Maryland (4 Wheat., 428), says:

> It is admitted that the power of taxing the people and their property is essential to the very existence of the Government and may be legitimately exercised to the utmost extent to which the Government may choose to carry it. The people give to their Government the right of taxing themselves and their property; and as the exigencies of the Government can not be limited, hey prescribe no limits to th e exercise of this right, resting confidently on he interest of the legislator and on the influence of the constituents over their representatives to guard them against its abuse.

Desty, in his work on Taxation, says:

> One purpose of taxation sometimes is to discourage a business, and perhaps put it out of existence, and it is taxed without any idea of protection attending the burden.

Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of McCulloch vs. Maryland, also said:

> That the power to tax involves the power to destroy; that the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create; that there is a plain repugnance in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, with respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control, are propositions not to be denied.

Justice Story, in his work on the Constitution (Book 1, pp. 677, 678), says:

> Nothing is more clear from the history of nations than the fact that the taxing power is very often applied for other purposes than revenue. It is often applied as a virtual prohibition; sometimes to banish a noxious article of consumption, sometimes as a suppression of particular employments.

Justice Woodbury, in the case of Pierce et al. vs. New Hampshire (5 Wheat., 608), said:

> But I go further on this point than some of the courts and wish to meet the case in front and in its worst bearings. If, as in the view of some, these license laws are in the nature of partial or entire prohibitions to sell certain articles as being dangerous to public health and morals, it does not seem to me that their conflict with the Constitution would by any means be clear. Taking for granted that the real design in passing them is the avowed one (prohibition), they would appear entirely defensible as a matter of right, though prohibiting sales.

In Walker's Science of Wealth this rule of taxation is also general:

> The heaviest taxes should be imposed upon those commodities the consumption of which is especially prejudicial to the interests of the people.

I leave to more capable hands the further discussion of this point. I know that it will be contended that this is a drastic measure. It is offered to meet serious conditions and not for the purpose of transferring the earnings of one class to increase the profits of another.

Its provisions when enacted into law will work in harmony with the laws of thirty-two States of the Union.

Oleomargarine, colored in imitation of butter, will have a fair chance. The temptation to perpetrate fraud and deceive customers will be abated, if not entirely removed.

It is the duty of every legislative body to pass the necessary laws to prevent fraud and deception. Nothing grows so fast as crime. Countenance the smallest crime, and it will increase tenfold. License one crime, and there are persons always willing to commit a greater crime and point to the crime licensed as their excuse.

Pass this bill, and 5,000,000 farmers will approve your action, while their children will rise up and call you blessed. Pass this bill, and thousands upon thousands of dealers in butter all through our land will heave a sigh of relief and say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servants."

The patient toiling tillers of the soil, the bone and sinew of the land, the producers, as well as the consumers, who do not often ask legislation at your hands, now urge you to pass a measure that will help resuscitate our common mother earth.

It is the earth alone of all the elements around us that is never found an enemy to man. The great body of waters deluge him with rain, oppress him with hail, and drown him with inundations. The air rushes on in storms and prepares the tempest or lights up the volcanoes, but the earth, gentle and indulgent, ever subservient to the wants of man, spreads his walks with flowers and his table with plenty; returns with interest every good intrusted to her care, and though she produces the poison, still supplies the antidote, though teased more to furnish the luxuries of man than his necessities, yet even to the last she continues her kind indulgence, and when life is over piously hides his remains in her bosom.

[Loud applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, the time of Mr. LAMB having expired,

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut yielded to him five minutes more.

Mr. GAINES. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LAMB. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. Is this 10 per cent tax under the Grout bill a prohibitory tax?

Mr. LAMB. It will very likely have that effect, so far as the colored butter is concerned, but it will not prohibit the manufacture of this article in its natural state. I have no question that more of it will be manufactured after the tax is imposed. A taste will be educated for this article and people will buy it, not under the guise of something else, but buy it for what it is, at what it is worth. If they want to color it they have a right to do so in their own homes.

Mr. BAILEY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, during the early days of this session of Congress House bill 3717, now known as the Grout bill, was introduced, and was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and by the chairman of that committee was referred to a subcommittee of five. Immediately the mail of this subcommittee was flooded with petitions for the passage of the bill and with protests against its passage. The petitions for the passage came from those who were immediately interested in the dairy business, and were nearly all exactly alike, printed upon postal cards, with the address of the different members of the committee printed upon the cards.

These cards and petitions were printed in Chicago, at the headquarters of the National Dairy Union, and were sent to the farmers and dairymen all over the country, with the request that they sign the same and forward to Congress. The protests came from the stock raisers and stock feeders of the country, from the live stock associations, and from the stock exchanges. Almost the entire cotton belt of our country united in protesting against the passing of the bill in the form that it was introduced.

The labor organizations from all over the country also sent in their protests against the bill on the ground that it was putting a tax upon a product that to them had become a staple article of food and one of the necessaries of life. Each one of these great interests also demanded that an opportunity be given them to appear before the committee and give their reasons why they were for or against the bill. In accordance with this request, the subcommittee arranged to give all who were interested a hearing. The first hearing was accorded to the representatives of the National Dairymen's Union. Ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, president, and C. Y. Knight, secretary, with other gentlemen, testified before our committee, representing this association, and advocated the passage of the Grout bill.

Mr. Speaker, the reason given by the friends of the Grout bill for the support of this measure, on its face, is to suppress the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter. It is claimed by the friends of the bill that a very large per cent of oleomargarine that is sold is palmed off upon an unsuspecting public as pure butter. Indeed, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], in his remarks before the House to-day, said 90 per cent of the oleomargarine manufactured was sold as butter.

Mr. Speaker, the evidence before our committee does not bear out the statement made by the gentleman from Vermont. Mr. Wilson, late Commissioner of Internal Revenue, was before the committee, and in his published testimony, on page 177, Commissioner Wilson testifies that not to exceed 10 per cent of oleomargarine is sold for butter, but that 90 per cent of oleomargarine is sold as oleomargarine and that the people who buy it are fully advised of what they are buying. Now, I submit that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is in the best position of any man in the entire country to form an accurate and correct opinion upon this subject, and his official opinion should be given credence by this House and by the country at large over the statement of men who have no data upon which to base their judgment and have formed their opinions solely upon prejudice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no contention upon the part of the friends of the proposed bill that either the manufacturer or wholesale dealer commits any fraud in the sale of oleomargarine, but the whole contention is that the fraud is perpetrated by the retailer, and considerable testimony was introduced showing this fraud. And speaking for myself, and, as I believe I do, for the subcommittee who drafted the substitute bill, it was our honest opinion, after listening to all the testimony, that the Grout bill offered no remedy for the suppression of this fraud, and it was for that reason that we drafted the bill which, at the proper time, will be offered as a substitute for the pending bill.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to read at this point and incorporate into my remarks both the Grout bill and the substitute offered by the subcommittee.

THE GROUT BILL.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese, or any substance in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, transported into any State or Territory, and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon the arrival within the limits of such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted into the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles or substances had been produced in such State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in a separate and distinct form and in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter.

SEC. 2. That on and after July 1, 1901, the tax upon oleomargarine as prescribed in section 8 of the act approved August 2, 1886, and entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not colored in imitation of butter; but when colored in imitation of butter the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 10 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of said act.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. That special tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine shall be imposed as follows: Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600 per annum. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer thereof.

"'Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer therein; but a manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells oleomargarine of his own production only at the place of its manufacture in the original packages, to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer on account of such sales.

"'Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities not greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be regarded as a retail dealer therein.

"'SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word "Oleomargarine" in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word "Oleomargarine" printed on the outside thereof in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put singly by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers and marked, stamped, and branded with the word "Oleomargarine" printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word "Oleomargarine," with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"'Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed, and shall sell only from the original crates or boxes in which they receive the pound or 2-pound prints, bricks, rolls, or lumps.

"'Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months; and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years.'"

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the suppression of fraud in the sale of oleomargarine is the thing to be accomplished, I submit this proposition: The substitute bill closes every avenue of fraud in the sale of oleomargarine as butter, and the Grout bill utterly fails in this purpose. All the Grout bill does is to add 8 cents a pound to the cost of manufacturing oleomargarine and is going entirely upon the theory that this will make the cost so great that the manufacturers will be driven out of business, thereby ruining their industry and confiscating their property; and, indeed, it was brought out in the testimony of Mr. Knight, Governor Hoard, and Mr. Adams, pure-food commissioner of Wisconsin, that this was the avowed purpose of the bill.

But suppose this does not obtain, and the manufacturers of oleomargarine still continue to make their product, I want some one of the friends of the pending bill to tell me in what way the dairy interests are better protected than they are now. Several times during the past year I have gone upon the market in this city and have inquired the retail price of creamery butter and the best grade of oleomargarine. During that time the average price of butter has been 35 cents per pound and oleomargarine 20 cents.

Now add your 8 cents, making oleomargarine worth 28 cents, it is still cheaper than creamery butter by 7 seven cents per pound, and the dishonest dealer will have a greater incentive to sell it for butter, having paid more for the article. On the other hand, the substitute bill provides that oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturers in 1 and 2 pound packages and in no larger or smaller amounts, and that the word "oleomargarine" shall be impressed in the package; then it shall be wrapped with paper upon which is plainly printed the word "oleomargarine," with the name of the manufacturer.

This, of course, will be the thin wrapping paper usually wrapped around pound prints of both butter and oleomargarine. And then they shall place around this package another wrapper, upon which the word "oleomargarine" is printed, and around this the Government revenue stamp is placed, and the size of the letters and the marking shall be under the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; then a penalty is provided for selling or offering to sell oleomargarine that is not put up and wrapped and stamped according to the terms of the substitute bill, thereby preventing, as far as law can prevent, the selling of oleomargarine as butter.

Mr. Speaker, in view of all these facts, I say to this House and to the people of this country that the substitute bill is the true friend and protector of the dairy interests, and that the Grout bill, if enacted into law, will prove a disappointment to its advocates and will fail utterly to accomplish the purpose claimed by its supporters.

But gentlemen ask what protection is given to the patrons of hotels and restaurants if you pass this substitute bill? I answer, he has greater protection than he has under the Grout bill. If the Grout bill is enacted into law, what protection has the man who goes to a restaurant or to a hotel under that bill? Under this law, when these wrappers are put on in this way, no one can buy oleomargarine without it being known to everybody in his establishment that he has bought oleomargarine. At once every man who works for him, every helper, and every waiter knows that he is using oleomargarine. If the Grout bill passes, he can go and buy a 50-pound firkin of oleomargarine and he can remove the stamp and take it to the hotel and tell his servants to place butter upon the table. The protection you have under the substitute is this, that it becomes apparent at once to the help that he is setting butterine on his table. And the hotel keeper that poses as using only butter will at all times be subject to the mercy of his help.

Mr. GAINES. Would they raise the wages of the help?

Mr. BAILEY of Kansas. I can not answer that question, but this thing is sure, that everybody connected with the hotel would know at once that the hotel keeper had taken oleomargarine into his establishment, and the first time that a waiter was discharged he would publish to every guest the deception, if it was practiced. Under the workings of the Grout bill no one would know it. The difference between these two bills is that the substitute gives greater protection to the patrons of hotels and restaurants than the law as it is now or the Grout bill.

Mr. Speaker, up to this point in my remarks I have attempted to discuss the merits and demerits of the bill and substitute purely from the standpoint of protecting the dairy interests and the suppression of fraud in the sale of oleomargarine. But there are other great questions at issue and other potent reasons why the Grout bill should not be enacted into law. In the first place, the Grout bill is class legislation of the most radical kind; in that it seeks to build up by legislation one industry at the expense of another.

It has been the policy of our Government in the past to use its taxing power to protect American interests and American industry against foreign competition, but if this bill becomes a law it will be the first time in our history that the taxing power of the Government has been used to protect one American industry against another American industry. And I believe it is clearly a perversion of the taxing power of our Government. And I call the attention of this House to this fact: You pass this bill and you establish a precedent that will encourage monopoly and lay the foundation for commercial oppression. Pass this bill and any industry, when it realizes that it will be the loser with competition by some innovation that science or ingenuity has devised, can point to our action to-day as a precedent, and by manufacturing sentiment, based upon prejudice, can come to Congress and suppress their competitor by legislative action.

Mr. Speaker, as a raiser of horses on my farm in Kansas, I have as much right to come and ask you to suppress the automobile and electric cars, because, forsooth, from time immemorial the horse has been used to draw carriages and street cars, and these innovations upon his time-honored right threatens what has been a legitimate and lucrative industry. And in this way and by such legislation as this we will create the mother of trusts and monopolies. But some gentlemen will claim that this legislation can be justified under the police power.

Mr. Speaker, I deny this proposition, for even the most ardent advocates of the Grout bill never have during this session of Congress attempted to claim that either the public health or public morals of our people are prejudiced by the sale of oleomargarine as oleomargarine. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if there has been anything established by the testimony taken before our subcommittee it is this, that oleomargarine is a healthful and wholesome article of food, and I quote but a part of the large amount of testimony that was before our committee bearing upon this question:

OPINIONS OF LEADING SCIENTISTS.

Prof. C. F. Chandler, professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York, says: "I have studied the question of its use as food, in comparison with the ordinary butter made from cream, and have satisfied myself that it is quite as valuable as the butter from the cow. The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food."

Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "Butterine is, in my opinion, quite as valuable as a nutritive agent as butter itself. It is perfectly wholesome, and is desirable as an article of food. I can see no reason why butterine should not be an entirely satisfactory equivalent for ordinary butter, whether considered from the physiological or commercial standpoint."

Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey, says: "I am able to say with confidence that it contains nothing whatever which is injurious as an article of diet, but, on the contrary, is essentially identical with the best fresh butter, and is superior to much of the butter made from cream alone which is found in the market. The conditions of its manufacture involve a degree of cleanliness and consequent purity in the product such as are by no means necessarily or generally attained in the ordinary making of butter from cream."

Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station and professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College, New Haven, says: "It is a product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is for all ordinary and culinary purposes the full equivalent of good butter made from cream. I regard the manufacture of oleomargarine as a legitimate and beneficent industry."

Prof. S. C. Caldwell, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., says: "While not equal to fine butter in respect to flavor, it nevertheless contains all the essential ingredients of butter, and since it contains a smaller proportion of volatile fats than is found in genuine butter it is, in my opinion, less liable to become rancid. It can not enter into competition with fine butter, but so far as it may serve to drive poor butter out of the market its manufacture will be a public benefit."

Prof. C. A. Goessmann, of Amherst Agricultural College, says: "Oleomargarine butter compares in general appearance and in taste very favorably with the average quality of the better kinds of dairy butter in our markets. In its composition it resembles that of ordinary dairy butter, and in its keeping quality, under corresponding circumstances, I believe it will surpass the former, for it contains a smaller percentage of those constituents which, in the main, cause the well-known rancid taste and odor of a stored butter."

Prof. Charles P. Williams, professor in the Missouri State University, says: "It is a pure and wholesome article of food, and in this respect, as well as in respect to its chemical composition, fully the equivalent of the best quality of dairy butter."

Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, professor of physiology in the University of New York, says: "I consider that each and every article employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine butter is perfectly pure and wholesome; that oleomargarine butter differs in no essential manner from butter made from cream. In fact, oleomargarine butter possesses the advantage over natural butter of not decomposing so readily, as it contains fewer volatile fats. In my opinion, oleomargarine is to be considered a great discovery, a blessing for the poor, and in every way a perfectly pure, wholesome, and palatable article of food."

Prof. W. O. Atwater, director of the United States Government Agricultural Experiment Station at Washington, says: "It contains essentially the same ingredients as natural butter from cow's milk. It is perfectly wholesome and healthy and has a high nutritious value."

Prof. Henry E. Alvord, formerly of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, and president of the Maryland College of Agriculture, and now chief of the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture, and one of the best butter makers in the country, says: "The great bulk of butterine and its kindred products is as wholesome, cleaner, and in many respects better than the low grades of butter, of which so much reaches the market."

Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University, says: "As a result of my examination, made both with the microscope and the delicate chemical tests applicable to such cases, I pronounce butterine to be wholly and unequivocally free from any deleterious or in the least objectionable substances. Carefully made physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter."

Professor Wiley, Chief of the Division of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, also appeared before the committee and testified to the nutritive and wholesome qualities of oleomargarine.

The Committee on Manufactures of the United States Senate, in a report dated February 28, 1900, finds, from the evidence before it, "that the product known commercially as oleomargarine is healthful and nutritious."

Judge Hughes, of the Federal court of Virginia, in a decision says:

"It is a fact of common knowledge that oleomargarine has been subjected to the severest scientific scrutiny, and has been adopted by every leading government in Europe as well as America for use by their armies and navies. Though not originally invented by us, it is a gift of American enterprise and progressive invention to the world. It has become one of the conspicuous articles of interstate commerce and furnishes a large income to the General Government annually."

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention of the House to the men and the great industries who sent their written protests and appeared in person before the subcommittee in opposition to the passage of the Grout bill. They came representing the great live-stock interests of our country. The National Live Stock Association, at their annual meeting in 1900, held at Fort Worth, Tex., passed resolutions against the passage of the Grout bill, and sent a delegation to Washington, who appeared before our committee and presented the memorial. Each one of the great live-stock exchanges sent their petitions and remonstrated against the injustice to the live-stock interests of the country that would be perpetrated by the enactment of such legislation as is proposed by the pending bill.

And men who are engaged in the fattening of cattle and hogs sent their individual protests. Statistics tell us that there were five million cattle slaughtered in the United States during the past year. The average bullock produces about fifty pounds of oleo oil, and the difference between the price of oleo oil and tallow is 4 cents a pound. Now, if there are fifty pounds in the average bullock worth more by 4 cents a pound as oleo than as tallow, there is a net loss of $2 on each bullock, and if this industry is stamped out of existence there will be a loss to the cattle raisers of this country of $10,000,000 annually, and there will be a similar loss of $3,000,000 to the hog raisers of our country, making a loss of $13,000,000 annually to our live-stock interests.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAILEY of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you include in that the 150,000,000 pounds of oleo oil exported abroad?

Mr. BAILEY of Kansas. I do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why?

Mr. BAILEY of Kansas. I will tell you why.

Mr. TAWNEY. How does this bill affect the oleo exported abroad?

Mr. BAILEY of Kansas. Just in the same way that the exploiting of embalmed beef and decayed canned beef closed the markets of Germany against the products of the great animal industries of this country. To-day, in the American Congress, you propose to take up another by-product and discredit it to the world by putting the seal of national condemnation upon it, and the agrarian feeling on the other side of the Atlantic that closed the markets of Germany against the products of the farms and the ranges will close their markets against oleo oil that we are now exporting.

This is the answer I give to the gentleman. It is true that not all the oleo oil that is manufactured is used in oleomargarine, but is exported; but I insist that the same rule will obtain with regard to this that has obtained as to every other article produced by the farmers of this country against which we have legislated at home. The action of this Congress to-day, if you pass the Grout bill, will give the agrarians of Europe the excuse they so much desire to close their markets against this by-product of the great meat interests of our country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another class of people who are entitled to some consideration at the hands of this Congress when we come to passing such legislation as is proposed by the pending bill. They did not appear before our committee in person, but they exercised that right that belongs to every American citizen, however humble he may be—the right to petition Congress to redress their wrongs. These petitions came from the poorer class of our people, who find in oleomargarine a satisfactory substitute for high-priced butter.

And from labor organizations everywhere petitions have come to members of Congress protesting against the passage of the Grout bill, that would add nearly one-half to the cost of an article of food that is wholesome, nutritious, and that they desire to buy. In this city to-day standard creamery butter is selling at 35 cents per pound, the best grade of oleomargarine at 20 cents, and the oleomargarine is bought by thousands of people who are unable to buy butter at the present prices. And, as a member of the American Congress, I will not be a party to adding 8 cents per pound to an article of food that goes upon the table of the man who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow.

But gentlemen upon the other side say if these people desire oleomargarine they can get it at 1¼ cents a pound cheaper under the Grout bill, if they will be content to use it without color. Now, oleomargarine in its uncolored state is as white as the paper I hold in my hand. And it is useless for men to argue that it will be as acceptable to anyone in this state. Our eye largely controls our appetite. Any article that is placed before us that is pleasing to the eye is relished much more than an article equally as wholesome that is unpleasant or offensive to the eye.

And, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is an injustice and a wrong to place the brand of poverty and social ostracism upon an article of food of the poorer class of our people when by so doing you neither conserve their morals or their health. In this connection I wish to introduce the testimony of Dr. Wiley, Chief Chemist of the Department of Agriculture, that bears directly upon this question:

Representative ALLEN. What is the result of your experiments as to digestion?

Dr. WILEY. My impression in regard to the digestibility of butter as compared to oleomargarine is formed from a purely theoretical standpoint, without having tried experiments on human beings and noted the time of digestion, because I do not know that that has been accomplished, and more than that the actual time of digestion is a matter of very little consequence, provided the food is digested. In fact, it is a very good thing that we do not digest all our food instantaneously, because otherwise we would be hungry after one meal before we would get the next. The fact that a food is slow of digestion, like fruit, for instance, is no reason that it is unwholesome. No one would say that meat is necessarily more wholesome than fruit because it is more easily digested. You can digest meat in much less time than you can digest fruit, and yet nobody claims that fruits are unwholesome.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You would say, then, that butter is more quickly digested than oleomargarine?

Dr. WILEY. I believe it is more easily digested; that it requires less effort.

The CHAIRMAN. You think that is the reasonable inference?

Dr. WILEY. From a chemical study of the composition of butter, it is reasonable to infer that it requires less effort on the part of the vital organs to ferment the butter, and that is the reason why I say that I believe butter is a more digestible substance, more easily digested, more quickly digested than oleomargarine.

Now, the value of a food is measured solely by two standards. First, its palatability, and second, its nutritive properties. You need not try to convince human beings that palatability is not an element in nutrition, because it is, and yet you get a great deal more out of a food if it is palatable in its taste and attractive in its appearance, because the attitude of the digestive organs changes absolutely with the appearance of the food. If you were to put butter up in the form of ink, it might be just as digestible, and all that, and yet it would not be so useful as a food. The appearance of a food has a great deal to do with the attitude of the digestive organs toward it.

A MEMBER. It is simply a reflex action from it?

Dr. WILEY (continuing). Yes; because the mind, the mental attitude, influences the secretion of the ferments which produce the digestion, and hence we must have some regard to that appearance.

Representative WILLIAMS. Have you read this Grout bill?

Dr. WILEY. Yes, sir.

Representative WILLIAMS. Is there anything in the Grout bill which executes the law, from the pure-food standpoint, any better than any existing legislation?

Dr. WILEY. Of course, I am not lawyer enough to give an opinion in respect to that; but what I want to call to your attention on this point is this matter of color.

Now, I am not a Prohibitionist in regard to color. I think if people want to color their food with harmless materials it is perfectly proper that they should do so, provided the purchaser understands in buying a food that he is buying an artificially colored one, and let him be the judge. If he wants the artificially colored article, all right.

I sent out just a few weeks ago into the markets of this town to buy some oleomargarine and butter. I also got a piece of white silk. I took the samples of oleomargarine and butter which I got, took about the amount which one would use in an ordinary meal, and I dyed this silk with the coloring matter which these samples contained. I could not find on the markets of this town a sample of uncolored butter nor of uncolored oleomargarine; but I did find this—that instead of securing uniformity by coloring butter we get the greatest disparity in appearance.

One argument which has been advanced in support of coloring butter is that it is made uniform. But the point is not a good one, because the people who color butter do not color it uniformly. We find the most remarkable variations in color. Some of it is almost red and, on the other hand, there [exhibiting a piece of silk] is a pale yellow, closely resembling the natural tint of butter.

Now, these colors are all coal-tar dyes, every one of them. The vegetable dyes, like annotto, have almost ceased to be used in coloring butter. You may find them in some localities. Some States require that butter be colored with annotto and not with coal-tar dyes, but every one of these is a coal-tar dye, and you will see by the variations in tint (they do not show very well in artificial light) that the amount of color in the samples was very different. The same amount of material was used in each case. Now, compare these two [exhibiting samples]. That [indicating] was a very light-colored sample; this [indicating] was a very heavily colored sample.

Dr. Wiley at this point submitted the following statement:

"COLORING MATTERS USED FOR COLORING BUTTER AND ITS IMITATIONS.

"Annotto, the principal vegetable dye used, is mainly composed of the pulp surrounding the fruit Bixa orellana, growing in the East and West Indies and South America. Allen states that two different kinds reach England, namely, the Spanish annotto, imported from Brazil, and the flag or French annotto, which comes from Cayenne.

"Annotto contains two yellow coloring matters which have been given names derived from the botanical names of the plants.

"Bixin, $C_{25}H_{34}O_5$, is one of these, but its properties and chemical relationships have been imperfectly studied. When separated in the form of its soda salt it has a reddish color.

"Olellin is described as yellow and soluble in water and alcohol. These two coloring matters combined, in annotto, give the substance its characteristic orange-yellow color.

"Coal-tar dyes.—When diazobenzene-sulphonic acid acts on amids, with an alkaline solution of phenols, a series of coloring matters is obtained ranging from yellow to deep orange or red. These dyes are called tropæolins, because the shades of color they produce resemble those of the nasturtium flower (Tropæolum magnus). They usually occur in commerce as soda salts, and are distinguished according to their shades, tropæolin Y being the most yellow, and the tropæolin 0, 00, and so on, as the shades become redder. The shade of the color becomes redder by the substitution of toluene, xylene, or cumene for benzene.

"Two of these dyes which have been used for coloring foods are the acid or fast yellow and the orange yellow or orange G.

"The acid yellow, or the fast yellow, is the soda salt of amido-azobenzene sulphonic acid, represented by the formula

"$C_6H_4(SO_3Na).\ N:N.\ C_6H_4.NH_2$.

Orange G is sodium salt of benzene—azobetanaphtol-disulphonic acid, having the formula

$$"C_6H_5\,N:N.\,C_{10}H_4\begin{cases}(SO_3Na)_2\\OH_2\end{cases}$$

"This class of dyes is also known as sulphonated-azo dyes.

"Victoria yellow has also been reported as a coloring material for butter. This substance is a mixture of the sodium salts of the dinitro-ortho and dinitro-paracresol $C_6H_2(CH_3).(NO_2)_2.ONa$."

Representative WILLIAMS. Do you get the colors in these samples from butter?

Dr. WILEY. From butter and oleomargarine, indiscriminately.

Representative HENRY. Are we to understand that aniline dyes are used in coloring oleomargarine and butter?

Dr. WILEY. Yes, sir; almost exclusively.

Representative HENRY. I supposed that annotto was the coloring matter used.

Dr. WILEY. I doubt if you can find a sample of butter in this town colored with annotto.

Representative HENRY. Annotto is used all through the creameries of the North, so far as I know.

Representative WILLIAMS. Perhaps the law in Connecticut requires butter to be colored with annotto.

Dr. WILEY. They use coal-tar dyes in the product sold here.

Representative WILLIAMS. Do you regard the aniline dyes as equally wholesome?

Dr. WILEY. I do not say that coloring your intestines saffron injures your health. The amount of color used in these substances, however, is very small. I do not myself fancy eating artificial colors. I would rather have the good old-fashioned butter, with its natural color, whether deep or light, and I believe that we ought to educate the taste of our people in that way. I believe we are ruining the taste of our people by coloring our butter; and the farther south you go, the deeper the color gets.

Representative HENRY. Pardon me again—do you think these aniline dyes affect the flavor of butter?

Dr. WILEY. No, sir; oh, no. These dyes are absolutely without flavor.

Representative HENRY. Wherein are they unwholesome?

Dr. WILEY. I did not say they were. I said I did not, myself, fancy eating them.

Representative NEVILLE. Do you think the fact that people color butter is any excuse for people being permitted to color oleomargarine, if, as a matter of fact, it results in putting butter and oleomargarine onto people who do not want to eat it in that shape?

Representative BAILEY. Then reverse the question.

Representative NEVILLE. Yes, sir; answer it, and then reverse it?

Dr. WILEY. I believe that every food product should have the same right before the law. I do not see why there should be a distinction.

Representative BAKER. You stated a minute ago that the manufacturer of every food product has the right to make it palatable to the consumer.

Dr. WILEY. And to make it attractive in its taste, provided he tells what is in it—provided he does not injure the health of the consumer.

Representative NEVILLE. You just stated that you would prefer to have butter without coloring?

Dr. WILEY. Yes, sir; I prefer it so, very much, for myself.

Representative NEVILLE. So do I, and I apprehend there are a great many people in the same position.

Dr. WILEY. I prefer it very much; and having been brought up in the dairy industry, and being interested in the subject, I believe we are injuring our dairy industries by permitting the coloring of butter.

Representative HENRY. That has been for years my contention with butter makers—that the dairy interests were injuring their own products by artificial coloring.

Dr. WILEY. Yes; that is my idea, my conviction. You can get uncolored butter in New York; you can go and get it at Delmonico's and some other high-priced restaurants; and the fact that the uncolored butter brings the highest price in the market ought to be an object lesson to our dairymen that they are standing in their own light when they color their butter. Now, if they would let the manufacturers color oleomargarine, and would keep butter at its natural color, there would be no difficulty in discriminating between the two.

Representative BAILEY. Dr. Wiley, let me ask you this question: Do you consider oleomargarine a wholesome article of food?

Dr. WILEY. I do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the testimony which was given before our committee by a man who is at the head of his division in our Government service, whose duty it has been for years to make a scientific study of the question of pure and wholesome food. And why has not the poor man the same right, under the law, to have the articles that go upon his table made as attractive and pleasant to the eye as the articles that go upon the table of his more wealthy and opulent brother? And, again, I ask what right in morals or equity have the makers of butter to demand that the manufacturer of oleomargarine shall be taxed for coloring his product when they reserve the right and do color their product as their fancy or judgment shall dictate?

But, says some gentleman, butter when it is colored is still butter. I grant that; but there are different qualities and standards of butter, and when during the winter months butter is colored, what is the purpose in doing it? Everyone knows it is to give it the tint of June butter, so that it can be sold for something different than it really is; the deception only differs in degree. And in justification of this point I desire to call the attention of the House to what is known as renovated or process butter. Now, to use the argument of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY], this renovated butter is still butter. What is renovated butter? Every man in the country knows that the country store buys little lumps of butter brought in by the housewife and traded for the necessities of the family.

Now, a cleanly housewife will bring in a good quality of butter, while a slovenly housewife brings in a bad quality; but it is all dumped into one barrel and bought at a very low price during the grass months of the year. It makes no difference to the country merchant whether the butter is well made or not, whether it comes from a cleanly woman or slovenly one, the price paid by the merchant is the same. He pays the same price to Mrs. Smith, who makes good butter, as to Mrs. Jones, who makes bad. It is all dumped into the same barrel and is shipped out and sold to the man in the renovating business for "process butter." I hold in my hand a letter which shows the fraud that is perpetrated on the people in regard to this kind of butter, which I will read:

WICHITA, KANS., November 15, 1900.

DEAR SIR: For about seven months during the year 1900 I was manager of the meat market in this city, which was run in the same building and in connection with the Wichita Creamery Company, both businesses being owned by A. E. Sweet. I am thoroughly familiar, by personal observation, with the process of butter making in the Wichita creamery.

In this institution no cream whatever is used. Country butter is bought in large quantities from grocers, or whoever will ship it, from all stations in this section.

This butter is first sorted as well as possible; it is then melted by steam and colored. In the spring and early summer this melted butter is run into barrels and allowed to stand until such time as butter becomes scarce, when it is remelted and put in the churns.

After this butter is melted it is strained through metal sieves into churns. Ice water is then turned into the churns and the churns started. The object is to wash the butter and to harden it. The water is then drawn off, and buttermilk obtained from the creameries, salt, and crushed ice are put in the churns. The churns are again operated. This process is intended to resalt the butter, give it a butter flavor, and harden it.

After remaining over night in the refrigerator the product is molded into bricks, or otherwise packed for shipment and put on the market. The only real creamery butter sold by the Wichita Creamery Company is what has been bought from other creameries.

This creamery has received as high as 9,000 pounds of country butter per day and has had as high as 150,000 pounds stored in barrels waiting for the second melting.

Very truly, yours,

J. T. WEIGHTMAN.

Hon. W. J. BAILEY, Baileyville, Kans.

And still another letter, from a gentleman who worked for the Parker Creamery Company, at Hutchinson, Kans., showing the way this creamery company renovates rancid and stale butter and turns it out as creamery butter:

The Parker Creamery Company receive from 300 to 500 pounds of rancid or stale butter per day. The average the year round would probably be nearer 500 pounds. This butter comes to the creamery in barrels, tubs, and jars, or, in other words, packed in anything that is convenient for the merchant to dump it into. Some of it at times is fair butter, and a part of it is simply stuff that looked as though it would be impossible to cleanse and get it into shape to make it decent even to look at. The butter is first weighed and then dumped into a vat which has a steam connection.

The butter is melted by the steam and is left to stand for five or six hours; then it is siphoned over to two vats placed above the vat in which this butter was first melted, and then strained through a sack. To this butter, as melted, is then added from 3 to 5 pounds of soda, and thoroughly mixed; then ice is added, by which to cool it to the right temperature.

This is drawn off into the churn, in which is fresh buttermilk, then churned until the butter is broke. Then from 3 to 5 gallons of glucose is added and churned for about twenty minutes longer. The buttermilk is drawn off, more glucose added, and then thoroughly worked, rinsed off with fresh water, and salted thoroughly, taken out in tubs, and printed in the same style that they print their separator butter, and put on the market as creamery butter No. 2.

And in this same manner renovating or processing butter is carried on all over our country. At Elgin, Ill., that has grown to be a synonym for pure butter, there is located one of these process creameries.

Hucksters will go out into the country and buy butter from the farmer and country stores, and in the hot, unseasonable weather of summer, when it is in a condition unfit, as j dged by the eye, for human food, they bring it in and sell it to these butter factories—the so-called creameries—which will renovate that butter and place it upon the market as "Elgin creamery butter" or "Elgin creamery butter No. 2;" and you and I buy it in the belief that we are buying pure, fresh, sweet butter. And according to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] no fraud is perpetrated, for it is still butter.

I speak of this to show that the Grout bill, while it will protect men who carry on the fraudulent sale of butter, undertakes to suppress, if it can, the business of men who deal in a legitimate article that comes into competition with butter.

I repeat—for this is the keynote of this whole question—that the Grout bill does not close one single avenue of fraud, while the substitute proposed by the minority of the committee will close, as we believe, every possibility of oleomargarine being sold for anything more or less than what it is.

Some of the gentlemen who are defending the Grout bill seem to be very zealous of the welfare and interests of the farmers of our country, and claim that this bill is the outgrowth of a demand for legislation in their interests. Mr. Speaker, I am a farmer myself, a farmer who lives upon and conducts his farm, and I challenge the statement that there is a demand by the farmers of this country for such legislation as is contemplated by this bill. That there is a demand for a law that will prevent the selling of oleomargarine as butter is true, and I join most earnestly in that demand.

The National Dairy Union have exploited the idea that the Grout bill meets this demand. Mr. Speaker, four out of five of the members of the subcommittee before whom the hearings on this bill were taken, after listening to all the testimony, are of the opinion that the Grout bill will not prevent the fraud which is perpetrated by dishonest retail dealers in selling oleomargarine as butter, and, inspired with an honest purpose to meet the demands of the farmers and dairy people, and in fact all classes of people who believe in fair play and honest competition, drafted what is known as the substitute bill, and for which eight votes were cast in the Committee on Agriculture when the subcommittee made its report to the full committee.

I wish to call the attention of the House to this fact: Every ingredient that enters into the manufacture of oleomargarine is as much a product of the farm as is butter. Oleo oil, which is obtained from the caul fat of the beef; neutral oil, made from the pure leaf lard of the hog, cotton-seed oil, grown upon the farms of the South, salt, and coloring matter are the constituent parts of oleomargarine. Oleo oil, neutral oil, and cotton-seed oil, I I repeat, are as much products of the farms of our country as butter itself. I desire at this point to read the reasons given by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture for their support of the substitute bill in opposition to the pending bill, which are as follows:

One of the claims made by the friends of the Grout bill is that it will protect the interests of the farmer. We call attention to the fact that every ingredient that enters into the manufacture of oleomargarine is as much a product of the farm as is butter and that such ingredients are made more valuable on account of their use in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Your committee has had before it representatives of both the cattle and hog raisers of the country, and also representatives of the cotton industry, and they are unanimous in their opinion that their business will be materially injured and the price of their product lowered by the passage of the Grout bill and the destruction of the oleomargarine industry.

The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine does not interfere with the growth and prosperity of the butter industry. Statistics show a much greater percentage in the increase of the production of butter than in the production of oleomargarine. Though similar in ingredients, they are not strictly competing, as the oleomargarine is practically all bought by the poorer class of our people.

In justification of this statement, we have received a large number of petitions from the labor organizations of our country, protesting against the passage of the bill for the above-given reasons.

It being possible to keep oleomargarine in a sweet and sound condition much longer than butter, it is also used extensively in the mining and lumber camps, on exploring and hunting expeditions, on ships at sea, and by armies in the field.

The claim made by the friends of the Grout bill that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine has greatly depreciated the price of butter will not obtain when it is known that there is now manufactured in the United States nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds of butter annually, and it is positively known that there were only 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine manufactured last year, which shows that the amount of oleomargarine produced is about 4 per cent of the amount of butter produced. Therefore the argument that oleomargarine in any material sense controls the price of butter is not justified by the facts.

The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine have in no way depreciated the price of butter, as more butter is being sold at higher price in this country than ever before, as shown by testimony.

It is a suggestive fact that those sections of our country which are most exclusively devoted to the dairy interests are blessed with the greatest prosperity, as brought out in the testimony of ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, before our committee, who said that a few years ago land was worth only $15 an acre in that State, but as the State began to be devoted more exclusively to the dairy interests land had rapidly appreciated in price, and that farmers had gotten out of debt, had paid their mortgages, and the land is now worth the sum of $80 per acre, this price averaging much higher than agricultural lands in other parts of the country.

In conclusion, the members of the Committee on Agriculture who have joined in this minority report beg to assure the House and the country in the most solemn manner possible that it has been their earnest intention, and is now their determination, to do everything possible to be done to enforce the sale of oleomargarine as oleomargarine and to prevent its sale as butter. To prevent fraud and not to stamp out an industry has been and is our purpose. We believe that it ought to be the sole purpose of all legislation and the sole motive of all just men.

Mr. Speaker, these reasons given by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture give in a concise and clear manner the reasons why the substitute bill should become a law. Pass the substitute bill, and I believe this vexing question will be eliminated from political discussion; pass the Grout bill, and I believe it means the continuation of the embarrassing agitation that has taken the time and attention of Congress for years. The people who make butter ask protection; the people who eat butter ask protection. The people who desire to eat oleomargarine protest against the Grout bill. The farmers and stock raisers object to the discrimination against their products. The substitute bill meets the requirements of all and should become a law. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GROUT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY].

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, two minutes will not afford anyone a very wide opportunity to discuss the merits of this measure.

I believe that there are in Pennsylvania at least 100,000 dairymen watching to-day the result of our action on this bill. I believe the sentiment is universal with every man living upon a Pennsylvania farm in favor of the passage of this measure; and not alone from Pennsylvania, but from every dairy State in the Union comes up the demand for the passage of the Grout bill. Whether this be an absolutely perfect measure or not I am not prepared to state; but the fact that it will control or regulate this traffic is evident by the opposition that is called out here on this occasion.

The Agricultural Committee of the Fifty-third Congress had under investigation the adulteration of foods and food products. We found that people were grinding up cocoanut shells and selling the product for pepper. We found that coffee berries were being imitated so closely that the human eye could not distinguish the genuine berry from the imitation. And we proposed legislation forbidding the imitation of the genuine coffee berry. And when I have heard gentlemen on this side, representatives of the cotton-seed interest, opposing this measure because the cotton-seed product enters into oleomargarine, I am reminded of the reason we could not pass the bill to insure to the people pure coffee, to suppress the imitation of which I have spoken. We could not pass that bill because there was a man over in New Jersey who said that it would hurt his clay bank from which that imitation coffee berry was made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, nothing that I can say will prevent the passage of this bill. We have reached a time in American politics when the greatest number will represent the survival of the fittest, and when the taxing power of the Government is to be used to destroy one industry in the interest of another.

I point out to the House the principle upon which I stand on this question by quoting very briefly from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of the Loan Association vs. Topeka, 20 Wallace's United States Reports. I read from the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller:

Of all the powers conferred upon government, that of taxation is most liable to abuse. Given a purpose or object for which taxation may be lawfully used, and the extent of its exercise is in its very nature unlimited. It is true that express limitation on the amount of tax to be levied or the things to be taxed may be imposed by constitution or statute; but in most instances for which taxes are levied, as the support of government, the prosecution of war, the national defense, any limitation is unsafe. The entire resources of the people should, in some instances, be at the disposal of the Government.

The power to tax is therefore the strongest, the most pervading of all the powers of Government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, that the power to tax is the power to destroy. A striking instance of the truth of the proposition is seen in the fact that the existing tax of 10 per cent imposed by the United States on the circulation of all other banks than the national bank drove out of existence every State bank of circulation within a year or two after its passage. This power can as readily be employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other if there is no implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised.

To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.

* * * * * * *

We have established, we think, beyond cavil that there can be no lawful tax which is not laid for a public purpose. It may not be easy to draw the line in all cases so as to decide what is a public purpose in this sense and what is not.

It is undoubtedly the duty of the legislature which imposes or authorizes municipalities to impose a tax to see that it is not to be used for purposes of private interest instead of a public use, and the courts can only be justified in interposing when a violation of this principle is clear and the reason for interference cogent. And in deciding whether, in the given case, the object for which the taxes are assessed falls upon the one side or the other of this line, they must be governed mainly by the course and usage of the Government, the objects for which taxes have customarily and by long course of legislation been levied, what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether State or municipal. Whatever lawfully pertains to this and is sanctioned by time and the acquiescence of the people, may well be held to belong to the public use and proper for the maintenance of good government, though this may not be the only criterion of rightful taxation.

But in the case before us, in which the towns are authorized to contribute aid by way of taxation to any class of manufacturers, there is no difficulty in holding that this is not such a public purpose as we have been considering. If it be said that a benefit results as to the local public of a town by establishing manufactures, the same may be said of any other business or pursuit which employs capital or labor. The merchant, the mechanic, the innkeeper, the banker, the builder, the steamboat owner, are equally promoters of the public good and equally deserving the aid of the citizens by forced contributions. No line can be drawn in favor of the manufacturer which would not open the coffers of the public Treasury to the importunities of two-thirds of the business men of the city or town.

That is the principle upon which I shall proceed for a few minutes in my opposition to this bill. Step by step this aggressive purpose has been manifested by the introduction of legislation in this House. I was a member of the House when the first oleomargarine bill was introduced. It was presented and pushed at that time by the same dairy association that stands behind this bill; and the sole argument in favor of it was the claim asserted by General Hatch, of Missouri, the president of that association, before the committee of which I was a member—that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine was deleterious to the public health; that this article contained deleterious ingredients. Long before the hearing before the committee was over General Hatch, with that frankness which always marked his career, backed down wholly and entirely from that proposition, and from that day to this we have never heard a word about the bad character of this article as a food product, but instead we have the argument that the manufacture of this product is tramping on somebody's toes, and the taxing power of the Government must be brought to bear to destroy a rival industry.

I have voted for these agricultural benefits solidly and steadily all the time, so long as I could apologize to my conscience by saying that the taxation was for some incidental and collateral purpose and not for the purpose inveighed against by the Supreme Court of the United States. So I voted for the oleomargarine bill. I voted for and championed on this floor and made the report in favor of the filled-cheese bill. I supported the mixed-flour bill upon the ground urged by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, that the mingling or mixing of that flour was endangering public health.

The legislation of Congress taxing a specific article for the purpose of regulating and controlling its sale because of alleged or supposed infirmity of the character of the article is necessarily in and of itself vicious and inappropriate. It was never intended in the formation of government, either State or national, that the taxing power of the Government should be used in execution of its police power. A government is weak beyond comparison that can not prevent the sale of deleterious articles of food; and I believe now that had the ingenuity and the zeal of the gentlemen who are pushing this oleomargarine bill been applied with half the vigor in the direction of a general revision, organization, and reenactment of the pure-food laws of the country, we might have had a system of laws guaranteeing the people of the United States against the incursion of poisoned food into the stomachs of our people, but there is no zeal on that subject.

The Committee on Agriculture of the House, which improperly by some means secured this bill, which is strictly a revenue bill, strictly belonging to the Committee on Ways and Means, has not worried itself about poisoned pepper, the vile Vermont compounds called maple sirup, the vile sugars coming from the tree manufactures of the States—nothing of that.

It was the Ways and Means Committee that reported the filled-cheese bill and the mixed-flour bill, both of which were justified upon the score of actual adulteration and actual injury to the public health. No zeal has been manifested, so far as I know, in that direction, and this Congress will expire without anything beyond a feeble effort to right the enormous wrongs under which the country is suffering. But an article of food called for, desired, consumed by one-fourth of the people of the United States is set upon upon the specious plea that our people are not smart enough to detect a counterfeit and that the ingenuity of legislation does not rise to the capacity of providing remedies except by the all-pervading power of taxation to destroy this evil.

I know no reason why the taxing power of this Government should be brought to bear to suppress a good commodity, a splendid food product, while there is no sincere and vigorous effort made to suppress deleterious food products. What has been done along this line in this Congress? Ah, Mr. Speaker, the whole movement is unfortunately discolored and tainted by the deliberate purpose manifested to build up one industry at the expense of another. And so, Mr. Speaker, we have gone on, step by step, until there seems to be nothing further and no other avenue by which to apply a correct principle of law, and we are now engaged in a business, confessedly a deliberate business, to destroy an industry producing a product not injurious to public health, but, on the contrary, useful to the people of the country as a food product, and prevent practically its manufacture altogether; a product that is widely sought for by purchasers and consumers of such a commodity in the United States.

We are asked now to destroy the manufacture and sale of it, and thus put money into the pockets of another class of the American people. It is useless for us to deny the fact. It is manifest to all men. It shows for itself plainly in the legislation we propose. It lacks frankness for gentlemen to get up on the floor of the House and say that that is not the purpose, and that there is no such idea in view. The bill itself is so plain that there can be no mistake as to its operation. The bill is one for the benefit of the butter seller, and I would like to know one butter buyer in the United States who favors the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I know of men, or have heard of them, who do not hesitate to buy horses or diseased cattle or sheep and impose them upon the buyers of horses and cattle throughout the country as sound animals. Everybody knows that that condition of things exists. Why not, then, put such a tax as you propose on oleomargarine upon the buyers of horses and cattle and sheep so as to protect other people throughout the country from being imposed upon by diseased or unsound animals? These are sold in the market constantly, day after day. They are sold throughout all the States of the Union. We all know that to be a fact.

Mr. Speaker, this question goes a great deal beyond that. The honest man, of course, will not impose upon his neighbor in that regard. And, fortunately, in this case the honest man manfully comes to the front as a witness in this business, and here is the testimony of a thoroughly honest man regarding this question of manufacture, which I shall insert in my speech.

It will be seen by the testimony throughout, a large portion of which I append to my speech, that the men who came here to prosecute this enterprise boldly announced that they proposed this legislation for the direct and deliberate purpose of destroying the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. That is to say, they come here to procure legislation that shall put into the hands of the United States authorities a weapon that shall be used to destroy the production of a certain article of food, confessedly nutritious and wholesome, confessedly in great demand among the people, for the sole and simple purpose of grasping the market of the United States in the interest of their own products. Read the testimony. See how they were compelled at last to admit that that was the sole and single purpose they had in view. The argument of fraud has no force with those who understand the facts. It will be seen by a careful examination of the testimony that the ground of their complaint is the aggressive character of this product, which is growing in popularity, crowding in the markets the sale of butter. In all this line of testimony there is not one word said about fraud, except as it affects the sale of butter.

So it may as well be quietly and conscientiously conceded that we are entering for the first time confessedly, openly, and above board upon the work of the extermination of a great food product with the sole and single purpose of the benefit to another industry that will grow out of this legislation.

Now, I ask gentlemen who favor the pending bill, what is the difference between taxing the product itself or making it impossible to manufacture it by legislation? Either proposition would lead to the same constitutional objection. We must confront the question whether the Supreme Court would permit such an enactment to become a law. Is it possible that one industry in the United States with the largest number of beneficiaries in its ranks may come to a legislative body and make it impossible to manufacture an article infinitely valuable to the people as a food product, and not deleterious to the public health, a product that is cheap and desirable in many of the households of the land—I say is it possible that one industry in this country can come here and absolutely destroy the possibility of the manufacture of such a competitor?

We are placed in a very peculiar condition when the legislators of the House of Representatives say to the people of the country that they do not possess ingenuity enough to pass legislation here which would prevent fraud in the sale of one of the most important food products in the country. Thirty-two States in the Union have already authorized laws upon the subject. Some States forbid absolutely the manufacture, I think, altogether, and I believe two have declared it to be unconstitutional, and perhaps the same condition exists in other States. Of that I am not positive.

I was born and raised a farmer and the only property I have amounting to anything, outside of the house in which I live, is farm property. There is not one interest of the farming community of my State or of the United States that is legitimate that I would not honestly support and protect. I have voted in season and out of season for every suggestion of honest legislation and fair protection to the interests of these people. They constitute a great intelligent, patriotic body of men. Nobody estimates them at a higher value than I do, and I would go out of my way at any time to assist them, but I furthermore stand here as a representative of other interests and other people who desire most earnestly that the strong hand of the law shall not be put upon this industry to its destruction. I represent a large class of people who desire to be allowed to buy this commodity. They are perfectly willing that all the stringency that can be invented to protect the buyer and prevent deception shall be enacted, and for it all I have voted and for it all I will continue to vote, but they deny the power of Congress in this behalf.

The gentleman has talked about the pure-food law with regard to the adulteration of pepper. Have we ever taxed adulterated pepper? Have we ever taxed adulterated tea differently from what we have any other kind of tea? Have we ever committed any such violation of legal and constitutional principles as this does? Most assuredly not. This is the first and only time when there could be no dodging the question. I would vote for any degree of regulation, any degree of legislation, any degree of restriction, any degree of punishment that is necessary to prevent frauds upon the consumer of the butter products of this country. If it had to be done in order to protect the people, I would vote to put 10 cents a pound internal-revenue tax upon all kinds of adulterated butter, and if that could be done you would find the markets of this country bare of more than one-third of the butter product.

Who colored this butter first, and where did it come from? The coloring used to-day in the manufacture of oleomargarine was first used by the oleomargarine manufacturers. It was never used by a butter maker until long after the article of oleomargarine came into the market. Then the farmer discovered that he could color his white butter to make it a little more attractive, and he began to adulterate his butter, if it is adulteration, by the introduction of this annato coloring that is used by the oleomargarine manufacturer. In the olden times we used to have some coloring of butter made by the use of carrots, and in one way and another, by our mothers and by the manufacturers of butter at home; but it was the oleomargarine manufacturer who first used this coloring matter which has since become a staple article in the State of Vermont, and which is advertised by one of the greatest houses in the State of Vermont, and which is now entering into the commerce of the whole world for the purpose of coloring the cow butter of the country.

I say the principle is absolutely wrong. I represent in Ohio a district composed of a very large body of laboring men. Constantly, from the outset of these discussions, they have opposed the passage of this bill, and they have always put it upon the solid ground that they had a right to buy in the markets of this country a good, pure, healthful food product without the intervention of any legislation of Congress that confessedly will prevent their having the opportunity to do so.

Only yesterday the Federation of Labor, holding its annual convention in the State of Ohio, sent the following telegram to the delegation from Ohio:

NEWARK, OHIO, December 6, 1900.

To the chairman of the Ohio Congressional delegation, Washington, greeting:

The Ohio Federation of Labor in convention assembled passed vigorous resolutions protesting against the passage of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine, and directed its officers to notify Ohio Congressmen of their action and ask for your cooperation.

JOSEPH A. BAUER, Secretary.

Now, I want to ask gentlemen to bear this suggestion of mine in mind. This bill will doubtless pass and become a law. It will destroy the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. Butter will, of course, advance about 25 per cent above its present price to the laboring man and to the purchaser. What is to be the next victim? Anthracite coal? Why not? I can muster upon the floor of this House ten representatives of bituminous coal where there is one representative of anthracite. Why not put a tax of $5 a ton upon the production of anthracite coal? It will benefit the innumerable coal miners—more than 250,000 in the United States.

What is to be the next victim? Coarse-wool sheep, by putting a tax on them, so as to destroy them, because they are too heavy for the small sheep? Why not? What is the difference? One sheep is just as palatable as another. The food of one is just as healthful as another. So is the product of the cow and the oleomargarine factory. The one is as healthful as the other, and in nine cases out of ten the oleomargarine has the advantage.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Why not tax beet sugar or cane sugar also?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Beet sugar and cane sugar. Why not? Why not put a tax upon the production of beet sugar or cane sugar as you please. What is the difference?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, under the order of the House, I will extend my remarks in the RECORD.

I warn Congress that this is the entering wedge to a system. This is the first time that this character of legislation has been attempted in the United States. There is no doubt whatever that the secret purpose of much of the legislation has been to destroy one industry in the interest of another, but it has never been done in a way openly to bring the question before Congress. The argument was used and had much plausibility in it, that the filled-cheese bill was not intended to destroy the manufacture of filled cheese, but was intended to protect our exporters and domestic consumers from the evils of fraudulent goods; and for that bill I worked with all my might. But Congress has never yet set an example of which this is a legitimate outcome.

I know gentlemen are saying that the tax upon State bank circulation, a law that Congress made in the heat of war and maintained up to the present time, and which exterminated State bank currency from circulation in the country, is on all fours in principle with this. Not by any means. The most casual observer, the most casual thinker, will at once see that he is in error in this regard. That was a law of Congress made in pursuance of its power over the currency of the country, and was made as a legitimate protection to the right and power of Congress to dictate the circulation of the country, and was apologized for, if that is the true name, by a divided Supreme Court, putting the apology upon that ground alone; and if it be true that that law is a license to the Supreme Court of the United States to uphold legislation having no national purpose, but having a sole and direct purpose to manipulate the industrial affairs of the country in the interests of a monopoly, then the sooner the Supreme Court retraces its steps to the solid ground of justice and fair play the better it will be for the country.

A precedent that would uphold this law and make it legal and binding would be the most far-reaching that any law has ever attained in the United States. It would put into Congress the power by legislation to destroy the freedom of work and labor. Why not? I put it to the gentlemen on the other side and challenge an answer. Why not go to the coal fields of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Illinois, where thousands and tens of thousands of men have been thrown out of employment by the introduction of machines into the mines, and tax those articles of machinery to such an extent that they can not be profitably used? This is a fair and just illustration, bearing in mind that, under the pretense of suppressing a fraud, this bill is confessedly in the interests of one industry against another. Why not go among the farmers of the country? Why may not the laboring men of the country come to Congress—there are eight or ten millions of them—and demand of Congress a law taxing the manufacture of farming implements? Why not? What is the difference in principle, bearing in mind and admitting, as you must admit, that the whole of this legislation has in its purpose a real object to destroy and not to build up?

If anything is lacking to show the character and purpose of this bill and the utter illegality, if not unconstitutionality, of its provisions, the fact that it taxes by a law of Congress one kind of oleomargarine, which is said not to be a competitor of butter and which is put upon the market containing all the ingredients of the other, at a quarter of a cent a pound tax, while the other, with the same ingredients, barring the slight coloring, is charged 10 cents a pound tax, discloses the whole aim, object, and animus of the performance; and now can it be possible that our Government, under our Constitution, which proposes equal and exact justice to all and special privileges to none, can be prostituted to purposes so base as these?

Ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, says:

Whom do we represent? The united dairy sentiment of the nation. That means over 5,000,000 farmers, and an annual cash value in their product of over $600,000,000. A vast army of consumers of dairy products, who are constantly duped and swindled by a counterfeit substitute for butter.

Statement of Charles Y. Knight:

My business is that of editor of the Chicago Dairy Produce, a publication devoted to the dairy and butter business. I have for the past three years been secretary of the National Dairymen's Union, an organization of farmers who keep cows, and others engaged in pursuits allied therewith. This organization at present comprises about 30,000 members who are farmers, and they are scattered all over the United States. The organization has for its aim the protection of producers and consumers of dairy products against fraud, and its officers serve absolutely without further compensation than their actual and necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of their duty. No officer has ever received one cent salary, but upon the other hand they have spent hundreds of dollars in expenses while working in the interest of the cause, for which no account has ever been rendered the organization.

I have had charge of the work of organization and the collection of facts regarding the oleomargarine traffic of this country, and it is the enormous illegal and fraudulent growth of the business during the past two years, in face of the best restrictive laws the States have been able to devise, that has brought us to Congress as a last resort to ask for relief.

THE ASSOCIATIONS BELONGING TO THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

Now I want particularly to call the attention of the members of this committee to the list of associations that belong to this national association which met at Fort Worth, and I want to say that every one of these had a good delegation there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Please just read that list.

(The list referred to was here read by Mr. Cowan, and is as follows:)

Oneida County Wool Growers' Association, Idaho; Colorado Cattle Growers' Association, Colorado; Kansas City Stock Yards Company, Missouri; Union Stock Yards Company, South Omaha, Nebr.; Denver Union Stock Yards, Colorado; Pueblo Union Stock Yards, Colorado; Arizona Stock Growers' Association, Arizona; Fort Worth Stock Yards Company, Texas; South Omaha Live Stock Exchange, Nebraska; American Feeders and Breeders' Association, St. Paul, Minn.; Larimer County Stock Growers' Association, Colorado; Cattle Raisers' Association, Texas; Custer County Cattle Growers' Association, Colorado; Stock Feeders' Association, eastern Routt County, Colo.; Sioux City Stock Yards Company, Iowa; Sioux City Live Stock Exchange, Iowa; Live Stock Sanitary Board, Arizona; Saguache Stock Growers' Association, Colorado; Kern County Cattle Growers' Association, California; Western South Dakota Stock Growers' Association, South Dakota; Live Stock Exchange, St. Joseph, Mo.; South St. Joseph Stock Yards Company, Missouri; Utah Wool Growers' Association, Utah; Southern Colorado Stock Growers' Protective Association, Colorado; American Hereford Cattle Breeders' Association, Missouri; Union Stock Yards and Transit Company, Chicago, Ill.; Cattle Sanitary Board, New Mexico; State Veterinary Board, Colorado; Live Stock Association, North Dakota; Fort Collins Sheep Feeders' Association, Colorado; American Short-Horn Breeders' Association, Illinois; Roaring Fork and Eagle River Stock Association, Colorado; Uinta County Wool Growers' Association, Wyoming; Cattle and Horse Protective Association, District 9, Colorado; Elko County Cattle Association, Nevada; American Galloway Breeders' Association, Missouri; North Fork Valley Cattle Growers' Association, Colorado; Park County Cattle Growers' Association, Colorado; Grand and Eagle River Stock Growers' Association, Colorado; San Luis Valley Cattle and Horse Protective Association, Colorado; Lincoln County Cattle Growers' Association, Colorado; Texas Live Stock Association, Texas; Lincoln and Elbert County Wool Growers' Association, Colorado; Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, Missouri; Weld County Live Stock Association, Colorado; Eastern Colorado Stockmen's Association, Colorado; Sheep and Wool Growers' Association, Idaho; Black Range Protective Association, New Mexico; Western Nebraska Stock Growers' Association, Nebraska; State Board of Live Stock Commissioners, Illinois; Board of Trade, Tucson, Ariz.; Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, Denver, Colo.; Union Commercial Club, Lincoln, Nebr.; Logan County Cattle and Horse Protective Association, Colorado; Snake River Stock Growers' Association, Wyoming; Gunnison County Stock Growers' Association, Colorado; Cincinnati Union Stock Yards Company, Ohio; Colorado Midland Railway Company, Colorado; Colorado and Southern Railway Company, Colorado; Oregon Short Line Railway Company, Utah; Yuma County Cattle Growers' Association, Colorado; Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad, Omaha; Rio Grande Western Railway Company, Salt Lake City; American Shropshire Registry Association, Indiana; St. Louis Live Stock Exchange, Illinois; Sheep Sanitary Board, New Mexico; Board of Sheep Commissioners, Wyoming; Oklahoma

Mr. ALLEN. Were you present at this meeting that passed the resolution that you first read?

Mr. COWAN. Yes, sir; I was.

Mr. ALLEN. Do you know personally the men who were there representing those different breeders' associations?

Mr. COWAN. I know some of them. I knew a good many of the men.

Mr. John McCoy, of Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, says:

There is a bill pending before the House of Representatives, viz. House bill No. 3717, known as the Grout bill, which has been referred to your honorable body, and it is for the purpose of discussing that measure we have asked for a hearing. This bill is aimed at the life of a great commercial industry, that of oleomargarine. We believe it will, if enacted into a law, seriously cripple one with which by comparison both oleomargarine and that of its opponent, butter, pale into insignificance. I refer to the live-stock industry. My associates and myself, representing as we do the second largest live-stock market in the world, a market at which was received, during the year 1899, 5,965,573 head of live stock that had a valuation of $120,946,439; a market which loans annually from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 to the farmers, feeders, stock growers, and ranchmen to assist them in carrying on their industries; a market that had for its patrons during 1899 the stock raisers of 32 States and Territories, feel that our interests in these measures are of sufficient importance to be our apology for thus trespassing upon the time of the committee.

Opposition to the bill: Lincoln Lodge, No. 445, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Columbus, Ohio; Central Labor Council of Cincinnati, Ohio; International Bicycle Works, etc., Columbus, Ohio; Union Dairy Company, Cleveland; St. Paul Live Stock Exchange, St. Paul, Minn.

As to character of correspondence in favor of the bill, Mr. Dadie, of Chicago, says:

A vast amount of importance seems to attach itself to the correspondence received by members of Congress from country districts urging the passage of this bill as a protection to the dairy interests. It may be of interest to you gentlemen to know through what channels this correspondence passes before reaching members in Washington. These appeals for protection are compiled and printed by one man in South Water street, in Chicago, and mailed by him broadcast to the rural districts throughout the country, with a personal letter asking the party addressed to sign and direct the letter furnished him to his Representative in Congress, and as a reward for his trouble extend to him the hope of a permanent increase in the price of his butter if they are successful in destroying the oleomargarine industry.

OBJECTS OF THE MEASURE.

Hoard says:

The consumers and producers of butter ask Congress to enact into law House bill 3717, which provides by the first section that all counterfeit substitutes for butter, when taken into any State or Territory, shall be subject to the laws of that State or Territory concerning such counterfeit, the same as the Wilson law in regard to liquors, enacted, I think, in 1891. It was deemed for the public welfare to enact that law. We claim it is for the public welfare to place oleomargarine under the operation of a similar law.

Charles Y. Knight, editor of the Chicago Dairy Produce, and the most active single person advocating this bill, says:

WHY THE 10-CENT TAX ON COLORED OLEOMARGARINE?

We expect to show to the satisfaction of Congress that national legislation of the character embraced in H. R. 3717, known as the Grout bill, with its 10-cent tax provision, is absolutely essential to prevent the almost absolute destruction of an industry bringing to the agriculturists of this country fully $500,000,000 per year.

First. Because oleomargarine, when made in exact imitation in package and color of butter, is an ideal counterfeit, furnishing a commodity which can be readily, and in nine cases out of ten with safety, palmed off upon the known but unskilled consumer as butter at butter prices, as only a chemical analysis will, with a degree of certainty necessary in evidence, establish the identity of the substitute.

Second. Because the large profit resulting from the sale of oleomargarine as butter in itself furnishes incentive to practice fraud and means of protection in case of detection, and to-day, with the traffic aggregating close to 100,000,000 pounds per year, the sum collected through the assessment of even a fraction of a cent per pound as a fund for defense is sufficiently large, when judiciously expended through organized channels, to render prosecutions so expensive that in many of the States the courts have scarcely the capacity to handle offenders, so numerous have they become under the persistent and aggressive solicitation of the wealthy manufacturers.

Mr. Davis, of Philadelphia, in his testimony admits that incidentally the purport of the bill is to drive colored oleomargarine out of the market:

Mr. LORIMER. You say that if this tax is put on oleomargarine then there will be no sale of it in competition with butter?

Mr. DAVIS. That is about it. They can not sell it.

Mr. LORIMER. You mean to say they can not sell it in competition. They can sell it if anybody buys it. Would not that virtually mean the driving of colored oleomargarine out of the market as a matter of trade?

Mr. DAVIS. That might be incidental to the operation of the law.

Mr. LORIMER. If they can not pay this 10 cents tax, would that not drive it out of the market?

Mr. DAVIS. Not necessarily.

Mr. LORIMER. You do not believe it would interfere with the sale of it?

Mr. DAVIS. I do.

Mr. LORIMER. Is it not the intention of many who favor the passage of this bill to drive colored oleomargarine out of the market?

Mr. DAVIS. The object, as I take it, of the men interested in this is to prevent illegal competition with butter—to protect the law-abiding people. In Philadelphia we believe that 90 per cent of this traffic is done illegally. Of course that operates to the disadvantage of people who do business in a proper way. For instance, I am alongside of a man selling oleomargarine for butter, and he makes an enormous profit, whereas the butter seller makes only a legitimate profit.

Mr. LORIMER. You say you think the passage of this bill will prevent dealing illegally. If you have a tax of 10 cents, how will that prevent the illegal traffic in your city?

Mr. DAVIS. There would be less inducement offered. It would be that much accomplished. Everything helps for the protection of the dealer who is law abiding.

Mr. LORIMER. Is not the object to drive colored oleomargarine out of the market?

Mr. DAVIS. We want to prevent this illegal traffic which operates to the injury of the law-abiding people who are doing a legitimate business.

Mr. LORIMER. The reason I am asking this question is because a gentleman who appeared before the committee a week ago to-day said it is the desire of the butter men to drive oleomargarine out of the market—that they want to drive the oleomargarine manufacturer out of business. I wanted to find out whether or not that sentiment prevails over the country.

Mr. DAVIS. If driving it out would be incidental to the operation of this law, then oleomargarine would have to be sold upon its merits.

Mr. LORIMER. In its white state?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

INJURE OUR TRADE ABROAD.

Mr. LAVERY. Foreign countries, and especially Germany, are watching for every opportunity to legislate against the entrance of American meats and by-products, and if our own Congress should pass a law which would practically kill the oleo industry in this country, we have no reason to believe that Germany and other European countries would not take similar action and prohibit the entrance into their country of oleo oil and such materials as we have legislated against ourselves; and such action would therefore kill, or at least greatly injure, the export oleo-oil business.

1888	21,513,573
1899	83,145,981

Mr. J. A. Hake, a live-stock dealer, says:

The butterine business of 1890 was 2.6 per cent of the total amount of butter made in the United States. These figures are taken from the records of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Agricultural Department. For the year ending June 30, 1899, there were 83,000,000 pounds of butterine manufactured in the United States, and, according to the estimate of Mr. Wilson, editor of the Elgin Dairy Report, Elgin, Ill., there were something over 3,000,000,000 pounds of butter made in the United States for that year. Figuring on this basis, the amount of butterine manufactured, as compared with the amount of butter made, is 2½ per cent, showing that the make of butterine has decreased, in comparison to the make of butter, in the past ten years to the extent of one-tenth of 1 per cent. The Government received, for the year ending June 30, 1899, about $2,000,000 from tax and license on butterine.

INGREDIENTS OF OLEOMARGARINE AND OF BUTTER.

Dr. Crampton, chemist, Internal Revenue Bureau, says:

Representative WILSON. I would like to ask Dr. Crampton just one more question. I want to know, Doctor (if you know), what is the difference between butter and oleomargarine, so far as the chemical elements which enter into each are concerned?

Dr. CRAMPTON. They are very much the same, with the exception of the small amount of what are called the volatile or soluble fatty acids, which enter into butter and which do not enter into oleomargarine. The great bulk of the fat is of the same composition, chemically speaking; they are both glycerides. Of course, these volatile, fatty acids are very important, however; they give butter its flavor and taste, the pleasant "bouquet," you might say; and that is very important. There is no question about that.

Mr. Miller, of Kansas City, Kans., representing Armour & Co., says:

Butterine is wholesome, nutritious, and palatable. There is no secret whatever about the process of manufacture. Our factory is open to the public at all times. This product is composed of the following ingredients: Oleo oil (made from choice fats of the beef), neutral lard (or the leaf lard of the hog), refined cotton-seed oil, milk, cream, salt, and butter.

We have never had a pound of paraffin in our factory, and we do not desire stearin.

THE INGREDIENTS OF OLEOMARGARINE.

In their statement Swift & Co. have the following to say regarding the ingredients of oleomargarine:

Second. Oleomargarine is an absolutely pure and healthful product. It contains the following ingredients.

1. Oleo oil: A selected fat from beef that is obtained from the caul fat. This is the principal ingredient. This fat is thoroughly washed, thrown into a vat of ice water to remove the animal heat, then thoroughly cooked, cooled, and put into hydraulic presses, by which the oil is extracted, the residue being commercially known as stearin.

2. Neutral: This is the leaf lard of the pig. The leaf fat when taken out of the animal is thoroughly washed and put into a refrigerator, where it remains twenty-four hours. It is then thoroughly cooked. It is absolutely without color, being snow white, and has neither taste nor odor. Both pigs and cattle are examined by Government inspectors before and after killing, thereby insuring protection against disease. England, France, Germany, Holland, and many other foreign countries where oleomargarine is manufactured more extensively than in the United States, depend entirely upon American manufacturers for oleo oil and neutral.

3. Cotton-seed oil: This ingredient is not always used; it is used in limited quantities in the medium grade. The oil is extracted from selected cotton seed and then highly refined. It is a pure, sweet product, and is used quite generally for cooking purposes. Prominent chemists have asserted that it has the same qualities as and is equally digestible with the best of olive oil.

4. Milk.

5. Salt.

Mr. LAVERY. I stated that oleomargarine consists of four principal ingredients—oleo oil, neutral lard, milk and cream, and cotton-seed oil. Now, of those four ingredients cotton-seed oil comprises about 25 per cent. Of course we add salt and coloring matter.

HEALTHFULNESS OF OLEOMARGARINE AND CLEANLINESS OF ITS PRODUCTION.

Mr. Kimball, of Philadelphia, representing the butter sellers, in his testimony says:

If this Grout bill prevails, then oleomargarine, if it is a good thing, and we admit it is a good thing, will be sold at a price to reach the poor man, and it is intended to reach him, and the legitimate butter will sell at a price which the people are willing to pay for it. It will do away with the practice of deceiving the customer who goes into a store and asks for a pound of butter and gets a pound of oleomargarine.

Again:

Mr. ALLEN. Since the sale of oleomargarine has increased has the death rate of the city increased?

Mr. KIMBALL. We do not know that there is anything unhealthful in oleomargarine.

A Mr. Davis, who was with Mr. Kimball, also stated:

Mr. WHITE. What has been your observation with reference to the healthfulness of this oleomargarine product?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that there is any evidence as to its injurious effect upon consumers. That is a subordinate matter.

In concluding his testimony Kimball says:

Mr. LORIMER. I understand you are willing to have oleomargarine shipped in and sold in its natural state?

Mr. KIMBALL. Yes; I believe it is healthful. It is a good thing for the poor man, but it should be sold on its merits. Where it is sold as butter there is a profit of 15 cents a pound on it.

Upon the other hand, Mr. Hoard intimates that oleomargarine is unhealthy.

Is oleomargarine a healthful food? There is no way to determine this question except by actual trial; not for a day, a week, or a month, but for several successive months, and not with strong, robust men, with plenty of outdoor exercise.

Chemistry can not answer. For example, the chemist will tell you that he finds the same elements in swamp peat that are found in the grasses and hays that are fed to our cows, and in approximately the same proportion. And the chemist is at a loss to determine from the standpoint of his science why cattle should not feed on swamp peat. Chemistry can not determine whether any particular substance is poisonous or not. It must take a stomach to do that.

There is no credible evidence to show that oleomargarine is innocuous; no evidence to show that when eaten continuously in place of butter it is not harmful. But there are reports in great abundance to the effect that oleomargarine is harmful.

It is shown that 32 States have anti-color laws, but each one of those States allows oleomargarine, uncolored, to be sold. They do not forbid its sale because of unwholesomeness or deleteriousness, but simply because it may, if colored, be sold as butter from milk or cream.

NO GERMS IN MANUFACTURE.

We claim that it is absolutely impossible for germ life to exist in our oleomargarine factory, and we want the public to come and see for themselves. These are the reasons the oleomargarine business is growing, and not that this product is palmed off on innocent purchasers for butter.

Mr. Aldredge submitted the following as chemical testimony:

This is from Prof. W. O. Atwater, director of the United States Government agricultural experiment station, Washington, D. C.

"Butterine is perfectly wholesome and healthy and has a high nutritive value. The same entirely favorable opinion I find expressed by the most prominent European authorities, English, French, and German. It contains essentially the same ingredients as natural butter from cow's milk. It is perfectly wholesome and healthy and has a high nutritive value."

The other is from Prof. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture:

"There can be no reasonable objection to the use of oleomargarine. It is clean, wholesome, and digestible. When it is to be kept for a long time before use, as on shipboard, or in distant mining camps"—

And he might have said, in the Army—

"it is preferable to butter, because it has but little tendency to become rancid. For similar reasons, there can be no possible objection to the use of cotton-seed oil as a substitute for lard, or when mixed with lard."

Now, here are certificates from the greatest chemists in America and Europe outside of the ones that I have read; but I will not take up your time with reading them.

Representative WILLIAMS. Just hand them, if you please, to the stenographer, so that they may be made a part of the record.

(The certificates above referred to by the witness are as follows:)

Prof. G. C. Caldwell, of Cornell University, says:

"The process for making butterine, when properly conducted, is cleanly throughout, free from animal tissue or other impurities, and consists of pure fat, made up of the fats commonly known as alaine and margarine. It possesses no qualities whatever that can make it in the least degree unwholesome."

Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University, says:

"As a result of my examination, made both with the microscope and the delicate chemical tests applicable to such cases, I pronounce butterine to be wholly and unequivocally free from any deleterious or in the least objectionable substances. Carefully made physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter."

Dr. Adolph Jolles, of Vienna, from address before section 7 of the International Hygienic Congress, at Budapest, says:

"As regards nutritive value, pure butterine or oleomargarine is as digestible and nutritious as pure butter."

Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania:

"Butterine is, in my opinion, quite as valuable as a nutritive agent as butter itself. It is perfectly wholesome and is desirable as an article of food. I can see no reason why butterine should not be an entirely satisfactory equivalent for ordinary butter, whether considered from the physiological or commercial standpoint."

Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station, and professor of agricultural chemistry at Yale College, New Haven, says:

"It is a product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is for all ordinary and culinary purposes the full equivalent of good butter made from cream. I regard the manufacture of oleomargarine as a legitimate and beneficent industry."

Dr. A. G. Stockwell, who needs no introduction, says in the Scientific American:

"In everyday life butter is very essential. Its free use by sufferers from wasting diseases is to be encouraged to the utmost. Considering the foregoing, it seems strange that oleomargarine has not been thought of as a palatable and suitable article of diet for those suffering from wasting diseases.

"It is free from all objections. As a matter of fact, it is a better and purer butter than nine-tenths of the dairy product that is marketed, and one that is far more easily preserved. There are a large number who imagine oleomargarine is made from any old scraps of grease, regardless of age or cleanliness. The reverse is the fact. Good oleo can only be had by employing the very best and freshest of fat. This artificial butter is as purely wholesome (and perhaps even better as food) as the best dairy or creamery product."

Jollies and Winkler, the official chemists of the Austrian Government, after thorough investigation of butterine, reported:

"The only germs found in 'oleo' are those common to air and water. Although carefully searched for, tubercular bacilli and other obnoxious bacilli were conspicuous by their absence."

HEALTHFULNESS, ETC., OF OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. John S. Hobbs, editor of the National Provisioner, of New York and Chicago, says:

After a thorough personal inspection of the Government licensed and Government inspected butterine factories, some of these inspections made in company with our chief food chemist and expert, and all of them made without any knowledge of the oleomargarine people that I was coming, I find the following a summary of them all.

Of course the formulas change, but only as to proportions of the same ingredients, and the temperatures vary a few degrees, according to the experience of the particular factory making the variation. There is no material difference. I quote from my memoranda:

The oleomargarine is made up of a mixture of—

	Per cent.
Cotton-seed oil	15 to 25
Neutral lard	20 to 35
Oleo oil	20 to 35
Butter	20 to 35

This formula changes in the same factory slightly with the varying temperatures of the seasons.

THE ORIGIN OF THE INGREDIENTS.

The healthfulness of the ingredients which go into butterine and the product itself is better understood when it is known whence and how these parts of the product come.

Neutral lard is a swine oil made from the leaf fat of Government-inspected animals. It is the richest, cleanest, and finest fat of the hog. Being a hog product, it might from religious scruples be objected to by the orthodox Jew, just as he would from scruples of conscience object to the whole hog and all his connections.

Oleo oil is made from the caul fat of prime hand-fed Government-inspected beeves. It is the best oil which comes from the bovine species.

Butter oil, or that grade of cotton-seed oil which is so known because of its extra prime quality, is made from a certain grade of cotton seed, gathered and selected at a certain stage of the cotton crop. They must be well matured or butter oil will not result. It is the finest and dearest of the grades of cotton oil. The butterine maker might desire to use a cheaper oil, but no other quality can be used. To attempt it would be to ruin his product. The above grades of the above ingredients must be employed: no other will mix perfectly. These ingredients are perfectly healthful and very nutritious. Neutral lard has neither taste nor smell. The same may be said of butter and oleo oils; such is virtually true.

Butter, of course, comes from dairy cream. It is the other ingredient, and is pasteurized because not from Government-inspected stock, and to kill the germs which are well known to generally exist in milk from the dairy.

The neutral lard is melted at about 160° F.; the oleo oil 160°; the cream is sterilized at 170°.

Most factories buy their neutral lard ready for mixing. When it is not so bought it is made as follows:

1. The fresh leaf fat is hashed; that is, cut up for cooking the oil out.

2. The pieces go into a rendering kettle, where the oil is cooked out at a temperature of about 170°. This temperature destroys all germs, if any remain in a Government-inspected hog.

3. The oil is then drawn off through fine hair-mesh sieves into receiving tanks, where it is cooled down to about 110° F. for churning.

4. From the tanks this neutral is taken in its proportion to the butterine churn, where it becomes one of the ingredients of the oleomargarine.

Most factories buy their oleo oil ready for mixing in the churn. Where this is not done, the oil is made as follows:

1. The caul-fat of prime hand-fed beef purchased. No other grade of fat will do for this extra prime oleo oil.

2. The fat is then hashed for cooking. The oil is cooked out at a temperature of about 170° F.

3. The oil is next drawn off through a thin, hair-mesh wire screen into tanks, where it is cooled down to a lower temperature.
4. Thence it goes into a room which is kept above 90° F., where it remains about twenty-four hours.
5. The oil is then pressed to separate the stearin from it.
6. The oleo oil then goes into the churn as the oleo ingredient of oleomargarine.

The butter oil joins these as the cotton-seed oil ingredient of the forming product.

The cream is obtained, of course, from milk bought of the dairy farmers. Very few butterine factories use less than 3,500 quarts per day, and some as high as 14,000 quarts daily. When the milk reaches the factory, it takes the following course to the margarine churn:

1. The milk is dumped from the dairy can into a factory receiving can, where it is tested for conditions of sweetness, etc.
2. It is then pumped into an open, zinc-lined vat.
3. From this vats it runs into a zinc-lined, copper cooling trough, where it is brought to a temperature of about 80° F.
4. It then goes into a separator, which revolves at about 4,000 and throws out the milk from it. The bulk of the cream filth is dropped into a trough.
5. The cream then goes to the pasteurizer to be sterilized. The skim milk runs through chilling coils which cool it down to about 40° F. by the time it reaches the cans that receive and hold it for disposal to farmers and others. The cream is pasteurized at about 170° F.
6. From the pasteurizer the cream goes to a can which is placed in ice water to keep it at a temperature of 34° to 35° F.
7. From this ice-water tank it is taken to the churn room on an upper floor.
8. Where it is ripened at a temperature slightly above 70° F. for the churn. This ripening process takes about thirty hours, more or less, according to the season.
9. When properly ripened the cream also goes into the butterine churn as an ingredient of oleomargarine.

This completes the parts which go to make the product called oleomargarine or butterine. The "butter color" is also added now, and the whole is churned into one homogeneous mass. This is completed in about eight minutes.

THE FINISHED PRODUCT.

After leaving the churn the mass is run into vats of water, at the bottom of which are anchored cakes of ice to keep the temperature down to about 35° F. The butterine is left in this ice bath about ten minutes to set it.

This is found in the National Provisioner, in an editorial entitled "The care of butterine," of December 23, 1899:

Our own laboratory experiments, covering hundreds of samples, show that the ordinary melting point of butter is 89° F. The exhaustive experiments of A. Winter Blyth confirm our own conclusions. With our chemist, Blyth also says that butterine melts at 79° F. The "Clover Hill" brand of butter, one of the finest dairy products in the market, has a melting point slightly over 91° F. While the ordinary melting point of butter is found to be 89° F., an average of a large number of samples from certain creamery districts where a certain class of feed was used showed an average melting point of 96.5° F., or only 2° F. lower than the heat of the stomach.

The results from an examination by us of 33 samples of genuine butter, taken from a large dairy area, gave melting points as follows: The highest was 96° F. The lowest melting point observed was 84°. The average was 90° F.

The melting point of margarine itself is 88.5° F. The results of the examination of 15 samples of oleomargarine by Benedikt & Lewkowitsch, the highest authorities in the world, were as follows: Highest melting point, 81° F.; lowest melting point, 74° F.; average melting point, 77° F. An examination of a 10-pound commercial bucket of the Armour Packing Company's Silver Churn Butterine, one of Swift & Co.'s Premium brand of butterine, and a similar-sized package of butterine made by the G. H. Hammond Packing Company showed the following results:

"Silver Churn," melting point 91.8° F., contains no paraffin; Hammond, melting point 94° F., contains no paraffin; Swift's "Premium" brand melts at a little above 94° F., contains no paraffin. All melt below the normal temperature of the stomach.

These concerns make the greater part of the oleomargarine or butterine now in the market in this country. The statement, then, that butterine's melting point is over 102° F. is unfounded and untrue. The statement made by J. F. Geisler, of New York, that butterine contains 10 per cent of paraffin is contrary to facts.

COLORING OF OLEOMARGARINE AND BUTTER: ITS PURPOSES.

Ex-Governor Hoard charges, without any proof, that—

A great many people ask why it is not as permissible to color oleomargarine as it is to color butter. I would answer because they are not colored for the same purpose. Butter in winter is too light to suit the taste of most consumers. The highest value is in fresh butter not more than ten days old. The consumer asks that it bear the yellow summer color of butter. That is a matter of taste, not deception, for it is not colored to resemble something it is not. But oleomargarine is colored to make it resemble butter, which it is not. It is colored, not for the benefit or taste of its consumer, but to deceive the consumer.

Mr. John Dadie, representing W. J. Moxley Corporation, an oleomargarine manufacturer of Chicago, testified:

Now, as to color; it is a well-known fact that large dealers in butter or oleomargarine will display and sell goods of different colors, and they find it necessary to do so in order to suit the requirements of their different customers. Then, too, some particular district will use an article that could not be sold in another market by reason of its being too high or too light in color to properly appeal to the consumer's taste. For example, the markets of the South, notably in St. Louis and New Orleans, order what is known to the trade as an orange or brick color, and it is popular with certain people in those districts, while in other sections of the country it could not be sold at all, as a different shade of color is demanded, and the concern who issued the color card referred to, recognizing the importance of every detail of its business, did so for the purpose of avoiding confusion by supplying its customers with goods that would suit in color the requirements of their trade. There is no deception practiced or intended, nor could there be, as the internal-revenue law and regulations apply to all our product regardless of the amount of color used.

Mr. John S. Hobbs, editor of the National Provisioner, of New York and Chicago, testified:

Housewives know that oleomargarine is colored. They do not know that butter is artificially colored. On the contrary, they believe that real rich creamery butter is sold in its natural color, and that the complexion of it as seen in the tub is that given to it by the cream of the cow. I ascertained the truth of this for myself in New York City. I interviewed more than 300 housewives in that city on their reasons for purchasing butter of such and such color. All but 8 of them purchased butter of certain colors because they thought that hue was given the substance by the natural richness of the cream; these generally purchased butter of lighter color because they feared that the others were artificially colored.

Thus in no instance did a grocery shopper buy a butter which she thought was artificially colored. Yet all of these butters were artificial in color. Was the woman in each case deceived? Butterine is the same quality, whether colored or not. That is not true of butter when a 60 per cent tallowy white stuff goes masquerading under the color of a 100 per cent pure article selling at the same price. If the light-buff summer product—its natural color—were placed alongside of the white winter wax on the same counter the housewife would severely let the poor white stuff alone. Yet some people ask Congress to tax a pure and a wholesome product that the dairies might get higher prices for their deceptions.

Mr. C. N. Lavery, of Kansas City, Kans., representing Swift & Co., says:

We claim the same right to color oleomargarine yellow that a creamery claims to color butter, and most respectfully ask this committee not to vote to prohibit the use of a harmless coloring in one in favor of the other. We claim that oleomargarine is not an imitation of butter, but that it is recognized "in the exact form it has always been sold" by the United States Government as a separate and distinct article of commerce, and that through public use it is acknowledged to be at the present time a staple article of food.

It is a well-known fact that the manufacturer of oleomargarine first conceived the idea of giving to his product a uniform color and thereby rendering it more pleasing to the eye by the use of a harmless coloring. The creameries throughout the country, taking advantage of the idea suggested, adopted the same color as their standard. They found it improved the appearance of butter as well as of oleomargarine. Now these same creameries come before Congress and ask to have a law enacted to force the manufacturer of oleomargarine to abolish the use of coloring, claiming that they have the exclusive right to its use.

A prominent dairy authority writes:

"The manufacture of oleomargarine is as legitimate as that of butter. It suppresses the lower grades of butter and makes the finer butter more sought after. There is nothing for the dairyman to fear in it; his safety can be insured by improving the quality of his butter. The trade in oleomargarine might safely be left to itself. It is a blessing to the community to supply it, at a low price, a clean, sweet substitute for costly butter."

It will be seen that there are yet some people in the butter business who are willing to admit that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is legitimate, and a separate and distinct business, and not maintained for the purpose of antagonizing the dairy interests of the country.

We make oleomargarine because the people demand it. We color it yellow because it has always been sold that way.

Mr. W. E. Miller, esq., representing Armour & Co., Kansas City, Kans., says:

Representative BAILEY. I will say to the committee that Mr. Miller is the expert who has control of the butterine factory of Armour & Co. at Kansas City.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman and members of this committee, no manufactured article has been so grossly misrepresented and abused as the product known as "butterine" or "oleomargarine," and the first point we wish to make is that butterine is not an imitation.

Butterine possesses merit, and it is not necessary to imitate another article in order to sell it. This product has a separate and distinct value commercially, and is not confused with butter in the mind of the housewife.

The first butterine manufactured was of very high color, while butter at that time was almost universally sold in its natural state. The dairymen were quick to see that the high color pleased the public, and they immediately commenced to color their product also. We have taken the aggressive at all times. The progressive butterine manufacturers conceived the idea of new shape rolls, brick, and prints, and also attractive packages, which appealed to the eye of the buyer. We have had many prominent dairymen, acknowledge that the butterine manufacturers discount them when it comes to attractive appearance of their product in packages.

Butterine has a great deal of merit. People know what they are buying, and call for it. On pages 7 and 9 of the report of the committee appointed by the Senate to investigate pure food we read the following:

I will not read all that I intended to read, on account of the lateness of the hour. This is a summary of their report:

"In regard to butterine or oleomargarine, it is not claimed by any of the witnesses before your committee that it is in any way deleterious to public health. On the contrary, all expert evidence upon the point strongly confirms the testimony of the manufacturers of this article to the effect that it is a healthful food product."

As regards the much discussed question of color, I would say that we use exactly the same as that sold to a majority of all the creameries in the West and in about the same proportion. In order to sell our product we must color it now the same as we did when we commenced its manufacture. If we had started out using no coloring whatever we would doubtless have had as large a business established on uncolored to-day as we have on colored butterine. However, as the trade have become accustomed to colored goods, we could not at this late hour get them accustomed to the uncolored product. In fact, we have attempted to sell uncolored butterine in a number of prohibitive States, but it has proved a rank failure.

I will say just here that in case this Grout bill is passed, it will kill the industry. The uncolored product will not sell. We have tried it in a number of prohibitive States, and, as I say, it has proved a failure in each instance.

Why should color be prohibited from butterine and not from butter? The same color is used in similar quantities in both articles. If it is undesirable in one, why is it not undesirable in the other?

Dr. Wiley, Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, submitted the following statement:

COLORING MATTER USED FOR COLORING BUTTER AND ITS IMITATIONS.

Annotto, the principal vegetable dye used, is mainly composed of the pulp surrounding the fruit Bixa orellana growing in the East and West Indies and South America. Allen states that two different kinds reach England, namely, the Spanish annotto, imported from Brazil, and the flag or French annotto, which comes from Cayenne.

Annotto contains two yellow coloring matters which have been given names derived from the botanical names of the plants.

Bixin, $C_{25}H_{34}O_5$, is one of these, but its properties and chemical relationships have been imperfectly studied. When separated in the form of its soda salt it has a reddish color.

Olellin is described as yellow and soluble in water and alcohol. These two coloring matters combined, in annotto, give the substance its characteristic orange-yellow color.

Coal-tar dyes.—When diazobenzene-sulphonic acid acts on amids, with an alkaline solution of phenols, a series of coloring matters is obtained ranging from yellow to deep orange or red. These dyes are called tropæolins, because the shades of color they produce resemble those of the nasturtium flower (Tropæolum magnus). They usually occur in commerce as soda salts and are distinguished according to their shades, tropæolin Y, being the most yellow, and the tropæolin 0, 00, and so on, as the shades become redder. The shade of the color becomes redder by the substitution of toluene, xylene, or cumene for benzene.

Two of these dyes which have been used for coloring foods are the acid or fast yellow and the orange yellow or orange G.

The acid yellow, or the fast yellow, is the soda salt of amido-azobenzene sulphonic acid, represented by the formula:

$$C_6H_4(SO_3Na).\ N{:}N.\ C_6H_4.NH_2.$$

Orange G is sodium salt of benzene—azobetanaphtol-disulphonic acid, having the formula:

$$C_6H_5\ N{:}N.\ C_{10}H_4 \begin{cases} (SO_3Na)_2 \\ OH_2 \end{cases}$$

This class of dyes is also known as sulphonated-azo dyes.

Victoria yellow has also been reported as a coloring material for butter. This substance is a mixture of the sodium salts of the dinitro-ortho and dinitro-para-cresol $C_6H_2(CH_3).(NO_2)_2.ONa$.

AS TO PRIORITY OF COLORING.

Representative NEVILLE. You think that is what they think they are getting. Now, I would like to ask you another question or two. You state that you are the originators of the process of coloring matter in oleomargarine, and that you used it prior to any color having been used in butter. Do you mean to assert that as a fact?

Mr. DADIE. I am talking about a commercial product. Everybody knows that on a farm, before oleomargarine was ever invented, the people used to grate carrots and use other things to color their butter. But it is a fact that butter has not been colored to any extent until after oleomargarine was manufactured and colored, and that the introduction of color is the result of the introduction of oleomargarine as an article of commerce.

Figures as to the money value directly and indirectly interested in the production of oleomargarine, as compiled from the testimony before the House Committee on Agriculture.

Texas Cattle Raisers' Association, cattle valued at	$100,000,000
St. Joseph Live Stock Exchange do an annual business aggregating	50,000,000

Mr. Oliver says in reference to the cotton-seed oil interests:

Amount in plant		$50,000,000
Capital to conduct business		50,000,000
There has been paid this season, 1900, to—
Cotton producers	$40,000,000
Railroads for hauling	15,000,000
Laborers	10,000,000
A grand total of		65,000,000

Mr. John C. McCoy, of Kansas City, says:

From January 1, 1899, to January 1, 1900, we slaughtered 991,783 head of cattle, which produced 49,589,150 pounds of oleo oil, worth to-day 10 cents per pound, or 4 cents per pound more than if sold as tallow, and valued at $4,958,915; which is $1,983,566, or $2 per steer slaughtered, in favor of this industry.

There were slaughtered during the same period of hogs 2,700,109, producing 21,600,872 pounds of neutral lard, which, at 8¼ cents per pound, netted $1,836,074. This product would, in the absence of this industry, have sold for 6 cents per pound, or a loss of 20 cents on a hog, or of $540,022 on the total output.

Continuing, he says:

The Government report shows that on January 1, 1900, there were in the United States 43,902,414 head of cattle, of which 16,252,360 head were milch cows; and of cattle other than milch cows, 27,610,054. By the enactment of laws prohibiting the use of oleomargarine each head of those cattle, other than milch cows, would have a depreciation in value, as shown above, of $2 per head, or a total of $55,220,108. Again, the Government report showed that on January 1, 1899—no estimate being made by the Government for the year 1899, it having decided to await the census enumeration in June, but it is safe to assume that the numbers were approximately the same January 1, 1899, and January 1, 1900—there were in the United States 38,651,631 hogs. If the leaf lard of the hogs of the United States had to be used for lard by the death of oleomargarine, it would mean a depreciation in value of 20 cents per head, a total of $7,730,326. Thus it will be seen if these measures become laws, at that instant $62,950,434 will be taken directly from the farmers and stock raisers of the country. To that could be added the vast sums invested in manufacturing plants and the loss in wages to an army of laborers; but that is a field outside of my domain.

And now, gentlemen, I wish to call your attention to another phase of this question, and to illustrate it you will find below the number of cattle in the United States as given by the Government report, those States divided into three classes, viz, dairy States, cattle-growing States, and States that are agricultural, but having fewer milch cows than other cattle, which I will term Southern States.

CATTLE-GROWING STATES.

Arkansas	419,422
Texas	5,046,335
Kentucky	539,449
Iowa	3,442,012
Missouri	2,047,346
Kansas	2,807,224
Nebraska	2,206,792
South Dakota	879,200
North Dakota	431,371
Montana	959,808
Wyoming	747,826
Colorado	1,115,421
New Mexico	679,359
Arizona	381,861
Utah	396,076
Nevada	238,081
Idaho	397,928
Washington	390,444
Oregon	637,433
California	913,753
Oklahoma	323,971
Total	25,001,112

DAIRY STATES.

New Jersey	263,157
Pennsylvania	1,494,126
Delaware	58,035
Maryland	257,435
Ohio	1,455,558
Michigan	801,818
Indiana	1,234,930
Illinois	2,324,254
Wisconsin	2,598,529
Minnesota	1,237,003
Total	14,218,200

SOUTHERN STATES (MORE CATTLE GROWING THAN DAIRY).

Virginia	567,488
North Carolina	518,141
South Carolina	280,223
Georgia	666,147
Florida	412,820
Alabama	511,080
Mississippi	517,809
Louisiana	294,961
Tennessee	526,235
West Virginia	408,198
Total	4,683,102
Grand total	43,902,414

By the above it is shown that 17 States, all of them in the extreme East, except 6, which are in the middle West, have 14,218,200, while 31 States in the West and South have 29,684,214, the 6 great cattle-growing States of the West, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Texas, and Colorado, alone having 16,724,930, or 2,506,730 head more than the whole 17 dairy States combined. Where then, gentlemen, will the burden of such legislation fall? Nor is that all. Is it to be supposed that the stock raisers, farmers, and feeders of the State of Illinois, with their 1,303,018 cattle, other than milch cows, will willingly consent to have their property depreciated $2,606,036 for the benefit of their creamery neighbors?

It is claimed by the manufacturers of oleomargarine that they have invested in the industry $15,000,000, and that there is probably invested in the wholesale and retail trade besides fifteen to twenty millions more. Mr. Knight responds to this claim as follows:

THE MAGNITUDE OF THE INDUSTRY.

First. Oleomargarine has been manufactured in this country for about twenty-five years, and in its manufacture there is now invested more than $15,000,000, furnishing employment to many thousand men. The wholesale and retail sale and delivery of oleomargarine furnish employment to 25,000 men. There is probably $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 invested in the wholesale and retail trade separate and apart from the manufacture of the article.

Here, as well as in every other effort to influence Congress by holding up to public gaze the "enormous proportions" of the oleomargarine industry, Swift & Co. have evidently included in what they term the "manufacture of oleomargarine" the neutral lard and oleo oil industry, which will be treated thoroughly under the department devoted to the effect of the Grout bill upon the live-stock interests.

It is a well-known fact that Messrs. Braun & Fitts, and William J. Moxley, of Chicago, produce almost if not quite one-third of all the oleomargarine manufactured in the United States. The combined extreme rating of these firms by Dunn is $400,000. While we do not doubt that their resources, from profits earned during the past few years, is greatly in excess of this amount, anybody who is acquainted with their establishments can readily realize that the rating, so far as money actually invested is concerned, is amply liberal. If it took an investment of $400,000 to produce one-third of the oleomargarine made in this country—not the oleo oil and neutral lard—then their estimate of $15,000,000 as the amount invested in the oleomargarine manufacturing business is more than twelve times too high.

SOME ABSURD FIGURES.

Just contemplate, if you please, the statement of Swift & Co. that "there is now more than $15,000,000" invested in the manufacture of oleomargarine, "employing many thousand people."

And "the wholesale and retail sale and delivery of oleomargarine furnish employment to 20,000 men." Also, that "there is probably $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 invested in the wholesale and retail trade, separate and apart from the manufacture of the article."

If this is true, let us sum up the total cost of handling this product of 83,000 pounds made in 1898-99, according to the statement of Swift & Co. as to the number of people employed outside of those in the factories, and the interest upon the capital which they claim to be invested:

Six per cent on $20,000,000 claimed to be invested by wholesale and retail dealers	$1,200,000
Six per cent upon the $15,000,000 capital employed in manufacturing, as claimed by Swift & Co	900,000
Wages of 25,000 persons engaged in the handling of oleomargarine, at $750 per year each	18,750,000
Total cost of one year's business of handling oleomargarine, outside of wages of factory employees and cost of materials.	20,850,000

Add to this claimed expense the actual expense of manufacture of probably 2 cents per pound, $1,660,000; the present 2-cent tax, aggregating $1,660,000 more, and the average cost of materials, probably 8 cents per pound, and we have a total cost of 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine, according to Swift & Co., as follows:

Interest on capital, cost of handling, as shown in foregoing table	$20,850,000
Cost of manufacturing	1,660,000
Cost of 2-cent tax	1,660,000
Cost of raw material, at 8 cents per pound	6,640,000
Paid for wholesale, retail, and manufacturers' licenses (estimated)	300,000
Total cost of 83,000,000 pounds	29,110,000

Or, to reduce it to pounds and cents, it requires an expenditure of 35.06 cents to produce a pound of oleomargarine, which, the same firm says a little further along, "sells at an average of 10 cents per pound!"

What does Congress think of such an attempt to mislead its members upon this matter?

Were not the statement of Swift & Co. made ridiculous in itself by the claims of the importance of the oleomargarine traffic, their plea might find an answer in the counterclaim that every man employed in the oleomargarine traffic displaces at least three men who hitherto had found employment upon the farm, and that the greater the showing made by this industry the greater the necessity for Congressional action to check a growth which is prima facie illegal.

Mr. J. A. Hake of South Omaha, Nebr., says:

South Omaha is the third largest live-stock market in the world.

For the year ending December 31, 1899, there were 540,502 cattle slaughtered, and for the same period there were slaughtered 2,188,779 hogs. The makers of oleomargarine create a demand for oleo oil, which is made from the choice fats of the beef, and which is worth, for butter purposes, 10 cents per pound. If these choice fats were not utilized in the manufacture of butter they would have to be sold as tallow, which is worth about 5 cents per pound. A steer will yield 40 to 50 pounds of oleo oil; therefore should the butterine industry be destroyed each steer would depreciate in value at least $2.

Now, the same is true of hogs. Leaf lard, or neutral, being used in the manufacture of butterine, is worth 8 to 9 cents per pound; lard is worth about 6 cents; a hog will yield about 8 pounds of neutral, and if there was no demand for neutral as a butterine ingredient, it would have no greater value than ordinary lard; hence each hog would be worth about 20 cents per head less than present price. Upon this basis the loss to the producers of cattle and hogs during 1899 in South Omaha alone would be—

On 540,502 cattle, at $2	$1,081,004.00
On 2,188,779 hogs, at 20 cents	437,755.80
Total	1,518,759.80

The total number of beef cattle and hogs in the United States is a matter of statistics, which has doubtless been presented for your consideration, or, if not, can be easily obtained.

The probable loss to the beef producers of this country, should this measure become a law, has been estimated by different persons to be about $100,000,000, to say nothing of the confiscation of about $15,000,000 invested in the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine and the loss of employment to about 25,000 men.

The butterine business of 1890 was 2.6 per cent of the total amount of butter made in the United States. These figures are taken from the records of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Agricultural Department. For the year ending June 30, 1899, there were 83,000,000 pounds of butterine manufactured in the United States, and, according to the estimate of Mr. Wilson, editor of the Elgin Dairy Report, Elgin, Ill., there were something over 3,000,000,000 pounds of butter made in the United States for that year. Figuring on this basis, the amount of butterine manufactured as compared with the amount of butter made is 2½ per cent, showing that the make of butterine has decreased, in comparison to the make of butter, in the past ten years to the extent of one-tenth of 1 per cent. The Government received, for the year ending June 30, 1899, about $2,000,000 from tax and license on butterine.

THE QUESTION OF FRAUD IN THE SALE OF OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. Charles Y. Knight, editor of the Chicago Dairy Produce, in his brief (see pages 29 and 30), and in his statement before the Committee on Agriculture of the House (see page 55), makes charges of wholesale fraud and deception in sales of oleomargarine by wholesalers and retailers. He cites a number of cases, some of which are susceptible of an honest construction; some are no doubt in point; but his whole number does not exceed 15 cases, except that by inference, because of the alleged amount of oleomargarine sold in the anti-color States, he assumes that all or nearly all retailers are lawbreakers.

REPLIES TO THIS CHARGE.

Representative ALLEN. There have been exhibited here some original packages of the wrappings of oleomargarine, and the stamp has been impressed upon the corner of the wrapper and turned down in that manner [indicating], so as not to be seen by the purchaser. What do you know about that?

Mr. DADIE. I understand that charge has been made against him; but there are about 2,500 licensed dealers in the First district of Illinois, and it appears that this man Broadwell is about the only one against whom they have been able to get any cases of that kind.

Representative ALLEN. You say he is one out of about 2,500?

Mr. DADIE. One out of about 2,500.

Representative Allen. Of the retail dealers?

Mr. DADIE. Retail licensed dealers in that district.

Internal-Revenue Commissioner Wilson says:

Representative BAILEY. Mr. Wilson, a statement was made here by the friends of the dairy interests that 90 per cent of the oleomargarine marketed in this country was sold as butter. Do you believe that is true?

Commissioner WILSON. I say it is nearer 10 per cent.

Representative WILLIAMS. What was that question?

Representative BAILEY. The question was that it had been stated to this committee that 90 per cent of the oleomargarine sold in this country was sold as butter.

Commissioner WILSON. Of course I can not tell, but I do not think that is accurate. I simply do not think so. That is my honest conviction about it.

THE LEGAL ASPECT OF THE QUESTION.

The parties urging the enactment of the Grout bill rely upon two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States for the legal justification of the measure. They are, Plumley vs. Massachusetts (155 U. S., 461) and Schollenberger vs. Pennsylvania (171 U. S., 1).

The question in the Plumley case was this, whether, as contended by petitioner, the statute under examination in its application to sales of oleomargarine brought into Massachusetts from other States is in conflict with the clause of the Constitution of the United States investing Congress with power to regulate commerce among the several States.

The record in this case shows that the statute in question forbade the sale of any product "not made from unadulterated milk or cream in imitation of yellow butter produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream."

The basis and all the assumptions of this case were that the sales in question were fraudulent and deceptive, and the quotation from the decision given below and relied upon by the parties urging this legislation must be read in view of the facts of the record and as a comment upon that fraud and upon that deception.

Judge Harlan, in delivering this opinion, said:

And yet it is supposed the owners of a compound which has been put in a condition to cheat the public into believing it is a particular article of food in daily use and eagerly sought for by people in every condition of life are protected by the Constitution in making a sale of it against the will of the States in which it is offered for sale because of the circumstance that it is in an original package and has become a subject of ordinary traffic. We are unwilling to accept this view. We are of the opinion that it is within the power of a State to exclude from its markets any compound manufactured in another State which has been artificially colored or adulterated so as to cause it to look like an article of food in general use and the sale of which may, by reason of such coloration or adulteration, cheat the general public into purchasing that which they may not intend to buy.

The Constitution of the United States does not secure to anyone the privilege of defrauding the public. The deception against which the statute of Massachusetts is aimed is an offense against society. The States are as competent to protect their people against such offenses or wrongs as they are to protect them against crimes or wrongs of more serious character, and this protection may be given without violating any right secured by the National Constitution and without infringing the authority of the General Government. A State enactment forbidding the sale of deceitful imitations of articles of food in general use among the people does not abridge any privilege secured to citizens of the United States, nor in any just sense interfere with the freedom of commerce among the several States.

But even upon the record of the case, so narrowed, there was a vigorous dissent by the Chief Justice, Fuller, and Justices Field and Brewer. The Chief Justice says, in part:

I deny that a State may exclude from commerce legitimate subjects of commercial dealings because of the possibility that their appearance may deceive purchasers in regard to their qualities. In the language of Knowlton, J., in the dissenting opinion below, I am not "prepared to hold that no cloth whose fabric is so carded and spun and woven and finished as to give it the appearance of being wholly wool, when in fact it is part cotton, can be a subject of commercial transactions, or that no jewelry which is not gold, but is made to resemble gold, and no imitations of precious stones, however desirable they may be considered by those who wish to wear them, shall be deemed articles of merchandise in regard to which Congress may make commercial regulations."

But in the case of Schollenberger vs. Pennsylvania (171 U. S., 1) the Supreme Court indorsed the principle at the foundation of the Wadsworth substitute for the Grout bill. In this case the court held that any act of the State legislature is invalid which seeks to prevent the sale of a product colored like butter (which is otherwise wholesome and a matter of interstate commerce) in the original packages when it is sold for what it is, as the law interferes with interstate commerce. In other words, if the product is known and marked as oleomargarine, the fact that it is colored like butter is not a legal evidence of deception, and hence can not be excluded from the original sale. The Plumley case was discriminated, and not overruled.

The court (by Justice Peckham) says:

This court held that a conviction under that statute—

The Massachusetts statute—for having sold an article known as oleomargarine, not produced from unadulterated milk or cream, but manufactured in imitation of yellow butter produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream, was valid.

The italics are those of the court.

The principle contended for by this proposed legislation is here condemned from its legal aspect, and if adopted in this case would seem to found a precedent for every other business in the land—woolen goods, jewelry, precious stones, or what not—to demand a law in the nature of a prohibitive tax upon the imitative process.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIDSON] three minutes.

[Mr. DAVIDSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to my colleague from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi what time he requires.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York yields to the gentleman from Mississippi. Does the gentleman from Mississippi ask recognition in his own right?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask recognition in my own right if recognized at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and what he says is true. But it is not only true that the oleomargarine people advertise the sale of coloring and advertise the sale of oleomargarine colored in various ways to suit the local trade, but it is true that the great dairy people do exactly the same thing. Now, it is true, and if that be fraud to a certain extent—and there is no doubt about that—then it is true that the butter men are just as guilty as the oleomargarine men; and if that be true, it follows necessarily that if the gentleman from Wisconsin and others want to be sincere and honest they will do what I asked the Committee on Agriculture to do at its committee meeting—pass a law punishing as fraud anybody who colored any sort of food product to resemble another, and who sells it instead and in lieu of that which it represented to be, to the deception or detriment of the purchaser.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Is butter sold as anything but butter?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, sir; but because dogs are dogs all hounds are not curs; and butter is sold colored as "June butter," and it is sold as "June butter" when it is not, for the purpose of getting a higher price in making the purchaser believe that he has gotten June butter.

Mr. DAVIDSON. June butter does not contain cotton-seed oil.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. June butter does not contain cotton-seed oil, but summer butter or December butter is no more June butter than is oleo, and one deception is just as much a fraud as the other, and it is for a fraudulent purpose, namely, that of getting money out of the pocket of the purchaser under the pretense that it is something other than what it is sold for. That is all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are two purposes behind this oleomargarine question. One is dishonest and insincere, and conceals the real purpose under the guise of taxation, and under the pretext of stopping fraud would tax out of existence a perfectly wholesome and perfectly healthful product. And then, in the second place, there are men with a tyrannical and unjust purpose, avowed and not concealed, as was the case with several people who appeared before the Committee on Agriculture with an avowed purpose of stamping out this industry, and making it impossible for men to manufacture and sell, and for other men to buy, oleomargarine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this question is not a hard question to solve by any means. We have been through, in the committee, the hearings upon all sides. There are two bills presented for your consideration. One of them does nothing under the sun except to relegate, in the first section, back to the States the constitutional power of Congress to control interstate commerce in oleomargarine as in other things. Now, I can not see how a Democrat or a Republican can vote for that first section. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] says that it gives to the States no rights except the rights they already have, and which the courts have decided they already have. If that be true, then the legislation is unnecessary. But if that be not true——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that the Federal courts differ in their interpretation as to the Plumley case?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Of course.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not it a fact that Judge Lochran has held that the State has not the power to regulate this in the jurisdiction of the State, on account of the interstate-commerce law and the original-package decision?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it be true that the interstate-commerce clause does forbid the State from legislating, as the gentleman has stated, then this Congress can not do away with the interstate-commerce clause.

Mr. TAWNEY. It did it, however, in a celebrated case.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It did it on a totally different ground, and I want, in that connection, to call the attention of this House to the injustice of this legislation, the defamatory and calumniatory character of this legislation. The Supreme Court had decided that whisky, when imported in original packages, could not be dealt with by the State, notwithstanding the reserved police powers of the State to deal with those things injurious to public health and public morals. The Supreme Court held that whisky was an article of that sort, and Congress, upon the ground that whisky was an article of that sort and deleterious to public health and public morals—that the trade in it had always been considered within the police powers of a State—passed the legislation which they did, and to which the gentleman refers.

Now gentlemen want to come in here and put oleomargarine, an absolutely healthful product, upon the same footing with whisky.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not true that the Supreme Court distinctly, in a case in 165 United States Court Reports, decided that the whisky case did not apply, and would not be extended to apply, to the case where the State had enacted a law to affect it, against the sale of oleomargarine?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; there are a good many decisions, and they are very diverse. Now, to come back to the committee view, if this first clause is designed to give the State any right which it has not already, then it is unnecessary. If it does give the State any rights in controvention of the interstate-commerce clause, then it is unconstitutional. It can not be both, and it must be one or the other.

Now, my friend the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] says that the reason why they want to pass this legislation is because the court was almost evenly divided. I suppose, then, they want to overbear the Federal courts with some sort of a law enacted so as to act coercively upon them—as a moral coercion. There can be no sense in that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how can anybody be in favor of relegating back to the States any power which is conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress of the United States? Certainly no strict constructionist could be. It is just as wrong for the Federal Government to put back into the hands of the States a power vested in the Federal Government by the fundamental voice of the people—the Constitution of the United States—as it would be for the Federal Government to usurp to itself powers reserved to the States. So that if this is the intention, then it is wrong.

But that is not the main clause in this bill. That clause might be stricken out, and this bill would still do what these gentlemen want to do with it, some of them, and what other people are deluded into thinking that it would not do—that is, stamp out by taxation this industry whose products compete to some extent with butter in the market.

Now, it is not true, as stated by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], that 95 per cent of the oleomargarine is sold for butter. It was the opinion of the Internal-Revenue Commissioner that not more than 5 per cent is sold in that way.

And talking about the laws not being executed, that officer testified before the committee that this was the best executed Federal law upon the statute book.

Now, let us see what the evil is, because there is an evil. There is nothing evil in the manufacture; nobody has contended that there is. Nobody contends that you go to the manufacturer and buy oleomargarine as butter. The oleomargarine is sold from the factory as oleomargarine, colored or uncolored. This goes to the jobber, and from the jobber it goes in wholesale packages to the retailer. Then begins the fraud. When a dealer breaks a package like that firkin on Mr. LORIMER'S desk and begins to retail the article, the law requires him to wrap the retail package in a piece of paper upon which the word "Oleomargarine" is printed. But if he is a dishonest dealer, he of course may not do that; and in very many cases he does not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to stamp out not only every particle of fraud in connection with the sale of oleomargarine, but to stamp out every particle of fraud in connection with the sale of so-called Vermont maple sirup and a dozen other things of the same fraudulent character which are in the market. I believe that any man who sells an article in the name of and for another thing commits a fraud for which he ought to be punished both by State legislation and Federal legislation, each in its appropriate sphere. Does the Grout bill punish him? It does not. It merely increases the tax which he pays to 10 cents, and thereby stimulates him with a larger motive to commit fraud. That is all.

Now, what does the substitute bill do? I say that the substitute bill, which has been drawn in accordance with the recommendation—I do not say whether formal recommendation, but at any rate drawn with the advice of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—does stop this fraud. What is this substitute bill? A part of it is a repetition of the old law; another part is new. I will not have time to read it, because other gentlemen want to be heard; but I will explain just what this substitute bill does. It forces the oleomargarine manufacturer to sell his oleomargarine in packages of 1 or 2 pounds ready for retailing. It forces him to put around that package not only the name "oleomargarine" and the name of the manufacturer, but the Government stamp must go all around it, so that if the package is broken the Government stamp must be broken. It leaves the amount of licenses to be paid by the manufacturer, by the wholesale and retail dealer, and by the jobber just what they are to-day, and it leaves every penalty of the law in force and provides penalties for new offenses.

Under this substitute the oleomargarine reaches the retailer's shop in 1 and 2 pound packages. People buy their butter and butterine and oleomargarine in 1 and 2 pound packages for their tables. The consequence is that, in order to violate the law, the retailer can not do what he does now in the case of the firkin. He can not pick out a pound and wrap it up in a piece of unmarked paper. But in order to violate the law and deceive anybody he must remove from that package both the Government stamp and the name "oleomargarine" wrapped around it. And this bill makes such removal itself a crime.

Further than this, the bill requires the word "oleomargarine" to be sunk into the product. Then the article goes from the retailer to the private table; so that when my friend from Connecticut buys a pound package of this article, there is nothing to prevent him from taking a paddle or something else and rubbing out the name "oleomargarine" imprinted in the stuff. But I ask, if there is anywhere along the line of the provisions of this bill a defect, why not remedy the defect if you can? So far as I am concerned, I do not see how you can possibly prevent a citizen of the United States who has bought oleomargarine for his own table, after the package wrapper has been removed, from rubbing out the word "oleomargarine" imprinted on the product itself. The trouble is simply that you have struck right there a legal impossibility.

Nor do I care, so far as I am concerned, whether the gentleman wants to fool his neighbors or his wife with the idea that they are eating butter instead of oleomargarine. There is no possibility of his buying oleomargarine for butter. There is no possibility of his being defrauded by the dealer, because when the dealer breaks that package he has violated the law. So that by our substitute bill we increase by an enormous percentage the chances of conviction for a violation of the law, whereas by the Grout bill absolutely nothing is done to prevent fraud; what is done is to interfere with the business of an honest man; to punish him by an additional tax while giving the dishonest dealer a larger incentive to commit fraud.

Now, let me come to this suggestion that the coloring of oleomargarine is in itself a fraud. Why do manufacturers color oleomargarine, and what color do they color it? Gentlemen say it has been colored butter color. Not so. They are coloring butter oleomargarine color. The oleomargarine people discovered this material for coloring, which is now called "standard butter color;" after that the butter men got to using it; and now they come to Congress in order that the other fellows may be prohibited from using it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAHLE. In what year was that coloring matter discovered?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, I do not remember.

Mr. DAHLE. Was it not ten or twenty years ago?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, butter was colored years ago. I do not mean to say that the introduction of this coloring material was the first time that butter was ever colored. The gentleman must not so understand me. My grandmother colored butter with carrots; and I presume the gentleman's grandmother did the same. But I am talking about this particular coloring material which is called "Standard butter color" and about which so much fuss is made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me get back to the question that I was about to discuss. What is "butter color?" Who can define exactly what it should be? Why, it runs all the way in the hill country of Mississippi and the piney districts of the United States from a pure white—almost as white as this piece of paper that I hold in my hand—to as red a color as that which used to be the glory of the Goshen butter manufactured in Pennsylvania—the butter which had the widest reputation and the largest sale of any in the country, and which everybody who was able to secure it desired for his table. There is no limit to the coloring. There are eight or nine different colors, all of which might be called "butter color," and ranging from pure white down to a dark red. But it is not true, as a matter of fact, that the colored butter is a fraud.

It is not true that it is a fraud for me, when I am making butter for my own table, to have it yellow rather than white, and to make it such color as will suit my own ideas of taste, or to adopt the suggestion of somebody else as to the color he thinks it ought to be made. It is no more fraud to color my butter in this manner than it is to color the whisky that comes from the distilleries. We all know that that comes from the still white in color. And it is no more a fraud to color oleomargarine to suit the public taste and the public demands than it is to color butter or to color whisky.

What is the difference? How are you going to draw a distinction? Where is the line between them? Suppose I had an oleomargarine factory and my friend in New York over there, Mr. WADSWORTH, had, as he has, a dairy or a creamery; suppose that I manufactured oleomargarine and he manufactured butter; I color my oleomargarine; he colors his butter; is there any difference or distinction between the acts in each case? Is one any more a fraud than the other? Why, of course, it is absurd to make such a statement. The same motive, identically, is manifest in each case, namely, to make a product that suits the public taste and incidentally therewith to obtain the higher price which the market allows under such circumstances; and if it be decided that there is a fraud in both of these instances, then every man who buys a bottle of whisky is absolutely defrauded, because it comes from the still white in form and is colored afterwards.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I might extend this illustration and say that the same fraud will be found even in such an article as calico. That is colored after it is woven, and the public demands that it shall be done. It is a requirement of the public taste, and to meet that the coloring matter is applied after the fabric has been woven.

Mr. MERCER. How about maple sirup?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Nebraska, I will state that there is more maple sirup turned out in one town in Iowa and known as Vermont pure maple sirup than has been tapped from the trees in Vermont in the last ten years. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROUT. And perhaps some in Nebraska.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, no doubt some has been also manufactured in Nebraska.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with these illustrations before the House, I ask the question plainly and simply why you single out this particular product. Why not deal uniformly with all of this subject? If the object is to stop the adulteration of food products, why do not the pure-food people bring in a bill that they know could be passed by this House to accomplish that purpose? Why does not the committee accept the amendment that any food product colored or made in imitation of another product, or sold in the name of that product, shall be taxed as you propose to tax this product?

Why is it, when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] asked the gentleman from Vermont this morning if he would be willing to make the dairyman put the word "colored" upon his butter, if it was colored, that he refused to answer the question? Why should it not be done? Where is the distinction? Why make a difference? It is just as much a fraud as that which you propose to legislate against in the pending bill.

Let us take as an illustration the "renovated" butter industry. That is unquestionably a real fraud; and if the committee is anxious to deal with questions of this character they should introduce a bill to stop that. An effort was made by us to do so. We could not get it up in the House. What do these people do? They go along the lines of the railroads, send their employees and purchasers out and buy all sorts of butter and stuff that is called butter, varying from the color of my friend's shirt over here to that of my friend's mustache on the other side [laughter and applause], and put it into a common dumping place, and, after treatment according to their own methods, sell it to the public as "Jersey creamery" butter. Now let us put a stop to all such fraud as that. Let us not single out this product to which the pending legislation refers and make that a special exception.

Let me call your attention to something else, to show how unfair this is. Why should you tax uncolored oleomargarine at all upon the theory of the advocates of the Grout bill? Is it less healthful, is it less important as a food product, than half a dozen others?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It is taxed a quarter of a cent a pound in order to keep it under Government supervision.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why not put butter under Government supervision by putting a quarter of a cent a pound tax on uncolored butter? Why not put carrots and turnips under Government supervision by putting a quarter of a cent a pound tax upon them? Why not put coffee under Government supervision by putting a quarter of a cent a pound on it? Why not do the same thing for all sorts of sugar, including maple sugar? The truth is that they—the dairymen—just singled out this product because they had learned to dread it as a substitute food stuff for food stuffs already existing, and when they first began they singled it out on the ground that it was "unhealthful" and "impure;" but now everyone of you has been compelled to quit talking about that, because everybody recognizes that that is not true, and that it is as pure and as healthful as anything. Take cotton-seed oil, for example; it is the purest vegetable oil known to the world today, and purer than butter in every sense of the word. Nobody ever caught any disease from it, and you can catch all sorts of diseases from butter made from the milk of diseased cows, tuberculosis included.

Now, why do they tax uncolored oleomargarine? If they are going to tax uncolored oleomargarine, why do they not tax uncolored butter; and if they are going to tax colored oleomargarine out of existence why do they not also tax colored butter out of existence and let everything stand upon its own basis of color, without artificial incentive to the buyer and without any sort of attempt at deceit? Why can you not do what you want to do here under a pure-food bill applying to all foods?

And then, in conclusion, I want any gentleman in this House to tell the House how the Grout bill can possibly stop the only sort of fraud that exists, namely, the fraud that takes place between the retailer and the consumer. And then I want him to tell me if he can possibly think of any legal device that would come nearer stopping it than the device furnished to this House in this substitute bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to yield fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], and after that I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me to make a motion now as to closing debate?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, with the understanding that it does not come out of the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] yields to me for the purpose of making a motion to close general debate. I accordingly move that general debate be closed at a quarter past 4, and that then the bill be read under the five-minute rule, and the five-minute debate be continued for half an hour longer.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent, or does he make a motion?

Mr. GROUT. I made the motion. I understood there would be objection. If not, I will put it in the form of a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understood the gentleman to put that in the form of a motion. If unanimous consent were asked, I should feel compelled, under the circumstances, to object, as so many of our people have been unable to be heard. It might just as well go as a motion. I will not ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman puts it in the form of a motion, he is putting too much into his motion.

Mr. GROUT. Then I move that general debate be closed at a quarter past 4.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont moves——

Mr. GROUT. I want to embrace it all in one motion, if the Speaker please. Then, if a division is demanded, it can be voted upon all at once. My motion, further, is that then the bill be read for thirty minutes under the five-minute rule, by paragraphs, and that then the vote be taken——

The SPEAKER. That motion can not be made in that form. The gentleman moves that general debate be closed at a quarter past 4 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill, popularly known as the Grout bill, receives its strength and acquires its unworthiness from two sources—bigotry and greed. These two elements, from time to time, as far back as the memory of man runneth, have consistently opposed every effort to improve the condition of mankind by destroying the power of tyrants, frustrating the avarice of classes or the prejudices of precedent.

In this case the bigotry referred to is the bigotry of custom, which is as blind, ignorant, and inconsiderate as that of race, nationality, class, or creed. It opposes the adoption of a healthful food, which may be enjoyed by poor and rich alike, because that food was unknown to past generations. In like manner it opposed steam and electricity. It did not believe a steamer could cross the ocean, because one never had crossed it. It tried on the plains to lasso the railroad engine. The lasso was in the hands of the savage red man. But in that effort he was as reasonable, as enlightened, and as effective as the better-lettered but equally narrow-minded pale-faced brethren of his class, who declared the steamship an impossibility and the railroad a dangerous, trespassing, man-devouring, cattle-destroying gourmand and juggernaut.

Modern discovery, aided by science, has brought into use a new food, known as oleomargarine.

Prof. C. F. Chandler, professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York; Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania; Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey; Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut agricultural experiment station and professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College, New Haven; Prof. S. C. Caldwell, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.; Prof. C. A. Goessmann, of Amherst Agricultural College; Prof. Charles P. Williams, professor in the Missouri State University; Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, professor of physiology in the University of New York; Prof. W. O. Atwater, director of the United States Government agricultural experiment station at Washington; Prof. Henry E. Alvord, formerly of the Massachusetts Agricultural College and president of the Maryland College of Agriculture, and now Chief of the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture; Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University; and last, but not least, Professor Wiley, Chief of the Division of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, whose opinions in brief are given in the minority report on the pending bill, all testify to the healthfulness and purity of this food. But bigotry, represented by the pale-faced conservative, says:

> Our fathers got along very well without this new-fangled food. They ate butter whenever they ate anything of that kind. See what sons they left to the world!

The predecessors of these gentlemen said:

> Our fathers got along very well with stagecoaches whenever they traveled beyond their own townships. Behold the brilliant intellects their children inherited! Therefore, down with the railroad and special anathema upon the sleeping car.

The bigots are in comradeship with the monopolists in this case. The former oppose all innovations, whether good or bad. They are sticklers for precedent. The latter oppose all competition. They think the world was made for their class, and they want the world. They produce butter. Why should anyone else come into competition with them? They could control the market. Why should others be allowed to influence prices? Their product was uniform neither in appearance nor in quality. They furnished it in every color, from that of the rich sunflower to that of the pale lard. They delivered it in every variety of age and strength, and, in their prodigal and artistic love of the beautiful, they decorated their contributions to the joy of the human palate with every variety of shade which the Lord, in His gracious generosity gave for the adornment of the hair of His daughter children, regardless of their age, race, color, or present or previous condition of servitude. Therefore, let oleomargarine be excommunicated by bigotry and its manufacture be destroyed by greed!

There is no pretense that oleomargarine is impure or unhealthy. There is no denial that it is a nutritive food. Yet it is proposed to destroy the oleomargarine industry. That is the meaning and intent of the Grout bill. If this industry gives employment, as it does, to tens of thousands of people, it should not be suppressed unless its continuance injuriously affects public morals or public health. If it enables, as it does, hundreds of thousands of people to enjoy a food as a substitute for butter, those people should not be robbed of that enjoyment unless it can be shown to be injurious to their health or their morals. The proposed tax of 10 cents per pound is a prohibitive tax.

The majority report excuses the legislation it recommends by an argument the irresistible conclusion from which must be either that "hotel keepers, restaurant keepers, and boarding-house proprietors" as a class are knaves or that the much larger class, who are their patrons, are fools. While this is severe upon the large body of people included in those two classes, is it not also severe on butter? If that idol of conservatism is so superior, how can oleomargarine deceive so many people? The people who travel are bright, sharp people as a rule. The business interests which make them travel and the contact of travel generally result in making them keen and shrewd. It appears, however, that this bright and large body of people are unable to tell butter from oleomargarine and must be aided in differentiation by an act of Congress putting a penalty of 10 cents a pound on every wicked piece of oleomargarine which audaciously looks like butter. In the language of the majority report it is necessary to adopt this legislation so that the consumers "will be able to know whether they are eating butter fat or hog fat when they spread their bread."

The substitute bill proposed by the minority provides:

> That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word "Oleomargarine" in sunken letters.

Also that it be wrapped with paper on which that terrible word shall be printed, and that all boxes or crates containing these packages shall bear the same word of awful warning, and that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue prescribe the size of all these letters and any additional marks and brands he may deem necessary.

Surely all this ought to furnish ample protection to the unsophisticated. The manufacturer can not deceive the wholesale dealer; the latter can not deceive the retail dealer. The purchaser can not be deceived. Only the wicked hotel, restaurant, and boarding-house keepers can get a chance to make their patrons think hog fat or oil fat is cream fat. Then the measure proposed by the majority report must be intended only to restrain these outlaws. If they need such restraint, why limit it to butter and oleomargarine? Why not compel them to have tags and brands and certificates on their lean as well as on their fat hog? And why fail to pursue the villains when administering bread, coffee, vinegar, sirup, red and black pepper, salt, and mince pie? The vigilant majority of the Committee on Agriculture should not neglect mince pie, sausage, and hash—the great mysteries of the boarding-house, restaurant, and hotel tables. If butter is sacred, with what reverence should not the bigotry of conservatism bow before and protect these three gods of the table, who or which are always shrouded in mystery and are always taken on faith.

We have a word in our language, Mr. Speaker, peculiarly applicable to this bill. It is "bosh." The Grout bill ought to be called "the bosh bill." At a former time the butter monopoly tried to control the markets of Holland and England. Oleomargarine was then unknown. The butter monopoly imposed on the consumers a corrupt product shipped chiefly from Boschengarten, in the Netherlands. The popular struggle with the pronunciation of the name of the place resulted in designating the corrupt commodity simply "Bosh," a word which in the lapse of time has acquired a large but still specific significance. For obvious reasons, therefore, the Grout bill—a bill to create a butter monopoly, much of it bad butter—ought to be known as "the bosh bill." And I believe that some of the gentlemen who are now advocating the bill will admit hereafter, on reflection, that their arguments in support of it were largely composed of "bosh."

After all that has been said is duly considered, these facts, in my judgment, remain undisputed:

First. Butter is not uniformly good. It comes to the market, to the dealer, and, finally, to the table reflecting the good or bad condition of the cows from whose milk it has been made and the cleanliness or the negligence, the ability or the inability, of its maker.

Second. Butterine is almost uniformly good. It is made systematically and scientifically. Its manufacture is guarded by strict supervision.

Third. Butterine is healthful and nutritious.

Fourth. Butterine is a perfect substitute for the very best butter.

Fifth. Its manufacture brings that class of food within the means of hundreds of thousands who could not afford to buy if the demand for such food depended solely on the butter supply. Its price is reasonable. Thus it prevents monopoly and extortion by keeping the price of butter at figures which enable the poor to procure one or the other of these commodities.

Sixth. It is a great boon to hunters, miners, woodsmen, soldiers, and sailors, because it keeps much longer than butter can be kept. The unhealthy and uncleanly ingredients, if any, in the raw materials from which it is manufactured are removed and excluded with a certainty unattainable in the manufacture of butter, in view of the variety of butter makers and the equally great variety of their methods, characteristics, and experience.

Seventh. Its manufacture creates demand for various farm products, not limited to the yield of any class or section, and, therefore, is of advantage to the agriculturists of the country as a whole.

For these and other reasons which might be given, if the time kindly allotted to me was not so limited, I heartily favor the substitute bill proposed by the minority and trust the bill proposed by the majority will be defeated.

I am indebted to the minority report of the Committee on Agriculture for the following extracts from the opinions of the distinguished professors heretofore quoted:

Prof. C. F. Chandler, professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York, says: "I have studied the question of its use as food, in comparison with the ordinary butter made from cream, and have satisfied myself that it is quite as valuable as the butter from the cow. The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food."

Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "Butterine is, in my opinion, quite as valuable as a nutritive agent as butter itself. It is perfectly wholesome, and is desirable as an article of food. I can see no reason why butterine should not be an entirely satisfactory equivalent for ordinary butter, whether considered from the physiological or commercial standpoint."

Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey, says: "I am able to say with confidence that it contains nothing whatever which is injurious as an article of diet, but, on the contrary, is essentially identical with the best fresh butter, and is superior to much of the butter made from cream alone which is found in the market. The conditions of its manufacture involve a degree of cleanliness and consequent purity in the product such as are by no means necessarily or generally attained in the ordinary making of butter from cream."

Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station and professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College, New Haven, says: "It is a product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is for all ordinary and culinary purposes the full equivalent of good butter made from cream. I regard the manufacture of oleomargarine as a legitimate and beneficent industry."

Prof. S. C. Caldwell, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., says: "While not equal to fine butter in respect to flavor, it nevertheless contains all the essential ingredients of butter, and since it contains a smaller proportion of volatile fats than is found in genuine butter, it is, in my opinion, less liable to become rancid. It can not enter into competition with fine butter, but so far as it may serve to drive poor butter out of the market its manufacture will be a public benefit."

Prof. C. A. Goessmann, of Amherst Agricultural College, says: "Oleomargarine butter compares in general appearance and in taste very favorably with the average quality of the better kinds of dairy butter in our markets. In its composition it resembles that of ordinary dairy butter, and in its keeping quality, under corresponding circumstances, I believe it will surpass the former, for it contains a smaller percentage of those constituents which, in the main, cause the well-known rancid taste and odor of a stored butter."

Prof. Charles P. Williams, professor in the Missouri State University, says: "It is a pure and wholesome article of food, and in this respect, as well as in respect to its chemical composition, fully the equivalent of the best quality of dairy butter."

Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, professor of physiology in the University of New York, says: "I consider that each and every article employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine butter is perfectly pure and wholesome; that oleomargarine butter differs in no essential manner from butter made from cream. In fact, oleomargarine butter possesses the advantage over natural butter of not decomposing so readily, as it contains fewer volatile fats. In my opinion, oleomargarine is to be considered a great discovery, a blessing for the poor, and in every way a perfectly pure, wholesome, and palatable article of food."

Prof. W. O. Atwater, director of the United States Government Agricultural Experiment Station at Washington, says: "It contains essentially the same ingredients as natural butter from cow's milk. It is perfectly wholesome and healthy and has a high nutritious value."

Prof. Henry E. Alvord, formerly of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, and president of the Maryland College of Agriculture, and now Chief of the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture, and one of the best butter makers in the country, says: "The great bulk of butterine and its kindred products is as wholesome, cleaner, and in many respects better than the low grades of butter of which so much reaches the market."

Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University, says: "As a result of my examination, made both with the microscope and the delicate chemical tests applicable to such cases, I pronounce butterine to be wholly and unequivocally free from any deleterious or in the least objectionable substances. Carefully made physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter."

Professor Wiley, Chief of the Division of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, also appeared before the committee and testified to the nutritive and wholesome qualities of oleomargarine.

The Committee on Manufactures of the United States Senate, in a report dated February 28, 1900, finds, from the evidence before it, "that the product known commercially as oleomargarine is healthful and nutritious."

Judge Hughes, of the Federal court of Virginia, in a decision says:

"It is a fact of common knowledge that oleomargarine has been subjected to the severest scientific scrutiny and has been adopted by every leading government in Europe as well as America for use by their armies and navies. Though not originally invented by us, it is a gift of American enterprise and progressive invention to the world. It has become one of the conspicuous articles of interstate commerce and furnishes a large income to the General Government annually."

Believing that this testimony establishes beyond controversy that oleomargarine is a nutritious and wholesome article of food, the main question to be considered is the complaint that fraud is practiced in its sale.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration concerns on the one hand at least 70,000,000 consumers and 5,000,000 producers or makers of butter, while upon the other hand it affects 26 manufacturers of oleomargarine, engaged in the manufacture of counterfeit butter, depending principally upon lawbreaking, falsehood, deception, and fraud for their success.

Oleomargarine is the outgrowth of a necessity for a substitute for butter during the siege of Paris. Thereafter it was introduced into the United States through our Patent Office, the inventor receiving a patent therefor.

It was not at that time supposed that it could be successfully manufactured and sold for butter or that the purchaser and consumer could be deceived or made to believe that he was purchasing butter when buying this spurious product. In this, however, the public was mistaken. The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine for butter increased so rapidly that in 1886 it seriously menaced the public health and demoralized the open market for the sale of butter to such an extent that a universal demand came from the people for the enactment of legislation to prevent the serious consequences thus threatened by the deception and fraud practiced upon the people in the manufacture and sale of this product. The law thus enacted is to-day commonly known as the oleomargarine law. It was in the interest of the public health, in the interest of honesty in the production and fair dealing in the sale of a product intended for human consumption, and also for the protection of the farmer and the dairyman against fraudulent and illegitimate competition that it was enacted. Although it has been upon our statute books for more than fourteen years, its constitutionality has never been successfully assailed.

GROWTH OF THE OLEOMARGARINE INDUSTRY UNDER EXISTING LAW.

The year following the enactment of this law there were manufactured only 21,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine. During the last fiscal year there were manufactured 107,000,000 pounds, the increase in the last two years being 50,000,000 pounds. If this rate of increase continues for a period of twelve or fifteen years, the market of the farmer for the sale of butter at a reasonable profit will be so demoralized, if not destroyed, that the dairy industry, one of the greatest industries of our country, will be practically ruined, while the public health will be constantly menaced by the opportunity which the manufacturers of oleomargarine always have of using materials in the manufacture of their product that are deleterious to health.

OLEOMARGARINE NOT SOLD OR CONSUMED FOR WHAT IT IS.

If oleomargarine was sold to those who eat it as oleomargarine or as a substitute for butter, and its sale and consumption increased at the marvelous rate it has in the past few years, that would be proof positive that the people prefer it as a butter substitute. In that case it would have a right to enter the market in open competition with butter, free from all taxes or other legal restrictions, and it would be wrong to enact this proposed legislation. But the evidence is conclusive—in fact, it is admitted by the friends of oleomargarine upon this floor—that it is not so sold to the consumer for what it is. It therefore enters the market in competition with butter in the same manner and for the same purpose that counterfeit money is placed in circulation by the counterfeiter and his willing coadjutors.

In spite of every provision of the existing law and of every regulation of the Department intended to compel manufacturer and dealer in oleomargarine to inform the consumer and purchaser of its true character, it continues to enter the market to-day and is sold and consumed as butter, and in the garb of that which it is not. This clearly constitutes a fraud, and this fraud is magnified by the fact that this product is purchased, not for what it is worth, but at a price for which pure butter can be obtained. It is consumed by the patrons of our restaurants, boarding houses, and hotels, not as oleomargarine, for no living man has ever eaten a meal at either one of these places who has been known to call for oleomargarine instead of butter. It is thus consumed without any knowledge whatever on the part of the consumer that it is not butter or that it is merely a combination of by-grease products or a product of the chemical laboratory.

THE CAUSE OF THE FAILURE OF THE PRESENT LAW.

As I have attempted to show, the purpose of the existing law was to protect the public health against a combination of this character manufactured out of material that might be injurious to health and also to protect the consumers and makers of butter against the fraud and illegitimate competition of the manufacturers and dealers in this product. It was supposed at that time that this would be accomplished by the imposition of a tax of 2 cents a pound on oleomargarine and by placing its manufacture and sale under the supervision of the Internal-Revenue Department of the Government. Our experience, however, teaches us that these purposes of the law have not been fully accomplished. As a revenue-producing measure it has proved a success. During the last fiscal year we collected $2,543,785.18 from this source. But that fraud and deception are being practiced continually upon the consumer and producer of butter is admitted in this controversy.

If we stop for a moment and consider the fact that the Internal Revenue Department of the Government is one of those arms of the public service charged with the function of collecting the revenue of the Government, and that it does not possess the necessary facilities for policing the manufacture and sale of any product beyond the enforcement of the revenue provisions of Federal laws, we will readily see why the present oleomargarine law has failed to accomplish some of its most important purposes. As the late Commissioner of Internal Revenue often said to me, "My department of the Government is a revenue-collecting department, not a police department. So that when the revenue is collected this department does not and can not see to the enforcement of those provisions of this law and the regulations intended to protect the public from fraud and deceit."

THE PURPOSE OF THE PENDING MEASURE.

In addition to the matter of revenue, the bill under consideration is intended, as far as possible, to remedy this defect in the present oleomargarine law by making definite and certain the right of the State, independent of the question of interstate commerce and the original-package decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, and by removing the inducement for the violation of State laws and the practice of fraud and deception upon the general public by making the enormous profits in the illegitimate part of the business so small that dealers will not take the risk of incurring the penalties incident to a violation of State law by selling, as they now are, oleomargarine in violation of the laws of their States.

During the discussion upon the pending measure it has been claimed on the part of the friends of oleomargarine that this bill will not remedy the evils which it is admitted on both sides exist, but that the substitute bill reported by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture is the one which should be adopted.

FRAUD IN THE MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF OLEOMARGARINE ADMITTED.

We are fortunate, Mr. Speaker, at the close of this debate, in that there is no controversy among us as to the fact that fraud and deception are practiced by the manufacturers and dealers in this product. In fact, this was admitted by the champion of the oleomargarine interests [Mr. LORIMER].

Mr. LORIMER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

Mr. LORIMER. The gentleman just made a statement that we admitted that fraud is practiced in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. TAWNEY. I will amend that remark by saying that the gentleman from Illinois confined his admission to the sale of oleomargarine.

Mr. LORIMER. Not by the manufacturer?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not by the manufacturer, so far as the gentleman's admission is concerned. It is only in the sale of oleomargarine that fraud is practiced.

It being conceded, therefore, that fraud is practiced in the sale of this product, the only question between us is what is the best remedy for this admitted evil. Which of these two measures will be most successful in stamping out the fraud and deception it is conceded is now practiced on the public, the one proposed by the majority of the Committee on Agriculture or the one proposed by the minority, which is the substitute offered for the Grout bill?

Mr. NEVILLE. I would like to make a suggestion with regard to the question just asked the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. NEVILLE. Is it not true that when the manufacturer manufactures oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter and sells it to his customers in the States where the colored oleomargarine is prohibited the manufacturer is just as fraudulent as the seller?

Mr. TAWNEY. Unquestionably he is, and he carries on the business of selling his product in defiance of the laws of these States and induces citizens of these States to violate the laws of their States in the hope thereby of reaping an enormous profit out of the fraud thus practiced—just like the maker of counterfeit money; the practice and its purpose are the same in both cases.

THE PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE FOR THE GROUT BILL.

In view of the fact that the opponents of the Grout bill appeal to this House with so much fervor and eloquence in behalf of this substitute measure, I want to address myself to it for just a moment.

It was prepared either by the manufacturers of oleomargarine or their friends. It is another case of the Greeks bearing gifts. For that reason alone it is stamped with suspicion and should be scrutinized with the utmost care. It is the oleomargarine people, not the dairyman, who ask for its passage. I would ask the representatives of the dairymen and the farmers upon this floor whether it is safe for us, in trying to secure legislation to protect their rights and interests and also to protect the consumers of butter from fraud and deception, to rely upon legislation prepared specifically in the interest of those who are engaged in practicing the fraud and deception we are trying to stamp out?

This substitute first proposes to amend the existing law. The law now requires the dealer in selling oleomargarine to the consumer to inform the purchaser that he is buying oleomargarine and not butter. This it attempts to accomplish by requiring him to wrap the same in paper or put it up in any other package with the word "oleomargarine" plainly stamped or printed upon the outside covering of the package. This part of the existing law and regulations it is proposed to amend by requiring the manufacturer to make oleomargarine in not less than 1 nor more than 2 pound packages. The manufacturer is also required to wrap these 1 and 2 pound packages in the factory in wrappers, upon which must be printed the word "oleomargarine," and around this package he will then be required to place a 2-cent or a 4-cent revenue stamp. This package the substitute defines as the "original package." It then provides that it must be sold by the dealer in this legally defined "original package." It is true the manufacturer is authorized to pack these packages thus defined as the original packages in crates or other larger packages, but, nevertheless, the 1 and 2 pound packages are the statutory original packages until they reach the hand of the consumer.

This would enable the manufacturer to carry his product in these statutory original packages as interstate commerce into every State in the Union, and either through his agent or the dealer or retail merchant deliver them to the customer in defiance of the laws of any State, heretofore or hereafter enacted, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter. This would afford absolute protection against the laws of any State. On the face of it it would seem impossible to practice a deception upon the purchaser, and the freedom of commerce among the States which the Supreme Court of the United States has always upheld in the absence of fraud and deceit would protect oleomargarine sold in these statutory defined "original packages" in the color of butter, notwithstanding the prohibitory laws of the States.

In the State of New York the manufacturers of oleomargarine to-day, by reason of the force of inspectors which that State employs under its laws on this subject to protect the consumers and producers of butter from fraud and deception, are unable to sell more than 500,000 pounds of their product a year. Under this substitute they would be able to flood that State with their product, notwithstanding the State law. This would be so because the Federal statute has defined the original package and ostensibly provides against deception as to its contents, and it is also provided that the form of that package shall not be changed until it reaches the consumer.

I am aware that the friends of this substitute claim that there will be no opportunity whatever to practice fraud or deceit in the sale of oleomargarine under this substitute, because, as they say, it goes into the hand of the consumer with all the information plainly stamped upon it as to its character or as to what it is; but they do not inform this House of the fact that when the Internal-Revenue Department of the Government has collected the revenue from the manufacturers that department of the Government has no further interest in the enforcement of this law, and the retail dealer could violate the same with impunity by removing the outside covering and with his butter paddle remove the indented word on the product itself, and then sell this oleomargarine, in 1 or 2 pound packages, or in any form he sees fit, as butter.

APPLICATION OF CERTAIN SECTIONS OF REVISED STATUTES OMITTED.

There is another very important fact in connection with this substitute. Section 3 of the original oleomargarine law enumerates eleven sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and then makes these sections, which were originally intended to apply only to the manufacture and sale of tobacco, cigars, and distilled spirits, applicable to the manufacture of oleomargarine. These sections are 3232 to 3243, inclusive. Upon examining section 3, as proposed by the substitute, it will be found that for some reason or another these eleven sections relating to penalties and other provisions to which the manufacturers of oleomargarine have heretofore been obliged to conform have been omitted. It is significant, is it not, that these gentlemen bring in a substitute for the Grout bill in the form of an amendment to the existing oleomargarine law and omit to reenact that provision of section 3 of the present law which, as that section now stands, subjects every manufacturer of oleomargarine to the provisions of the sections referred to?

If I had the time I would read these sections, which might explain the cause of their being omitted. Every lawyer on this floor knows that if this substitute is adopted the law will hereafter be as it is declared in sections 3 and 6, as proposed in the substitute, and that sections 3 and 6 of the present law, or any part of them not reenacted, will no longer have any force or effect. Therefore, by implication, that provision of section 3 of the present law, which makes these eleven sections of the Revised Statutes applicable to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and which it was deemed necessary at that time, will be repealed.

Mr. LORIMER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I will not.

I want to read the language of the substitute——

Mr. LORIMER. The only thing I wanted to say——

Mr. TAWNEY. The enacting clause of the substitute is this:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows.

Then follows the language of the proposed substitute for section 3 of the present law, and which singularly makes no reference whatever to the eleven sections of the Revised Statutes now applicable to the manufactures of oleomargarine under the original oleomargarine act.

Mr. LORIMER. Right there——

Mr. TAWNEY. By the passage of that substitute you repeal the application of those sections of the statute to the manufacturers of oleomargarine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Minnesota I know does not wish to do an injustice.

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask, then, that the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER].

Mr. TAWNEY. I have only a few moments, and do not want to yield any of my time.

Mr. LORIMER. Only one moment.

Mr. TAWNEY. If I have made any misstatement of fact or of law I will yield.

Mr. LORIMER. I simply want to suggest that if we have omitted any provision of legislation that should have gone into this substitute, the minority of the committee stand prepared to accept any amendment that will throw all necessary safeguards around that substitute.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is singular, however, that it was at least attempted on the part of those who prepared this substitute to pass this substitute without any reference to this omission or without any explanation.

From this hasty analysis of the proposed substitute it must be evident to every man upon this floor that its passage as an amendment to the existing oleomargarine act, instead of preventing fraud and deception, instead of protecting the dairy interests of this country against the illegitimate competition of the oleomargarine manufacturers, would have just the opposite effect, while it would also relieve these manufacturers of counterfeit butter from many of the penalties which are now imposed for the violation of certain statutes and regulations intended to protect the public and the revenues of the Government.

THE PURPOSE OF GROUT BILL EXPLAINED.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us briefly examine the provisions of the Grout bill for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it will be likely to meet the evil complained of. This bill contemplates the accomplishment of three things.

First. It is proposed to take away from oleomargarine colored as butter, which is to-day branded as an outlaw in 32 States of the Union, the protection it now enjoys within these States under the interstate-commerce law and the original-package decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. This is accomplished by subjecting this outlawed product to the laws of the State immediately upon its coming within the jurisdiction of that State.

Second. It is proposed, as an evidence of good faith on the part of the friends of the dairymen, to enable the manufacturer of oleomargarine the opportunity of manufacturing and selling his product in its natural color and under more favorable circumstances than he can under existing law. This is accomplished by reducing the tax on oleomargarine manufactured and sold in its own color or in any other color than that of butter, 87½ per cent, or from 2 cents to one-fourth cent per pound.

Third. It is proposed to increase the tax on oleomargarine, when colored as butter, from 2 cents to 10 cents per pound, or, in other words, it is proposed to tax the artificial coloring matter in oleomargarine, thereby taking away a part of the enormous profit in the business as now carried on, and which constitutes the inducement for the willful lawbreaking, deception, and fraud now practiced by those engaged in it.

PECULIARLY A MATTER FOR REGULATION.

The argument has frequently been made that this is not a matter for Federal regulation; that the right to regulate the manufacture and sale of food products is one that belongs peculiarly to the States, and that the States have it within their power to protect their citizens from frauds and impositions of this kind. Thirty-two States of the Union have enacted laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in the semblance of butter. These States have 285 members on the floor of this House. In the exercise of their power they have endeavored to accomplish what the friends of oleomargarine say they have a right to do, but the experience of the people within these States proves conclusively that the State can not successfully regulate this matter. As long as this product can be shipped into the State and there sold under the protection of the original-package decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the laws of these States will continue to be ineffective.

Are we, therefore, in favor of sustaining the laws of our own States by enacting the first section of the Grout bill, or are we going to vote in favor of continuing the opportunity to the manufacturers of oleomargarine and their agents to break down and defy these laws enacted and approved by the people who have sent us here?

ALL DOUBT AS TO WHETHER OLEOMARGARINE CAN BE SOLD AS AN ARTICLE OF COMMERCE IN VIOLATION OF STATE LAW SHOULD BE REMOVED.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, 62,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were sold in the thirty-two States that have by law absolutely prohibited its manufacture and sale in the color of butter. That this was all sold in the color of butter, and 90 per cent of it sold as butter, is established beyond dispute by the evidence taken before the Committee on Agriculture.

By enacting the first section of the so-called Grout bill we will make this product subject to the laws of these States the moment it enters any of them, and in that way fully accomplish what the friends of the oleomargarine manufacturers say the State has the right to do with respect to the manufacture and sale of any food product. The precedent for this section of the bill will be found in what is commonly known as the Wilson law, enacted some years ago for the purpose of giving full force and effect to the prohibitory laws of the State of Iowa in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor, which law was thereafter sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The friends of the Grout bill have no desire whatever to destroy the legitimate part of the oleomargarine industry; that is, the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in its own color.

If it is as wholesome, as sweet, and as toothsome as its friends upon this floor claim, the coloring matter which is used for the purpose of deceiving the public and the consumer adds nothing whatever to its flavor nor to its nutritive qualities. Certainly any man who desires to purchase and consume oleomargarine as a substitute for butter would not hesitate to do so if it lacked this coloring matter, which adds nothing whatever to its quality. Therefore the manufacturer of oleomargarine, under the Grout bill, will have the same opportunity he has to-day of doing a legitimate business by manufacturing and selling his product for what it is, for when it is manufactured and sold in its own color none can be deceived, as the color is pure white. A business that can not be successfully conducted if conducted legitimately has no right to be conducted at all, or in fraud of the rights of the public

TO PROTECT THE CONSUMERS OF OLEO.

Then, again, this provision of the Grout bill will protect those who have here to-day eulogized in such eloquent terms the virtues and nutritious qualities of oleomargarine from being imposed upon by the farmer, who, if oleomargarine is colored as butter, may impose butter upon them for oleomargarine.

If the manufacturer of oleomargarine is compelled to sell his product in its natural color, certainly no farmer can deceive my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] or my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] [laughter] by selling them butter for oleomargarine, and I take it that neither of them would eat butter if they can possibly obtain that product manufactured from garbage, offal, soap grease, and other by-grease products called oleomargarine. [Applause.] If they want to eat oleomargarine, if it is so delicious in flavor and so nutritious in quality, they will have the opportunity, in the event of the passage of this bill, of enjoying their meals three times a day without the danger of being imposed upon by the producer and seller of pure butter, which can not be colored white to represent oleomargarine even if the farmer wanted to practice a fraud of that kind upon them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Just one moment. I understand that while I was out the gentleman said that the substitute repealed, or virtually repealed, the act of 1886, except the sections which are repeated here.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the gentleman is entirely mistaken. He has been misinformed. I made no such statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wanted to correct such a statement if it had been made.

Mr. TAWNEY. I say, therefore, we propose to reduce the tax on oleomargarine when manufactured and sold in its own color or when manufactured and sold in any other color than that of butter. And instead of destroying a so-called legitimate industry we will promote the legitimate part of that business by reducing the tax on this product, when manufactured and sold for what it is, from 2 cents to one-fourth cent per pound.

PROTECTION TO THOSE WHO WANT TO EAT BUTTER.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another class of people who are as much entitled to protection against fraud and deception as are those distinguished gentlemen who have spoken so eloquently to-day of oleomargarine. That class consists of 70,000,000 of American people who desire to eat butter and to know when they are purchasing and eating the same that it is not a counterfeit nor a spurious article, and that it is not a product resulting from a combination of by-grease products, and possibly containing substances that are absolutely deleterious to health. Hence that provision in the bill now under consideration which imposes a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleomargarine manufactured and sold in the natural color of butter. In opposition to this provision it is claimed that the farmers and dairymen color their butter, and this fact is used as a justification for permitting the manufacturers of oleomargarine to color oleomargarine.

Assuming that it is true that some makers of butter do color their butter, those who make this claim ignore the important fact that the farmer and dairyman who color their butter do not do so for the purpose of enabling their product to pass current for that which it is not, while the manufacturer of oleomargarine colors his product for no other purpose than that of enabling those who are engaged in the sale of butter to sell oleomargarine as butter and at butter prices. The dairyman who colors his butter does not thereby change the character of his product at all. It is still butter, while the manufacturer of oleomargarine colors his product for the express purpose of changing the character of the same in the estimation of the consumer. In the one case coloring matter is used simply to suit the fancy of the consumer, while in the other case coloring matter is used for the purpose of enabling the product to be sold for what it is not, thereby practicing deception and an absolute fraud upon the public. The distinction, therefore, between the purposes for which coloring matter is used should be kept constantly in mind; the one is legitimate, the other illegitimate.

When before the Committee on Agriculture, one of the manufacturers of oleomargarine, Mr. W. E. Miller, representing Armour & Co., Kansas City, Kans., frankly admitted that in its natural color oleomargarine could not be sold, or at least could not be sold to any extent that would make the business at all profitable. He said:

Representative BAKER. How large a percentage of your production of oleomargarine or butterine is uncolored?

Mr. MILLER. Uncolored? We make practically no uncolored butterine at all. There is no demand for it.

Representative BAKER. It is sold to some extent?

Mr. MILLER. Very little. I do not suppose we make 2,000 pounds of uncolored butterine a week. When the prohibitive laws went into effect in Missouri and Iowa and a number of other States we tried to do some uncolored butterine business, but we could not sell the product at all.

It is evident, therefore, that the opposition to this feature of the bill under consideration comes from the fact that to-day the business of manufacturing and selling oleomargarine thrives only because it is sold to those who are unable to distinguish between colored oleomargarine and pure butter. To do this successfully it must be sold practically at butter prices; otherwise the price would be so low that the purchaser or consumer would know at once that it was not genuine butter.

IT IS OUR DUTY TO PROTECT THE PUBLIC AGAINST FRAUD WHEN WE CAN.

I maintain, therefore, that if it is possible for Congress in the interest of the public health, in the interest of honesty and fair dealing in a product intended for human consumption, to so legislate as to put a stop to the fraud which is to-day practiced upon the people in the sale of oleomargarine, that it is our duty to do so, and I also maintain that by the imposition of a tax of 10 cents a pound on the coloring matter used in oleomargarine for the purpose of deceiving will go as far as anything possibly can in that direction. The original cost of oleomargarine, according to the testimony both in court and before the committee, including the 2-cent tax, is only 8 cents a pound. It is sold to the retail dealer at from 12 to 15 cents a pound, and by the retailer dealer is sold to the consumer at from 25 cents to 30 cents, accordingly as the price of butter varies in the different markets.

Swift & Co., of Chicago, in a brief say:

The average price of the cheapest grade of oleomargarine for the year ending December 31, 1899, was exactly 10¼ cents per pound.

This is the price charged by both manufacturers and jobbers to the retail dealer. The manufacturers, in offering their product to the retail dealer, hold out as an inducement the fact that their product is of such quality and is such a perfect imitation of butter that it can be sold at butter prices. In a circular sent the Chicago trade October 22, 1898, William J. Moxley, the largest manufacturer of oleomargarine in the United States, says, among other things:

Your profit will be double the amount made from the butter you are now handling, and your butter trade will be more satisfied if you will sell them such butterine as you can buy from me.

Or again, under date of March 17, 1899, Messrs. Braun & Fitts, of Chicago, sent to the trade a circular containing the following:

Now is your chance to build up a first-class trade by handling only first-class butterine. Eggs are selling at cost, but "The Only High Grade" will give you profit, so keep pushing its sale and build up a reputation for good butter.

They do not say, "Build up a reputation for good butterine," but for "good butter," thereby admitting that they are encouraging the retail dealer in practicing absolute fraud upon his customers.

In another circular which I have here, sent out by the Capital City Dairy Company, they represent to the trade that their butterine or oleomargarine should sell to the consumer at from 25 cents to 30 cents a pound. If, therefore, the dealer has the opportunity of buying butterine at an average of 10¼ cents a pound, as stated by Swift & Co., and can sell that product for butter at from 25 cents to 30 cents a pound, here is a profit the size of which constitutes the inducement the dealer has for engaging in this fraudulent business and also the inducement for violating the laws of his own State which prohibit him from selling oleomargarine colored as butter. This profit would be so reduced by the imposition of a tax of 10 cents a pound that no retail merchant could afford to incur the risk of being punished for thus violating the laws of his own State, and if he had customers who wanted to buy or consume oleomargarine, he would buy it in its natural color and sell it for what it is. In this way the imposition of the tax of 10 cents a pound would stamp out the fraud that is now being practiced in the business of manufacturing and selling oleomargarine.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] claimed in his remarks that this 10-cent tax would operate to drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of existence. This necessarily implies that oleomargarine can not be sold except when it is colored to resemble that which it is not, and yet he asserts that the bill under consideration will tend to encourage fraud in the sale of oleomargarine. If the effect of this measure will be to destroy the industry, it can not certainly encourage fraud.

THE MANUFACTURER PROTECTS THE DEALER.

The manufacturers of oleomargarine have themselves admitted before the Committee on Agriculture that they protect the dealers in the various States against the violation of the laws of their States. I have here a circular issued by Mr. Moxley, of Chicago, under date of August 2, 1899, in which he says to the trade:

We know exactly where we stand; we are properly advised on the subject, and now we make you a fair offer. Handle our goods as you always have; we in turn promise to guarantee full protection against the State law.

In other words, he says to the trade, "Sell our goods for butter, as you always have, and we will afford you full protection against the violation of the laws of your State."

Can any gentleman defend upon this floor or anywhere else any business or the men engaged in any business who will thus openly encourage the violation of law in the sale of their product or in the carrying on of their business by those whom they can induce to handle their product? It is an outrageous proposition, and it shows the extent to which men can be induced to go in the violation of a law for the purpose of reaping the enormous profit there is in the manufacture and sale of a counterfeit product or the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine for butter and at butter prices.

THE ALLEGED INJURY TO THE CATTLE INDUSTRY.

But it is claimed by the opponents of this bill that its passage will work great harm and injury to those engaged in the cattle business, in that it will reduce the price of cattle $3 per head. This claim rests entirely upon the supposition that all the material used in the manufacture of oleomargarine is furnished by cattle and the cattle raiser gets all the profit from the manufacture of oleo oil—a proposition that is absurd on the face of it. Let us assume that in the year 1899 5,000,000 head of cattle were slaughtered, which is a large estimate. During that year there were manufactured 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine.

According to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made to this House last May, it would be a very liberal estimate to say that one-third of the material used in the manufacture of this oleomargarine was oleo oil. Therefore there were consumed in the manufacture of these 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine 27,600,000 pounds of oleo oil, and it is also a very liberal estimate to say that all of this oleo oil is the product of tallow or the fat of cattle. But assuming that it was, this oleo oil was worth at a fair estimate 8 cents per pound. The value of the oleo oil entering into the manufacture of oleomargarine in the year 1899 was $2,208,000, or 44 cents' worth of oil from each head of cattle killed in the slaughterhouses of the country that year.

Suppose the manufacture of oleomargarine were to cease in this country and in Europe, thus destroying the market for the sale of oleo oil. The material out of which it is manufactured would then be sold for tallow, which is worth more than half the price of oleo oil. In that case the 44 cents' worth of tallow now sold as oleo oil would sell for 22 cents as tallow, and the actual loss in the event of the destruction of this business would be 22 cents a head on every steer worth from $30 to $60. The evidence before the committee does not sustain the claim that oleo oil is manufactured entirely from tallow. It appears from letters in my possession, written by men who work in this business, that a great deal of it is manufactured from garbage, refuse, offal, and all by-grease products; so that the actual loss would be infinitesimal as compared with the loss that the dairymen sustain by reason of their being driven out of the market by the manufacturers of spurious butter, or by being compelled to sell genuine butter at prices that do not afford a reasonable profit.

Another fact worthy of our consideration is that it nowhere appears, and is not claimed by the friends of oleomargarine on the floor of this House, that the man who sells the steer derives any benefit whatever on account of the increased value of oleo oil over that of tallow. A steer is bought upon the basis of the price of meat in the open market and not upon the basis of the price for which oleo oil can be sold. Instead of the farmer getting the difference there is between the price of the tallow in the beef and oleo oil it goes to either the man who slaughters the beef or to the man who manufactures and sells oleo oil. Another fact worthy of our consideration is that less than one-third of the oleo oil manufactured in this country is consumed in the manufacture of oleomargarine. During the fiscal year 1900 we exported 150,000,000 pounds of oleo oil, and this business will continue hereafter as heretofore, for the bill under consideration in no way affects the business of manufacturing and selling oleo oil as such. So that the claim that this bill, if enacted into law, will injuriously affect the cattle raisers or dealers in cattle in this country rests upon nothing whatever except the desire of these cattle associations to aid the manufacturers of oleomargarine in their effort to build up their business in defiance of the laws of the State and at the expense of the dairy industry of this country, an industry with which they are not directly or indirectly connected.

MAGNITUDE OF THE DAIRY INDUSTRY OF THE UNION.

Aside from the protection which this bill will afford every consumer of butter against the frauds and deceptions now practiced upon him, it will also afford protection to that great industry in which more than 5,000,000 farmers of the United States are directly interested—the dairy industry.

According to the statistics of the Agricultural Department there is invested in dairying in the United States more than $2,000,000,000. This includes the value of milk, cows, lands, and creameries. The production of butter the past year was 1,500,000,000 pounds, but it is estimated that only about 900,000,000 pounds of this was sold in the open market, the remainder being consumed by the producers. These statistics are amply verified by the magnitude of the dairy industry in the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

MINNESOTA'S DAIRY INDUSTRY.

For the number of its inhabitants, Minnesota is to-day the greatest dairy State in the Union. Not only in the magnitude of the industry does it excel, but it stands preeminent also because of the superior excellence of the butter manufactured by the dairymen of that State. It was the butter manufactured by Samuel Haugdahl, of New Sweden, Nicollet County, Minn., that won the first prize at the Paris Exposition of 1900, and won it, too, in competition with the butter of the whole world; it was the butter manufactured by S. P. Bork, of Bixby, Steele County, Minn., that won the first prize at the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, at Omaha, in 1898; it was the butter of Thomas Milton, of St. Paul, Minn., that carried off the prize at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in competition with the butter makers of the United States; and it was the butter of H. F. Snodergaard, of Litchfield, Minn., that won the prize for butter in the contest at Lincoln, Nebr., in 1899, with 700 competitors.

We have in our State 720 creameries, valued at $2,880,000. These creameries have 54,600 patrons. Four hundred thousand cows contribute the milk manufactured by these creameries into butter. These cows are valued at $12,000,000. Sixty-three million pounds of butter was the product of our creameries last year, and the value of that product was $12,000,000. There was in addition to this 350,000 calves, valued at $5,250,000. The value of the farm lands used for dairying, allowing 40 acres to each patron of the creameries, is $65,525,000. The farm fixtures especially used in dairying in our State are worth $5,640,000, allowing only $100 for each dairy farm. The total investment in the creamery and butter industry of Minnesota is therefore $85,860,000. Taking the butter yield, value of calves, value of surplus skim milk for feeding purposes, the annual income on this investment to the farmers of Minnesota is $19,600,000.

In addition to this we have, in the State of Minnesota, a farm dairying industry. The statistics furnished me by Prof. T. L. Haecker, of the State agricultural experiment station, show that in the farm dairying industry we have 385,000 cows, valued at $11,550,000. The value of our dairy farms, allowing 5½ acres per cow, is $63,525,000. The value of farm fixtures especially intended for dairying is $5,000,000, making a total investment in the farm dairying industry of Minnesota of $80,075,000 and an annual income to the farmers of the State from this branch of the dairy industry of $15,000,000.

The grand total, therefore, of the investment in both branches of the dairying industry in the State of Minnesota is $165,925,000, producing an income of $34,600,000 per annum.

It must be apparent to everyone, therefore, from the magnitude of the dairy industry in Minnesota alone, that in the entire country this industry leads all others except agriculture. That the future growth and prosperity of this industry is seriously menaced by the manufacture and sale of a by-grease product for butter which can only be sold in the color of butter and is sold, too, in open violation of the laws of thirty-two States, deceiving and defrauding every man and woman who purchases it or who consumes it, supposing it to be that which it resembles, is apparent from the fact that about 14 per cent of the open-market demand for butter is to-day supplied by this spurious product and that its manufacture and sale is increasing at the rate of 25,000,000 pounds a year. There are only 26 manufacturers of oleomargarine in the United States, yet these 26 manufacturers are supplying this large percentage of the open market for butter in competition with 5,000,000 farmers. They are able to do this only because they color their product so as to resemble every shade of yellow demanded by the butter trade of the country, varying the shade to conform to the color of butter in the various seasons of the year, and then they override the laws of the States and deceive the public by selling their product to the consumer for the butter of the farmer. This is the business which distinguished gentlemen upon this floor tell us is a legitimate business and should be permitted to continue.

The product of these 26 oleomargarine factories for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, was 107,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine, or 53,500 tons, sufficient to fill 5,200 freight cars and make a train 35 miles in length. If this enormous quantity of oleomargarine went to the consumer as oleomargarine, or as a substitute for butter, there could be no legitimate complaint, for in that case it would be the result of the law of the survival of the fittest; but it was not. The testimony shows conclusively that 90 per of it was consumed by people who supposed they were eating butter and who paid butter prices for it.

METHODS EMPLOYED TO DEFEAT THIS MEASURE.

Not since I have been a member of this House has there been a more persistent or systematic effort to defeat any measure than there has been to defeat the Grout bill. Every means within the power of the oleomargarine people have been employed for that purpose. These people have not only employed every available means at their command here in Washington, but they have gone into the districts represented on this floor by men who have worked conscientiously and led in this fight from the beginning of the fight for the passage of the bill, and by the use of money, charges of bribery, and every other disreputable means sought their defeat.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] told us this afternoon how certain men connected with the National Dairy

Union tried to secure his defeat. There are others upon this floor who had to contend against the influence and power of the oleo people, that overshadows by far the opposition he met.

If I would relate to this House my own experience with the dastardly efforts of these counterfeiters to discredit me in the estimation of the people I have had the honor to represent upon this floor the past eight years, it would reveal the fact that in this fight these imposters, these law-breakers, like all other men engaged in the practice of fraud and deception for profit, have had no regard for truth, reputation, or character in matters affecting their interest.

THE FARMER AND THE FUTURE SAFETY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. Speaker, the farmer does not often appear before Congress asking for legislation in his interest, but he is here now, and here in earnest. He is subjected to-day to that which no industry would quietly submit to—illegitimate and fraudulent competition.

The market for the sale of one of his most important products, which belongs to him as a matter of right, is seriously menaced. He demands protection against the loss of his legitimate market by the fraud practiced by the 26 manufacturers of oleomargarine in this country. The farmer is never aggressive, but always patient. He devotes his life to the production of those things which are relied upon for the sustenance of the people, and has, therefore, a primal right to be heard and to receive the relief which he demands by the passage of this bill. Every farmer is a stockholder in our Republic. As you protect and prosper him you add to the blessings of the whole people. Let Congress, therefore, do its duty to the farmer, who belongs to that large patriotic class of our people whose intelligent minds, rugged and patriotic hearts, are the impregnable fortress and safety of the Republic. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired, and the time for general debate under the order of the House is exhausted. The Clerk will now report the bill by paragraphs for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, etc., That all articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese, or any substance in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, transported into any State or Territory, and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon the arrival within the limits of such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted into the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles or substances had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in a separate and distinct form and in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter.

[Mr. DAHLE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will regard the amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert after the word "Territory," in the tenth line, on the first page, and after the word "Territory," in line 7, on the same page, and also in line 1, on page 2 of the bill, after the word "Territory," the words "or the District of Columbia."

These were omitted in making up the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the purpose of the gentleman is to perfect the bill in that respect, the words to which he has referred ought to be inserted in line 9 also.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman is doubtless correct. My eye did not catch the omission at the time. I move to insert these words, where it may be necessary, to complete the bill.

The amendment proposed by Mr. GROUT was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the proviso in this paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "otherwise," in line 3, down to the end of the paragraph.

[Mr. BARTLETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman in charge of the bill has a correction to propose to the printed bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is not the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] in order?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist upon his amendment?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; most assuredly.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BARTLETT, on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT) there were—ayes 48, noes 117.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, in line 11 there is a misprint. The word "in" is printed "into." I move to strike out "into" and insert "in."

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 11, page 1, strike out "into" and insert "in."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, another correction. The Clerk informs me that in the print, which he has, in line 5 the word "dairy" is printed "diary." In the reprint this morning it is correct, but it is necessary to make the correction in the copy which the Clerk has.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, there are two points of advantage to be gained by the passage of this bill—the one to suppress deceptive and counterfeit practices and the other to increase the revenues of the Government. Upon the former ground more than 7,000,000 people of this country, engaged in an industry of the value of more than five hundred millions each year, urge its passage. This unanimous appeal alone should move this body to a favorable consideration of the present bill, because it is not pretended—indeed, it can not be—that the appeal is without great merit and that the complaints are without just foundation. This universal demand of the butter producers should receive in this body immediate and conclusive favorable action, because good will come to them and no harm happen thereby to others. Legislation which defines the rights of people and describes the paths in which men shall operate can certainly do no harm, especially when it results, on the one hand, in stimulating and maintaining an honest industry, and, on the other, in the suppression of fraud and deceit.

It is not the intention of the advocates of this measure to take anything from the natural privileges of the people, nor to add one particle to the expense incident to their enjoyment. The passage of this bill will not increase the expenses of obtaining a commodity which anyone may desire. If oleomargarine is given its proper name, and given other than butter color when offered for sale, the revenue to be derived by this bill is reduced to the nominal sum of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound. This is not only a relief to the consumer, but a slight inducement to the manufacturer and the storekeeper to keep themselves honest. The assumed interest of the dealer in oleomargarine and its relations to secure it to the consumer as cheaply as possible is so beautifully generous that even the farmers are tempted to apologize for the hard feelings which they are accused of possessing. To this time it is not recorded in commercial history that the manufacturer of fatty substances had reason to manifest more benevolence than is usual to humanity.

The solicitude of these fellows for the rights of the consumers is not more real than the stuff which they make and permit to be sold under another name. They manufacture oleomargarine and sell it for butter because of the enormous profit resulting to them. If this bill did not interfere in some way with those profits, the poor of the country, for whose benefit this stir has been so well managed, might still look after their own rights and still continue as heretofore to provide their own suppers. The petitions and protests from the laborers of our and urging the defeat of this bill do not mean what they pretend to mean. As I take it, no sensible man means to petition this body to increase his cost of living or to decline to pass a law which would prevent the practices of fraud upon him. The provisions of this bill do not in any way change the ingredients of oleomargarine. They simply tend to compel the product to be kept and be known by its proper name. Oleomargarine will be cheaper and taste as good and suffice all its purposes as heretofore by the passage of this bill.

Why do the oleomargarine dealers insist upon giving their product the same color as that of butter made from milk and cream? One answer only can be made, and it is that they desire the product to look like butter. Why have it look like butter? is the natural question. The question answers itself: So that it may be mistaken for butter. It has always been the aim of oleomargarine manufacturers to make their product resemble in every way butter made from milk and cream. Their skill has enabled them to produce a material that defies the expert. Nothing short of an analysis will disclose the difference. The contention is made by those opposing the passage of this bill that the makers of butter have no right to the exclusive use of the color "yellow" and its various shades. By common consent, by long and continued usage, this color has become the property of the farmer, the dairyman, and the agriculturist. Trade, unfeeling as it may be, never thought of robbing him of his trade-mark, admitted to be his; and this Congress should be pleased to recognize his right and to assist him in its protection. The Supreme Court of the United States has held it to be within the range of legislative action to define the mode and manner in which everyone may so use his own as not to injure others. This doctrine is not new, and is not misunderstood by anyone; a principle that is recognized in every State of the Union, and made the basis of the practical administration and regulation of its police powers in the control of domestic order.

I suppose that it will not be contended by anyone that the butter producer has a statutory right to the exclusive and accepted use of this color. No statute has been passed by any tribunal pretending to confer directly upon him such a privilege. But he has established his trade and identified his product by the use of the color "yellow and its shades," so that everyone consuming it would know from what it was manufactured. The color has always been the identifier. The color adopted for centuries was selected by both producer and consumer. It was selected to be used to distinguish butter made from unadulterated milk and cream from all other substances. It is as important to the pure-butter trade as any trade-mark can be which alone distinguishes and describes the commodity which it presents.

This great business which relies upon this trade-mark can not survive if imitators are allowed to enter its precincts. It is not only for the protection of the makers of butter, but for that of the consumer also that this bill is pressed to passage. If oleomargarine be manufactured free from coloration that "causes it to look like butter," this bill does not interfere with public or private rights nor produce hardships of any kind. The sale of oleomargarine is not only permitted thereby, but encouraged to the extent of a reduction in the internal-revenue tax. The restrictive part of the bill is "aimed at the designed and intentional imitation of dairy butter in manufacturing the new product."

The opposition to this bill can not conceal itself behind the pretended interest which it manifests for the tastes and desires of the consumer. The object in coloring oleomargarine is well described by Mr. Justice Harlan in delivering the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, in Plumley v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts (155 U. S. Reports, p. 223):

> Now the real object of coloring oleomargarine so as to make it look like genuine butter is that it may appear to be what it is not, and thus induce unwary purchasers who do not closely scrutinize the label upon the package in which it is contained, to buy it, and as for butter produced from unadulterated milk or cream from such milk. The suggestion that oleomargarine is artificially colored so as to render it more palatable and attractive can only mean that consumers are deluded by such coloration into believing that they are getting genuine butter.
> If any one thinks that oleomargarine, not artificially colored so as to cause it to look like butter, is as palatable or as wholesome for purposes of food as pure butter, he is, as already observed, at liberty, under the statute of Massachusetts, to manufacture it in that state or to sell it there in such manner as to inform the customer of its real character. He is only forbidden to practice, in such matters, a fraud upon the general public. The statute seeks to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food. It compels the sale of oleomargarine for what it really is by preventing its sale for what it is not.

The Massachusetts legislature had passed a law prohibiting the sale of colored imitation butter made from unadulterated milk or cream.

This language was used by Justice Harlan in determining whether this law was in conflict with the provision of the Constitution of the United States giving Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States. The court held that the State act in no way violated the Federal Constitution, and, moreover, that any one who endeavored to commit fraud upon the public could not use that document as a shield. The justice further said in the course of the opinion:

> Can it be true that the Constitution of the United States secures to any one the privilege of manufacturing and selling an article of food in such manner as to induce the mass of people to believe that they are buying something which in fact is wholly different from that which is offered for sale? Does the freedom of commerce among the States demand a recognition of the right to practice a deception upon the public in the sale of any articles, even those that may become the subject of trade in different parts of the country?

After a most careful and elaborate review of all the cases decided in different States bearing upon the reservation of power committed to them to regulate and control commerce therein tending to permit the practice of deception upon the public, the justice disposed of the present case in the following forcible declaration of the rights of the people to protection against deceptive practices:

> It has therefore been adjudged that the States may legislate to prevent the spread of crime, and may exclude from their limits paupers, convicts, persons likely to become a public charge, and persons afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases. These and other like things having immediate connection with the health, morals, and safety of the people may be done by the States in the exercise of the right of self-defense. And yet it is supposed that the owners of a compound which has been put in a condition to cheat the public into believing that it is a particular article of food in daily use and eagerly sought by people in every condition of life are protected by the Constitution in making a sale of it against the will of the State in which it is offered for sale, because of the circumstances that it is in an original package and has become a subject of ordinary traffic. We are unwilling to accept this view.
> We are of the opinion that it is within the power of a State to exclude from its markets any compound manufactured in another State which has been artificially colored or adulterated so as to cause it to look like an article of food in general use, and the sale of which may, by reason of such coloration or adulteration, cheat the general public into purchasing that which they did not intend to buy. The Constitution of the United States does not secure o anyone the privilege of defrauding the public. The deception against whica the statute of Massachusetts is aimed is an offense against society, and the States are as competent to protect their people against such offenses or wrongs as they are to protect them against crimes or wrongs of more serious character; and this protection may be given without violating any right secured by the national Constitution and without infringing the authority of the General Government. A State enactment forbidding the sale of deceitful imitations of articles of food in general use among the people does not abridge any privilege secured to citizens of the United States nor, in any just sense, interfere with the freedom of commerce among the several States.

I have heard no one dispute the proposition that the sale of oleomargarine in imitation of butter is a fraud, and that those guilty of the practice are amenable to punishment in courts of justice. Why, then, should there be such an effort made to enable the makers and sellers of oleomargarine to deal in their imitation product? Why should its advocates avow their purpose to maintain, through the failure of legislation, a business that has but two great objects—deception and enormous profits. The only way to secure to the farmer the protection he demands is to separate butter and oleomargarine from each other. The only way to protect the general public from the results of deception and cheating is to require these two products to maintain different colors. It is not the purpose of this bill or its advocates to keep butter and oleomargarine from the same market stall. The butter dealer does not demand permission to color his product in imitation of any color which the oleomargarine dealer may select; he demands protection from the admitted wrongs of the latter; he asks to have continued possession of a property which he by great diligence and persistence has lawfully and in good conscience acquired.

The first section of the bill enables courts in the different States to enforce their laws against what is known as the original-package man. Nearly every State in the Union has a law either driving the butter imitator from the field or restraining him in his business, so as to afford the public the best possible protection. Prosecuting officers are oftentimes baffled in their attempts to enforce State laws because of their fear of crossing boundaries defining their jurisdiction. This provision, if it should become a law, will supply them with an assured power which nearly every defendant denies, and will relieve prosecutions from an embarrassment which nearly every offender seeks or threatens to inflict. State courts will then stand ready and fully equipped to execute statutes made to enforce its police powers in the regulation of its internal affairs and to restrain the noxious acts of its inhabitants.

The second section of the act in no wise licenses fraud or permits the sale of imitation food products. If the manufacturer insists upon coloring his product in imitation of butter he shall be compelled to pay to the Government 10 cents per pound for such colored commodity, subject to all the provisions of the act of Congress of August 2, 1886, entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine." These provisions are made to secure the public against imposition, and the oleomargarine manufacturer will still have to comply with them in addition to making the payment of a tax of 10 cents per pound. When oleomargarine reaches the boundaries of the State in which it is consigned, although it may have had on it a tax of 10 cents per pound, and although all the provisions of the act above referred to may have been complied with, the State authorities without interruption may sieze it if it is in imitation of butter, provided a State law exists prohibiting its sale in that condition. Here is where the offender will find himself confronted by an obstacle which he has himself erected.

It may not be a sensible argument in support of this measure, nor of any service to its advocates, to recite the monstrous wrongs committed by the manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine against the farmers, dairymen, creamery men, and agriculturists of my State and of my Congressional district. In the latter territory the farmer and the dairymen have lived and thrived since the day William Penn marked it for his own. The productions of the farm and the dairy have been to them a chief source of living at all times and have supplied Philadelphia, within a morning's trip, with the finest and most palatable luxuries. It stands an equal in agricultural and dairy products with any section of the United States, as an examination of the statistics of the Agricultural Department will show me justified in stating.

Here the farmer has always prided himself on his progress and has earned a reputation for high honor in the practice of his profession. He has always kept himself modern in all actions of life and quit an old habit as soon as he discovered a better one. Farming and dairying have at all times brought him a good living and enabled him to indulge in luxuries common to a well regulated and cultivated society. While his ways may perhaps have been classed as amongst those of the simpler ones of life, he has well earned his reputation for honesty, for observance of domestic order, and for exemption from the social vices found in ordinary society. Many a farm can trace in its present occupant and his ancestry a possession of the same fields for more than two centuries. He has never cared to go beyond the legitimate boundaries of his occupation, and no thought of swindling either his patrons or his competitors ever took possession of him.

The ills of life he has borne without complaint, and has always expressed his satisfaction in the success of enterprises other than his own. That the fertile fields of Chester and Delaware have rewarded these sober-minded people for all their toil their present condition of life bears ample evidence. That they have moved with the rest of the world, advanced as it advanced, and improved as it improved the appearance of magnificent farms, cultivated with the most modern machinery and in the most approved manner, stocked with fine cattle, and adorned with handsome farm buildings supplied with every betterment known to the profession, furnish conclusive evidence and testify to their thrift and intelligence. The creamery has supplanted the spring, and within the last twenty years, because of this modern and successful method of producing butter, the business of the dairyman has more than doubled in this district.

The farmer has gone through business depression without complaint and without appeal to his Government for help. Not until the hand of the imitator and the swindler was found in his midst, an evil which he could not remedy alone, and an obstruction to his legitimate business which he could not remove alone, has he ever made an appeal to the greatest law-giving tribunal of this land for relief. This imitation product has come as his competitor, and after a struggle of fifteen years to keep it to itself, to be called by its right name, the farmer is prepared to prove that but one successful and complete remedy is left to him, and that is through this body, for a law which will enable the different States of the Union to legislate effectually against the article shipped therein in what is known as an original package. The farmer has no fear of this ruinous competition so long as oleomargarine may be sold by its right name. To secure this result, they must be offered on the market dissimilar in color. Every other remedy has been tried, every trial has resulted in failure. The more perfect the imitation, the better the opportunity to work the deception.

On good butter the farmer has a profit when the retail price exceeds the sum of 25 cents per pound, for it costs him that much to produce it. On the counterfeit sold as "Extra Fancy Creamery," the favorite name adopted by its counterfeiter, a profit is realized if the sale is made above the price of 7 cents per pound, the cost of its production. The aim of the counterfeiter is to sell his well-made counterfeit, in both appearance and name, at about the sum of 25 cents per pound. In this he is not always successful, but an enumeration of a number of sales in Philadelphia during the winter of 1900, in which the date of the sale is given, the name of the vender with his address, and the price at which he succeeded in working off his imitation, will at least prove my statement to be truthful:

LEVI WELLS,
Dairy and Food Commissioner.

This list was furnished me by Mr. Wells last spring, the then dairy and food commissioner of Pennsylvania, at my request, with the additional information that high-grade butter during that period ranged in price in Philadelphia markets from 30 to 35 cents per pound. He further informed me that in each one of these sales butter was inquired for, and the vendor pushed on his supposedly innocent customer oleomargarine, on which a profit of 15 to 20 cents per pound had been secured to somebody. The farmer's high-grade butter should have brought at the retailer's stall 40 cents per pound, and his profits should have been 15 cents per pound instead of 5 or 6 cents.

In addition to this official list of violators of the oleomargarine laws of Pennsylvania, I have a statement from a reliable agent of the dairy and food commissioner of that State showing that he had bought, within a period of a few months, over two hundred samples of this counterfeit put up in rolls to imitate farmers' rolls and creamery prints. In every case he inquired for butter and received and paid for oleomargarine at butter prices or within two or three cents of it. In every case it was colored in exact imitation of butter, and in many cases the prints were neatly put up in wrappers on which was branded the illusory, tempting, and familiar designation belonging to the manufacturers of good butter, "Mf's Creamery," "Crescent," "Clover," etc.

Farmers in my Congressional district can not survive on a profit of 5 or 6 cents per pound for butter. The competition which takes from him what he is justly entitled to demand is a dishonest one and courts and legislatures should act with promptness and unanimity where their power is invoked in order to prevent it. This deceptive practice is held, by the highest judicial tribunal in our land, to warrant the legislatures of the different States in the enactment of laws prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine colored like butter. Because the business is a swindle, and for this reason alone, are the lawmakers clothed with sufficient power to exclude the imitation from the markets and to punish everyone who lays his hand on it for the purpose of profit.

Should this bill pass, the Government will furnish the preliminary remedy by the imposition of a tax of 10 cents per pound on the counterfeit, reducing the profit of the counterfeiter, thereby depriving him of so much profit, and his temptation to dishonesty in that proportion. This addition to his burdens will force him to raise the price of his commodity, thereby raising the price of butter, while the best article will have the same effect upon the farmer's best production. While this kind of competition can not, perhaps, be urged as a good reason for the passage of legislation, admitting oleomargarine to be not unhealthful, yet the great wrong done thereby should induce the legislature to look for the reasons warranting favorable action.

The reasons which I have given should be sufficient to induce the support of this bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture. It tends to the suppression of crime and the maintenance of good order. It furnishes additional remedies to those already in existence.

Mr. Speaker, it is contended here that the present Federal law supplies all the power necessary to suppress the swindle, which the adversaries of the present bill coolly admit in this debate is practiced everywhere in the United States with defiance and deliberate design. This is not so, and a few facts will rebut their arguments and turn aside theories which I am inclined to think are made to please their constituents rather than convince their hearers.

In Pennsylvania there are now pending 946 prosecutions for violation of its statute of 1899, imposing penalties. These prosecutions have all been brought since the first day of the present year. During that same period of time 126 prosecutions, brought within it, have been terminated, making a grand total of 1,072 prosecutions, and all these in addition to the many infractions of the same law which have not been discovered. Detections are difficult and convictions are obtained after long and spirited contest. Officers of the law have been faithful and diligent in their pursuit after these violators. When detection takes place every art known to the legal profession is employed in their defense. Questions of the law's constitutionality are raised, test cases made, appeals to higher courts taken, and all possible delays resorted to in order that justice may fail or punishment be postponed.

The seller of colored oleomargarine has become as cute and wary as those who deal in any other counterfeit commodity. His profit is large enough to induce him to break a penal law, but does not furnish him a remuneration sufficient to enable him to hire good legal talent and keep up a war which is often ended in a court of last resort. Where do the means come from for such purposes? I believe they come from the manufacturers. I believe it because they ship their colored product into States which have enacted laws prohibiting its sale. It is against them the provisions of this law are directed, and until they can be restrained the swindle will go on. When State laws can be used to punish the original-package man, and Federal laws are in force to compel the manufacturers to pay the Government a tax, as provided in this bill, the demands of justice and equality will be reached.

The substitute for this bill, reported by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture, does not pretend to furnish the remedy demanded. Without further restraint imposed upon him than that provided in existing law, the manufacturer may continue to practice his deceit. The provisions in the substitute for wrapper stamping and branding, etc., to be done by the manufacturer, are satisfactory to him. Any law which permits him to imitate butter meets his approval. Such restrictions proposed in the substitute have been tried in many of the different States, only to find them unsuccessful.

Oleomargarine in its natural state is one commodity; when colored resembling butter it becomes another. In the former case it has a value; in the latter a much larger one. The tax of 2 cents per pound imposed by existing law is held to be fair. The size of the tax was predicated upon the understanding that it was to be placed upon oleomargarine. If the value of the product is to be increased, and indeed the product itself changed to another, the proposed tax of 10 cents per pound is equally fair. Lawyers differ upon the power of Congress to impose this tax of 10 cents. No argument, however, has been made here to-day that convinces this body of its lack of such power. If it does not exist, another tribunal is constituted for the express purpose of making it known. My duty is plain, and its performance a pleasure.

If, when this measure becomes a law, as I believe it will at the present session of Congress, it shall be found ineffectual for the purpose of correcting this great evil, the war just begun will continue. It will go on and on until a remedy is secured through this legislative body that, when enforced by courts of justice, will correct one of the great wrongs of its time and secure to the agriculturist, the farmer, and the dairyman a protection for his product against the work of the imitator, whose imitation threatens their destruction.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, we have all become familiar with the principle——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FLEMING. I desire to renew the amendment.

We have all become familiar with the principle known as the American protective system, by which the National Congress levies a tariff tax, collected at the custom-house, for the purpose of protecting an American industry against a foreign competitor; but this will be the only law upon the statute books of the United States which seeks to apply that principle of tariff protection in favor of one American citizen or one American industry against another American citizen or another American industry. We are accustomed to tariff protection at the custom-house, but this is a bill under which we have tariff protection through the Internal-Revenue Department.

We have heard a good deal, Mr. Speaker, about the deception practiced by the manufacturers of oleomargarine. I admire candor in all men, and I only wish that the men in charge of this bill would have the candor to put upon the face of the bill the real purpose that they have in view. They have argued for hours upon the passage of this measure. Not one word has been said in favor of its passage on the ground that it is a revenue-producing measure, and yet that would be the only legal justification this bill could have here or could have before the Supreme Court of the United States. We know its purpose is not to raise revenue, but to give advantage to one industry over another competitive industry; and we know that if the gentlemen in charge of the bill will only write on its face its real purpose it can do no harm, because the Supreme Court of the United States would declare it illegal without a moment's hesitation. The bill as it is now drawn is not unconstitutional, and will not be held so by the Supreme Court.

But why? Simply because the Supreme Court of the United States can not impugn the purpose, intention, or motive of the legislative department of the Government. And yet every man in this House knows what that purpose is. Your purpose is not to raise revenue, but to strike down one industry for the benefit of another. If the Supreme Court could take judicial knowledge of the real object of the bill, they would declare it unconstitutional without the slightest hesitation.

Mr. Speaker, it is a bad precedent when the taxing power of the Government is used, not as we have done heretofore, by a tariff to protect our people against foreigners, but when it is used to protect one American industry against another legitimate American industry. When you start out in that course, where are you going to stop? Just as well, sir, might the producer of cane sugar in Louisiana come to Congress and say, "I can not compete with the beet-sugar producer of the West," and ask that a tax of 10 cents a pound be put on beet sugar. Just as well might the beet-sugar producer of the West say, "I can not compete with the cane-sugar producer of Louisiana," and ask that that industry be crushed. Mr. Speaker, such a practice will leave the whole matter to be decided by a mere numerical majority, and of all the tyrannies known to legislative history none is so great as the tyranny of numerical majorities.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, this measure, familiarly known as "the Grout bill," is one of the most important that can go upon the statute books. It seeks to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported and to impose a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleomargarine when colored to resemble butter. It is not new in the field of legislation, nor are the questions involved either novel or of uncertain legality. Thirty-two States, possessing four-fifths of the population of the United States, absolutely forbid the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine when colored to resemble butter, and the highest courts in those States, including the Supreme Court of the United States, have upheld the constitutionality and validity of these laws. This proposed legislation, therefore, is in line with the policy and the expressed wish of a large majority of the people of our country.

The opponents of this bill assume at the outset of the discussion that oleomargarine is as wholesome and healthful a food product as butter. In its report the minority of the committee labors hard to prove this assumption. Opinions of "leading scientists" are given at length, backed by "Ph. D.'s" and "LL. D.'s," and supported by chemists' certificates and the dicta of courts. But plain everyday facts show that oleomargarine is neither as wholesome nor as healthful as butter. The oleomargarine tested by the friends of this measure is taken from the stock offered for sale in the grocery stores—not from the supply made purposely for the laboratories.

In July, 1899, samples of oleomargarine taken from stores in New York and Brooklyn were found to contain 10 per cent of paraffin. In other words, a 60-pound tub of oleomargarine would contain 6 pounds of paraffin, "a substance," says the president of the National Dairy Union, "which the strongest acids are unable to affect." One of the uses of paraffin is to protect bronze and marble statues from the weather. As a food product it is absolutely indigestible.

Among the articles named in the patents granted for the manufacture of substitute butter are borax, cotton-seed oil, bicarbonate of soda, alum, glycerin, sulphuric acid, tallow, corn starch, caustic potash, castor oil, chalk, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, turnip-seed oil, chlorate of potash, oil of peanuts, nitrate of soda, stomach of pigs, nitric acid, mustard-seed oil, sugar, caustic soda, and bicarbonate of potash. It is possible that so-called "neutral grease," when subjected to these acids and alkalies, may be wholesome butter, but, "leading scientists" to the contrary, 32 States, having over 60,000,000 people, have prohibited such deodorized grease from being colored in imitation of butter and sold in the market.

It is no secret that butter fat, found in the milk of all mammals, is the natural food of infant offspring, having the most delicate of all digestion, and that milk and its butter product are among the most healthful and important articles of food. The young, the sick, the old—everybody can use them with the least possible harm. Butter melts at 92 degrees, and the normal heat of the human stomach is 98 degrees. Naturally this fat, taken in its raw state into the stomach, will digest easily and imperceptibly. Nature so intended.

On the other hand, oleomargarine melts at a temperature varying from 102° to 106°, "a temperature," says ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, "which no healthful stomach ever attains. As a consequence, this unnatural foreign fat must be expelled by sheer gastric action and force." When stearin, of which candles are made, or paraffin, whose use has already been indicated, is added, in order to make the cotton-seed oil stand up like butter, the digestible character of the mixture may well be doubted. Possibly strong men whose work keeps them out of doors ten or twelve hours a day may be able to dispose of it without injury, but men of sedentary habits and people with delicate stomachs can not use it with impunity.

But, Mr. Speaker, oleomargarine is used in public institutions, say the opponents of this bill. That is undoubtedly true. Mr. Edmund Hill, of the Somerset County council, England, is authority for the statement that it is eaten by the inmates of the Wells county asylum, with which he is connected. In the asylums of the neighboring counties—Dorset and Hants—butter is furnished, and the death rate at Wells is 30 per cent higher. At the Taunton Hospital, when butter was used, 11 deaths occurred in thirteen months; when oleomargarine was substituted, 22 deaths occurred in nine months. The same authority states that the use of oleomargarine is forbidden in the hospitals of France. The president of the National Dairy Union declares that in institutions for the blind and for girls in the United States the use of oleomargarine has very perceptibly lowered the vitality of the inmates. Many other well-authenticated reports show that oleomargarine is clearly not as healthful as butter.

But whether healthful or not, if people prefer to use oleomargarine in its uncolored state as a substitute for butter because of its cheapness or for other reasons they have and ought to have the right to do so, and dealers should have the privilege of selling it to them. Nor does this bill withdraw or curtail that right. It seeks only to impose upon it a tax of 10 cents per pound when colored in imitation of butter. No one has a moral right nor a legal right, under existing laws in 32 States, to color it or sell it as butter.

The fact that it is a recognized food product can make no difference. Flour is a staple article of food, but it is a deception to sell it in pulverized sugar. Peas, as a food product, are healthful and desirable, but it is a swindle to sell them for coffee. So oleomargarine may be clean and palatable, but to give it the color of butter and sell it as butter is a deception—probably the greatest deception practiced in the sale of food products.

Mr. Speaker, it is stated, apparently on good authority, that 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured last year and sold to the people of the country for about $20,000,000, with a profit to the manufacturers and dealers of $10,000,000 to $12,000,000. There is no wrong in this if it is uncolored and sold as oleomargarine; but when colored in imitation of butter and sold as butter the transaction takes the form of a swindle.

The fact that inferior qualities of butter are colored and sold as a superior quality does not make it right to color and sell oleomargarine as butter. A reprehensible practice in the sale of butter is no excuse for the perpetration of a fraud in the sale of oleomargarine, nor does it extenuate or lessen the fraud because oleomargarine may be a clean food product and capable of use as a substitute for butter. Such suggestions are unworthy the gentlemen making them.

Mr. Speaker, admitting all that is claimed for oleomargarine as a food product, the fact remains, as appears from the reports, that its ready sale is dependent almost entirely upon its imitation of butter. The author of this bill is authority for the statement that not one pound in a million of colored oleomargarine is bought and eaten by the consumer for what t is. The dealer may know its true character, and hotel and restaurant keepers and other customers may have purchased it with the same information, but those, as a rule, who eat it do so believing it to be butter. It is put up like butter, served like butter, and colored like butter, while its taste, unfamiliar to the consumer because butter is never present for comparison, may not disclose its character.

The methods of its sale prove that it is never intended to be known by its right name. Four-fifths of the colored article, says the majority report of the committee, is sold illegally, as indicated by the reports of the Treasury Department. Wrappers and stamps are removed, not only to deceive revenue officers and secure its salesmen from arrest and prosecution, but to prevent consumers and small purchasers from obtaining knowledge of its true character.

The assistant commissioner of agriculture in the State of New York reports that it is put up in 2, 3, and 5 pound packages and delivered by wagons to boarding houses, restaurants, hotels, and other customers whose names and addresses are designated by registered numbers, so that if venders are detected and arrested for violating law, their customers may not be involved with them. A prominent firm in Newark, N. J., declared, under date of June 4, 1900, that the whole business of marketing oleomargarine is deceit and deception. The dairy commissioners in the State of Connecticut report finding 3,600 pounds hidden in the cellar of an undertaker's warehouse, concealed behind coffins and within caskets.

The great profits arising from its sale make men willing to take such chances. Oleomargarine sold as butter returns an average profit of about 15 cents per pound. Armour & Co. report that its cost, including a 2-cent tax, does not exceed 7 cents per pound. When sold as butter, it brings from 18 to 30 cents per pound. Such profits not only become an irresistible temptation to sell the product, despite State and United States laws, but they too often create a fund whose influence prevents the rigid enforcement of law.

The opponents of this measure, in the minority report, complain that as nothing in the bill decreases the temptation or increases the difficulty of such violations, the increased taxation must either be fraudulently evaded or force the honest manufacturers out of business. A bill need not safeguard the collection of an increased tax on oleomargarine any more than an increased tax on whisky. Penalties for violation of law and methods for detecting fraud are already sufficient. But why should an honest manufacturer of oleomargarine be forced out of business by this bill? An honest manufacturer will not now seek to color his product in imitation of butter, because that is prohibited by law in 32 States, while this measure reduces the tax on the honest product from 2 cents to one-fourth of a cent per pound.

Nor will this measure crush out the manufacture of oleomargarine and eliminate it as a food product unless it be true that the people now purchasing it in the belief that it is butter will refuse to buy it when it appears as "white grease," without the color or semblance of butter. The minority of the committee in its report claim that "oleomargarine is now practically all bought by the poorer classes of our people." Whether these consumers will continue to eat it after their eyes are opened to its character is a problem for the future. If they refuse, the manufacturers of oleomargarine will be crippled, if not crushed; if they continue to buy it, its manufacture and sale will at least be transferred into honest methods.

It is idle to compare the sales of butter with those of oleomargarine, and argue that since the latter do not curtail the former, the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine should not be disturbed. Suppose 2,000,000,000 pounds of butter are made and sold annually and only 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine, what has that to do with the question? This measure is not predicated upon commercialism. No one objects to the manufacture and sale of uncolored oleomargarine, and all are indifferent as to whether the price of butter is or can be controlled by the price of uncolored oleomargarine.

The principle involved in this measure is one of common, every-day honesty. It is only when the manufacturers and venders of oleomargarine seek to dispose of it for what it is not, that the people are aroused, and the law invoked. The public can not be deceived. They know what influences its sale. Only when colored in imitation of butter and sold as butter is it purchased or eaten. In other words, only when fraud is perpetrated can it be profitably put upon the market. If this were not true, the manufacturers and venders of oleomargarine would not be now so bitterly assailing this bill.

It is to prevent deception, therefore, that this measure is presented, and the farmer who eats butter churned from the milk given by his own cows is not any more interested in its passage than the millions of people who are compelled to purchase butter, and who desire protection from the deception of oleomargarine vendors.

Mr. HAUGEN rose.

Mr. GROUT. I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont moves that all debate upon this paragraph be closed. Pending that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa, a member of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to withdraw his motion until the gentleman from Iowa has been heard.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, why can not the gentleman wait until the next paragraph has been read, and let us go on and get through with this paragraph? I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed on this paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the second section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That after the passage of this act the tax upon oleomargarine as prescribed in section 8 of the act approved August 2, 1886, and entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not colored in imitation of butter; but when colored in imitation of butter the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 10 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of said act.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me one moment. In this connection there should be a time fixed when this act shall take effect, inasmuch as it changes the proceedings of the Internal-Revenue Department; and I ask that these words be added: "This act shall take effect July 1, 1901."

I move the adoption of that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And this act shall take effect July 1, 1901.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The first line of section 2 reads: "That after the passage of this act the tax upon," etc., "shall be," etc. Now, if you want to change the time fixed in the bill, you must make some amendment to line 1 of section 2, and say, "Upon July 1, after the passage," etc.

Mr. GROUT. Very well, if the gentleman desires, we will substitute that language there, "On July 1——

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like to know from the gentleman from Vermont why postpone this tax on this article to July?

Mr. GROUT. The Department can not arrange for the necessary inspection at once. I move that the words "after the passage" be stricken out in line 9 of section 2 and the words "on and after July 1, 1901," be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "after the passage of this act" in line 9, page 2, and insert "on and after July 1, 1901;" so that it will read: "That on and after July 1, 1901, the tax," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with the fact that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine has grown from the insignificant sum of 21,513,537 pounds in 1888 to 83,000,000 in 1899, and to the enormous sum of 107,045,028 in the past year, a gain of 500 per cent in twelve years. I venture the assertion, without fear of successful contradiction, that at least 75 per cent of this counterfeit substitute is sold and eaten for pure butter, at butter prices, and in defiance of the law.

I need make no apology for my statement when I say that the public welfare demands the enactment of the Grout bill, that the gross fraud and deception being perpetrated may be suppressed, and to protect the millions of consumers and at least give them the right and privilege to choose between the genuine article and this unwholesome substitute.

Thirty-two States, representing according to the Federal census of 1890, a population of 50,117,440, or about five-sixths of the total population of the United States, have enacted laws absolutely prohibiting the sale of yellow oleomargarine. Yet we find, according to Secretary Gage's report in response to a resolution passed by this House the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, that 5,492 dealers are engaged in the selling of this counterfeit, and that in violation of the laws. That these dealers are flourishing and doing a wholesale business is evidenced by the fact, according to Secretary Gage's report during the fiscal year ending June, 1899, that 62,825,582 pounds of yellow oleomargarine made in semblance of butter was sold by the 5,492 dealers in these thirty-two States, while 1,501 dealers sold only 16,860,141 pounds in the remaining twenty States and Territories.

In my State we have a drastic law absolutely prohibiting the coloring of imitation butter or cheese. It provides "that every package shall be plainly marked 'Substitute for butter' or 'Substitute for cheese,' and each sale shall be accompanied by a verbal notice and a printed statement that the article is an imitation, * * * giving the address of the maker; and that the use of these imitations in hotels, bakeries, etc., must be made known by signs." Nevertheless, as shown by Secretary Gage's report, I find that three dealers sold 79,923 pounds of yellow oleomargarine in the year 1899, in my own State, every pound of it sold in violation of the law; and every pound thus sold displaced a pound of butter and robbed the dairy producer of his legitimate market.

I have before me a letter from our dairy commissioner, dated December 3, 1900, in response to my inquiry made a few days ago, as to the operation of our State law, etc. I will read a part of this letter which bears upon this point:

> Iowa makes one-tenth the butter of the United States, and we are correspondingly injured by fraudulent competition with butter (?) made out of something not the fat from the milk of the cow. I have no doubt that we are injured $2,500,000 every year for the benefit of the oleomargarine producer, and the consumer is not at all benefited. There is only one place in Iowa where oleomargarine is used as such, but there are plenty of places where it is used as butter, which is proved by the fact that we get one of them about once in six weeks.
> There is not a dairyman in Iowa that is not in favor of the Grout bill, and I sincerely hope it will pass both Houses of Congress.
>
> Respectfully,
> B. P. NORTON, Dairy Commissioner.

Notwithstanding the fact that this law has been violated and is being violated every day of the year, in spite of the able and most persistent efforts on the part of our efficient dairy commissioner to enforce this law, I am pleased that I had the pleasure and honor of being a member of the legislature that enacted this law and assisting in its passage.

While this law does not totally check the fraudulent sale of this article, everything was done that could be done by State legislation, and it has to a great degree checked the perpetration of this fraud.

Experience has taught us that State laws are inadequate, and our dairy producers are justly demanding national legislation, and I am glad of the opportunity to put forth my humble efforts in securing the passage of a measure which is of such vital importance to the producers as well as the consumers.

The Grout bill is not an unjust or oppressive measure. It is not a bill, as stated in the views of the minority, "to ruin one industry to benefit another, and to destroy the business of the legitimate oleomargarine manufacturers." Purity and wholesomeness is the purpose of this legislation, and a protection to pure-butter producers against fraudulent competition, as well as to reduce the price of oleomargarine to its consumers—that is, when sold in its natural color, and for what it is.

The bill simply provides that all counterfeit substitutes for butter, when taken into any State or Territory, shall be subject to the laws of the States or Territories concerning such counterfeit. The bill also provides that on all oleomargarine not in semblance of butter the present Federal tax of 2 cents per pound shall be reduced to ¼ cent per pound.

So if there is anyone who wishes to buy this inferior article in preference to pure butter they will be able to buy it for what it is worth, and not be swindled and compelled to pay butter prices. Or, in other words, the poor, for whom the oleomargarine combine profess to have so much sympathy, can buy the oleomargarine from 8 to 12 cents per pound where they are now compelled to pay from 12 to 35 cents per pound. I base this estimate on Armour & Co.'s own statement, made before the Federal district court in New York, where they testified that "with the 2 cents Federal tax added the cost of oleomargarine was less than 7 cents per pound;" also upon statements to our committee by representatives of oleomargarine during the last session of Congress. According to their own statements, if the tax is reduced 1¾ cents per pound the cost would be less than 5¼ cents, and it certainly could be sold for 8 to 12 cents per pound.

The bill further provides that a tax of 10 cents per pound shall be imposed on all oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter, leaving license fees for its manufacture and sale the same as provided for in the law of 1886. The fact that oleomargarine can be manufactured, colored, and sold to dealers for 8 to 12 cents per pound, with pure butter selling from 20 to 30 cents per pound, is an incentive to the dealers to deal fraudulently with their customers in palming off the substitute for the genuine article. This 10-cent tax added to the cost of manufacturing this counterfeit substitute colored in semblance of butter will bring it nearer to the price of pure butter, and in my opinion will lessen the temptation of deceptive sale and do away with the competition between a fraudulent and an honest industry. It will at least modify it.

Besides this, it will protect our dairy export trade. Of late years the Dominion of Canada has taken away from us a large portion of our export trade. Canada absolutely prohibits the making of counterfeit butter and cheese, and thus reaps the benefit of foreign trade.

According to the Federal census of 1890, there were over 12,000,000 heads of families engaged in agricultural pursuits, and of this number there were more than 5,000,000 farmers engaged in the dairy business, producing more than 2,000,000,000 pounds of butter annually, valued at more than $500,000,000. These millions of producers are entitled to some consideration, and their industry should be protected against fraud and deception, as well as protecting the millions and millions of consumers of dairy products who are imposed upon and swindled by a counterfeit substitute which is so detrimental to health.

Much has been said in favor of oleomargarine and many able arguments presented before the committee of which I have the honor of being a member, especially as to its wholesomeness. I am not a chemist; however, I have had some experience with oleomargarine, and have been where it is manufactured, and I state without fear of contradiction that there is something about the odor of some of its ingredients that is sickening and far from pleasing. I, for my part, prefer to be at least a mile away from where these obnoxious elements of oleomargarine are handled.

Without going into further details, I wish to read the statement of Hugh Reed, foreman of one of the departments of public printing, and whose truthworthiness is vouched for by one of the honored members of this House, a statement which appeared in the Evening Star May 10, 1900, in an interview given in response to the question, "Is it true that all kinds of fat are used in Chicago to make oleo oil, which is made into oleomargarine?" Reed replied:

> I know positively that this is true. I was one of the few who in workmen's clothes was permitted to go through some of the establishments where oleo oil is made in that city. There was one place, at the corner of Archer avenue and —— street (he gave its name), where the scraps from the restaurants and hotels of Chicago were taken by their ten collectors with wagons for the purpose every day. I have been right in this place and seen these scraps of fat put through the processes that bring them finally into the bags in the presses where the oil is pressed out of them.
> The scraps from these restaurants and hotels are divided into two classes—one from which the oleo oil is made, the other going into soap. Not only that, but this same establishment purchased the fat from the horse butchery out on the Brighton road, which fat was used in the same manner as the scraps from the hotels and restaurants. And what I saw with my own eyes at this place is well known to the employees and workingmen in that neighborhood, and the subject of common discussion throughout that locality. I have a close relative employed in one of these concerns right now, and he knows all about the business from a to z.
> Dr. De Schweinitz, of the Agricultural Department, in his visit to a factory which was several years ago located in Philadelphia, found the same condition of affairs. Oleo oil was being made from a pile of fat scraps collected from the hotels, restaurants, and butcher shops, which pile gave out such an odor that it was sickening, and the makers admitted it was being made into oleomargarine. The same thing was found by a reporter of the Newark Advertiser early in January of this year, when he stumbled onto a rendering establishment near that city that was doing the same thing.
> But it is easy to prove by statistics which are indisputable that every kind of fat and scraps are being used in the manufacture of oleo oil, which goes later into oleomargarine. The makers of oleomargarine claim that the carcasses from which their fats are taken "are killed under the supervision of the Government," hence perfectly wholesome and healthful. This is their strong argument—"all oleomargarine made under the supervision of the Government."

We also have the evidence before our committee of ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, a gentleman whose veracity can not be questioned and whose character is above reproach; a man who has given this subject much thought and attention. Up to this time his statements have not been refuted, so far as I know. I refer to his testimony as given on pages 3 and 4 of the hearings on oleomargarine before the Agricultural Committee, March 7, 1900:

> Is oleomargarine a healthful food? There is no way to determine this question except by actual trial; not for a day, a week, or a month, but for several successive months, and not with strong, robust men with plenty of outdoor exercise.

Chemistry can not answer. For example, the chemist will tell you that he finds the same elements in swamp peat that are found in the grasses and hays that are fed to our cows, and in approximately the same proportion. And the chemist is at a loss to determine from the standpoint of his science why cattle should not feed on swamp peat. Chemistry can not determine whether any particular substance is poisonous or not. It must take a stomache to do that.

There is no credible evidence to show that oleomargarine is innocuous; no evidence to show that when eaten continuously in place of butter it is not harmful. But there are reports in great abundance to the effect that oleomargarine is harmful.

Mr. Edmund Hill, a member of the Somerset County council, England, reports that the great bulk of oleomargarine, or "margarine" as it is called there, is eaten in public institutions, convents, schools, etc. At the Wells Asylum, with which he is connected, the inmates receive oleomargarine. In the asylums of Dorset, Wells, and Hants—the adjoining counties—butter is furnished, and the death rate at Wells is 30 per cent higher. At the Taunton Hospital there were 11 deaths in thirteen months. Oleomargarine was substituted, and in nine months the deaths rose to 22.

This accords with the experience in France, where its use in hospitals is forbidden. In the United States, in institutions for the blind and for girls, it has been noticed that the use of oleomargarine lowered the vitality of the inmates very perceptibly.

There is abundant reason for this. The normal heat of the human stomach is 98°. Butter melts at 92°, 6° below the heat of the stomach, passes into pancreatic emulsion and digestion. Nature designed this fat in its raw state for food.

Oleomargarine melts at the varying temperature of 102° to 108°, a temperature no healthful stomach ever attains. As a consequence, this unnatural foreign fat must be expelled by sheer gastric action and force.

Butter fat is found in the milk of all mammals. It is chemically and physically unlike any other fat in existence. It was designed by nature for the food and sustenance of infant offspring, having the most delicate of all digestion. Because of this most evident purpose and provision of nature, butter forms a healthful and important article of food in milk, cream, and in its separated state.

No matter what paid chemists may say, no counterfeit, even in its purest state, is wholesome or healthful.

But there is another phase of this question. There is absolutely no protection for the public against most dangerous introduction of positively unhealthful compounds into oleomargarine.

The Journal of the American Chemical Society and the department of agriculture of New York abound in proof of the adulteration of oleomargarine with paraffin, a substance which the strongest acids even are unable to affect. There is no reason on earth why the foulest of germ-laden fats should not be used in the making of this compound, when once they are deodorized by the aid of chemistry.

This would indicate that oleomargarine is not altogether a wholesome food and far from what is claimed for it.

Another argument advanced by the friends of oleomargarine is that the enactment of this bill would ruin the cattle industry of this country. I will read some resolutions adopted by cattle-raisers' associations claiming a membership of 1,200 from different sections of this country. The meeting was held at Fort Worth on the 13th and 14th of March, 1900, and printed on page 71 of the hearings before the Agricultural Committee on March 7, 1900, which reads as follows:

The enactment of such laws would completely destroy a business which has been recognized by law, which now furnishes a large annual revenue to the Government ($1,956,618 in A. D. 1899), which provides employment for thousands of men, and in which citizens of the United States have invested fortunes. It would seriously affect the cattle industry, as the manufacturers of oleomargarine have created a demand for oleo oil, made from the choice fats from the beef, at a price at least $3 per animal greater than it would be worth if it had to be used, as before the advent of oleomargarine, for tallow, thereby entailing a loss on the producers of millions of dollars annually.

Also a resolution adopted by the South St. Joseph Live Stock Exchange, which meeting was held at St. Joseph. I read from page 73, same hearings:

The "butter fat" of an average beef animal for the purpose of making oleomargarine is worth from $3 to $4 per head more than it was before the advent of oleomargarine, when the same had to be used for tallow, which increased value of the beef steer has been added to the market value of the animal, and consequently to the profit of the producer.

To legislate this article of commerce out of existence, as the passage of this law would surely do, would compel slaughterers to use this fat for tallow, depreciate the value of the beef steer of this country $3 to $4 per head, which would entail a loss on the producers of this country of millions of dollars.

The use of this fat for the purpose set forth is an encouragement to the producer to improve his herd and raise a class of grade or thoroughbred cattle capable of making and carrying this fat, rather than the common or scrub animal, which is so hard and unprofitable to fatten, and the cattle raiser or producer has come to know the value of this product, and the amount of the increase in the market value of his matured animal depends somewhat on the value of the "butter fat" carried by the animal.

The rights and privileges of the producers of beef cattle should be as well respected as those of others, and as they are the beneficiaries in the manufacture of this wholesome article of food, they should not be burdened with unnecessary special taxes other than is absolutely necessary for the support of the Government and the proper governmental regulations surrounding the handling of same.

The product of the "beef steer" should receive at the hands of Congress no greater exactions than imposed upon competing food products. It is already surrounded by numerous safeguards, which Congress, in its wisdom, has seen fit to provide, stipulating severe punishments for selling same under misrepresentation as to its composition. It has by experience proven to be just what a large majority of the people of this country want, and in behalf of the producers and consumers of this great country we do solemnly protest against the enactment of legislation calculated to ruin a great industry and to deprive not only the working classes, but many others, of a cheap, wholesome, nutritious, and acceptable article of food.

Very respectfully submitted.

THE SOUTH ST. JOSEPH LIVE STOCK EXCHANGE,
By HORACE WOOD, President.
JOHN P. EMMERT, Secretary.

I also read from statement of H. H. Cowen, general attorney of the cattle raisers of Texas, page 73:

It will affect the value of our cattle from two to three dollars per head.

Referring to the Grout bill.

Also from a statement by Swift & Co.:

The enactment of these bills would seriously affect the cattle industry. The manufacturer of oleomargarine has created a demand for oleo oil, which is made from the choice fats from the beef, and is worth to-day 10 cents per pound. If these choice fats were not utilized in the manufacture of oleomargarine they would have to be sold as tallow, which is worth 6 cents per pound. A steer will yield 50 pounds of oleo oil; therefore, should the oleomargarine industry be destroyed each steer would depreciate in value $2. The same is true of the hog. Leaf lard (or neutral) is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. Neutral is to-day worth 8¼ cents per pound; lard is worth 6 cents per pound. A hog will yield about 8 pounds of neutral. If there was no demand for neutral as an oleomargarine ingredient it would have no greater value than lard; hence each hog would be worth 20 cents less than present price.

For the year ending December 31, 1899, there were 1,702,572 cattle slaughtered at the Union Stock Yards in Chicago. At $2 per head this would make $3,405,144. For the same period there were 7,032,430 hogs slaughtered at the Union Stock Yards in Chicago. At 20 cents per head this would make $1,406,486. Therefore, should Congress pass a law which would destroy the oleomargarine business the cattle and hog raisers marketing their stock in Chicago would actually lose in the course of a year $4,811,630 by depreciation in value of stock, and this will apply to every other slaughtering point in the United States—Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, etc.

These statements sound very nice, and if true would have some weight. If true, as stated in these resolutions and statements, that the passage of this bill would seriously affect the cattle industry; if the manufacture of oleomargarine has created a demand for oleo oil made from the choice fat of beef at a price of at least $3 per animal greater than it would be worth if it had been used for tallow, as before the advent of the oleomargarine, and thereby entailing a loss to the producers of millions of dollars annually by depreciating the value of the beef steer of this country from three to four dollars per head; if it should lessen the encouragement to the producers and they should go back to the common scrub animal which is hard and unprofitable to fatten; and if this bill should restrict the rights and privileges of producers of beef cattle and burden them with this so-called unnecessary tax and ruin a great industry, and deprive not only the working classes but others of a cheap and wholesome article of food to any great extent, certainly this bill ought not to pass.

We raise a few beef cattle, as well as hogs, in Iowa, and we also have the so-called working classes, and were there a word of truth in these statements, it would be my duty, as a Representative from this great State, to protect their interests. However, before being led astray by such wholesale misrepresentation, let us investigate.

First, this bill does not increase the cost of oleomargarine by imposing an additional or burdensome tax. It reduces the tax 1¼ cents per pound on oleomargarine not made in semblance of butter, thus reducing the cost, except where it is made in semblance of butter.

Certainly it does not affect the price of beef cattle from $3 to $4 per head. In 1899, there were 5,000,000 head of cattle slaughtered in the United States—Chicago, 1,821,061; Kansas City, 1,032,586; Omaha, 549,089; St. Louis, 506,249; total, 3,908,985. Enough were slaughtered outside of these centers to make the number from five to six millions. We will say, for the sake of argument, that there were only 5,000,000 in all. Three to four dollars per head, or an average of $3.50 per head, would amount to $17,500,000. Besides this, they claim 20 cents on each head of the 15,000,000 hogs marketed in this country for the same year, making a total of $20,500,000, while the oleo oil consumed in making oleomargarine is valued at only $2,313,333, or about one-tenth of this amount, which would be about 40 cents per head.

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, there were 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine manufactured in the United States. It is claimed by the friends of oleomargarine that one-third of oleomargarine is composed of oleo oil. One-third of 83,000,000 pounds is 27,666,666, or an average of 5½ pounds to each head of cattle slaughtered in this country. It is also claimed that oleo oil is worth on an average about 8 cents per pound, making it an average to each head of cattle of 44 cents, barring the scraps from the restaurants, hotels, and horse butchery consumed, as referred to by Mr. Reed, Dr. De Schweinitz, and others.

If the contention holds good that the oleo oil is made out of the choice fat of the beef, this fat would certainly be worth something for other purposes and the depreciation would be slight. It would at least bring 5 cents per pound for tallow and other purposes, or $1,383,333.30, a loss of only $830,000, or 16½ cents for each head of cattle; that is, figuring tallow on a basis of 5 cents per pound. Swift & Co., however, in their statement estimate tallow at 6 cents per pound. On this basis the loss would be only 2 cents a pound, or $553,333.32; or 11 cents per head. The loss per head is less than the price of 1 pound of beef sold on the block, or 2 pounds on hoof, or one seven hundred and fiftieth part of the value of a 1,500-pound steer, or the total loss is one one-thousandth part of the value of butter produced in this country.

For the sake of argument we will grant that there will be a loss to the beef producers to this extent, the difference between the selling price of oleo oil and tallow, which is 11 cents on each head of cattle. The dairy producers are also beef producers. Can they not better suffer a loss of 11 cents on a steer selling from $40 to $80 than they can to see a great industry producing 2,000,000,000 pounds of butter annually, amounting to more than five hundred million of dollars, ruined by a fraudulent competitor?

Another matter that should be taken into consideration in this connection is, if true, as stated by Mr. Reed and others, that oleo oil is largely made out of fat scraps from restaurants and hotels, and I have no doubt but it is; that whatever these hotels realize out of the sale of the refuse would be a loss to them but not to the cattle producers. The cattle raisers certainly get no benefit out of these sales; and it would diminish the loss of 11 cents on each beef to the extent of whatever fat scraps were consumed in manufacturing oleomargarine.

Another argument advanced is that the passage of this bill will destroy the cotton-seed industry of the South. Upon this subject we have the statement of Mr. Oliver, a prophet and one who poses as an expert statistician and a representative of the cotton-seed industry of North and South Carolina, evidently not a friend of the farmers, who appeared before our committee. I read to you from pages 83, 84, 85, 86, evidence submitted by him, and signed by himself and others of the same committee.

Farmers will become as skillful in evading these laws as the western North Carolinian is in evading the liquor laws. Increase the tax on whisky to $2 per gallon, and then see how many more men all over the United States will be making "moonshine" goods. Reduce the tax to 25 cents per gallon and you will reduce the number of cases before each United States criminal court in North Carolina to probably one-tenth the present number. If the proposed laws to impose 10 cents per pound tax on oleomargarine are enacted, you will have to increase the revenue detective service many times its present number and hold criminal United States courts every week in every district. Butterine or oleomargarine will be produced, and the laws will not prevent it. The proposed laws, if passed, will prevent open, aboveboard, taxpaying, honorable manufacturers from continuing to carry on their present business, but it will not prevent the secret manufacture of the article by a class of men hard to detect and still harder to convict.

We earnestly protest against the passage of the proposed bills as being unnecessary and very harmful to our business, to the country's business at large, and to the morals of many farmers and others. It will be a temptation that a great many present law-abiding, honorable farmers will not be able to resist, and they will become the same as a great many western North Carolinians, "moonshiners," for the manufacture of oleomargarine.

The cotton-seed-oil interests of the South have invested in plants not less than $50,000,000. The working capital necessary to conduct the business is not less than $50,000,000 more, making $100,000,000 employed in the business. The mills have converted a product, namely, cotton seed, which was once considered a perfect nuisance by the farmers and ginners, into an article bringing to the cotton planter millions of dollars and the laboring man millions more and to the railroads a large and profitable tonnage in and out, amounting to millions of dollars in freight.

There has been paid to the cotton producers this season not less than $40,000,000 for about two-fifths of the seed produced. There has been paid to the railroads to haul the seed in and the products of oil mills out not less than $15,000,000. There has been paid to laborers dependent upon the manufacture of cotton seed at least $10,000,000, making a grand total paid out by the oil mills of not less than $65,000,000, and this for a product that forty years ago was considered absolutely worthless, and for only two-fifths of the seed produced, the balance being used on the farms for fertilizing and for cattle feed.

If the oil mills are not crippled by adverse legislation in this country and others it is only a matter of time when all cotton seed not required for planting will be worked up in oil mills, creating a market value for the seed, money paid out for transportation and labor, from a crop of 12,000,000 bales of cotton, a grand total amounting to at least $150,000,000, or about one-half of the value of the cotton crop itself. Oil mills employ colored men exclusively in every department excepting superintendents and skilled mechanics, at least 95 per cent of all the help employed being colored. These colored men earn from 75 cents to $2.50 per day, and are a very worthy, self-sustaining, law-abiding class of citizens. Why should the product of their labor be legislated against simply to give another class of citizens—the dairymen—a monopoly as against oleomargarine, a food product that the buying consumer is now satisfied to furnish to his family and himself? The consumer knows that this product, oleomargarine, is healthy and clean, and it costs him much less money than cow butter and is equally as satisfactory, and suits him much better than low grades of dirty butter costing the same or less money.

It is simply a fight in which the "survival of the fittest" should be allowed to prevail, and it is not right or just, no matter in what light it is looked upon, to handicap, by a 10 cents per pound tax, or any other tax or regulation, a manufactured article that has been, is now, and always will gradually overcome the public prejudice and work itself into public favor to the detriment of much so-called butter that is only fit for the soap boiler's kettle. Why not tax cotton clothing of all kinds, simply because it is supplanting woolen and silk goods? Why not tax beet sugar because it will, in the end, drive out cane sugar if left to a free fight on their merits and cost? Why not prohibit by tax or impose restrictions upon electric light and power because it is driving out of use gas and horse power? Why, oh, why, did not the farmer that furnished tallow to the candle makers look far enough into the future, years ago, and prevent the almost total annihilation of the candle manufacturing by the products of petroleum? Why not pass laws to prevent all inventions and improvements to the conditions of the human race just because there are some farmers selfish enough and self-satisfied to live and die as their fathers and grandfathers lived and died years before them?

Committee.

This paper is subscribed by a committee representing in North and South Carolina and Georgia about 70 oil mills, and representing in the South about 400 oil mills.

Mr. HAUGEN. How much of this $65,000,000 goes into the butterine?

Mr. OLIVER. Of this $65,000,000?

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand you to say that $65,000,000 goes to the interests of the cotton raisers of the South?

Mr. OLIVER. About $40,000,000 was paid to the farmers for seed, about $15,000,000 for the transportation of the seed in and products out; about $10,000,000 for labor. In this country there is used probably 150,000 barrels of 50 gallons each of butter oil in manufacturing oleomargarine—at least aboveboard. How much there is used secretly, I do not know.

Mr. HAUGEN. What part of it is cotton-seed oil?

Mr. OLIVER. About 150,000 barrels of cotton-seed oil of 50 gallons each goes into the oleomargarine through the large manufacturers that are now being taxed and living up to the regulations.

Mr. HAUGEN. About how much is this worth?

Mr. OLIVER. About 40 cents a gallon of 7½ pounds to the gallon.

Mr. NEVILLE. Have you figured out the number of pounds so that you know?

Mr. OLIVER. No; it is only from what is published and the amount of taxes paid on oleomargarine. Oleomargarine contains from 25 to 40 per cent of cotton-seed oil, depending upon the weather and the season of the year it is made.

Mr. ALLEN. Are you engaged in the manufacture of oleomargarine in any way?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all, sir.

Mr. ALLEN. Are you a cotton raiser?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, sir; to a limited extent I am a cotton raiser. I am more of a wheat and oat raiser in the farming line.

Mr. ALLEN. Are you engaged in the manufacture of cotton-seed oil?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, sir; in that I am very largely engaged. Our plant to-day has more than $1,000,000 right now invested in cotton-seed-oil machinery and products.

Mr. NEVILLE. One hundred and fifty thousand barrels, of 50 gallons each, or 375 pounds to the barrel. Do you mean that that amount you have given is for the oil sold, or is that including the cake sold for feeding cattle?

Mr. OLIVER. No, sir; only the cotton-seed oil used in butter making.

Mr. NEVILLE. Now, you have stated it as a fact that there was no one advocating this legislation excepting a few farmers, disreputable and dishonorable men, who wanted to palm off a fraud with their home-manufactured oleomargarine; that they were the only ones urging this?

Mr. OLIVER. That was my statement, that it was being urged by that class.

Mr. NEVILLE. How do you account for the fact that the legislatures of thirty-two States have already passed stringent laws prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine?

Mr. OLIVER. Simply because the political power of the parties in those States has been used in that way, and those in power are dictated to, or their leg pulled, or wire-pulling of some kind, which made them think it was necessary to advocate these laws.

Mr. NEVILLE. That would not apply to those who are represented by legislators who are not of their political faith?

Mr. OLIVER. It applies to both parties, or all three parties, if you want to call it three parties.

Mr. NEVILLE. Then it is simply that condition of corruption which you think has spread all over this country to which your remarks apply?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, sir; I do think so, in this line. But, when it comes to corruption and defrauding of the public, there is more defrauding to-day in the clothing you are wearing and others are wearing in this room than in any article you can mention.

Mr. NEVILLE. Do you believe, because it has gotten to this corrupt state in all manufacturing matters with the people of this country, that it is too late, and no use to try to do anything to make it better?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe the more laws you have the greater will be the corruption. You will kill, absolutely, the manufacture of oleomargarine on an honest, honorable basis; and you will put it into the hands of the secret manufacturers, farmers, and others, who are like money shavers, and the Government will not receive any tax to amount to anything.

This is not only a gross misrepresentation of facts, but it is an attack on the integrity and intelligence of our Western farmers. At first this expert and prophet would have us believe that the cotton-seed industry amounts to $65,000,000 and all consumed in making oleomargarine in the United States. However, upon cross-examination, in response to a question as to what part of it (oleomargarine) is cotton seed, he replied that about 150,000 barrels of cotton-seed oil, of 50 gallons each, go into the oleomargarine through the large manufacturers that are now being taxed and who are living up to the regulations. In response to a question as to its value his answer is "About 40 cents per gallon, 7½ pounds to the gallon," or, in other words, 7,500,000 gallons, or 56,250,000 pounds, valued at $3,000,000.

We will compare this statement with Secretary Gage's report transmitted to this House, giving the amount and character of materials consumed in the manufacture of oleomargarine for the year ending June 30, 1900:

Ingredients of 80,000,000 pounds oleomargarine made in 1899.

	Pounds.		Pounds.
Neutral lard	31,297,251	Stearin	5,890
Oleo oil (tallow)	24,491,769	Glucose	2,550
Cotton-seed oil	4,357,514	Milk	14,200,576
Sesame	486,310	Butter oil	4,342,904
Coloring matter	148,970	Salt	6,773,670
Sugar	110,164	Butter	1,568,319
Glycerin	8,963	Cream	3,527,410

You will see that Secretary Gage's report shows that only 4,357,514 pounds of cotton-seed oil and 4,342,904 pounds of butter oil, which is practically the same as cotton-seed oil, all told only 8,700,418 pounds, were used in the manufacture of oleomargarine in the United States, which, if valued at 5 cents per pound, would amount to only $435,020.90, or about two-thirds of 1 per cent of the total cotton-seed industry, which is $65,000,000 according to this expert statistician, Mr. Oliver.

The total export of cotton-seed oil is 50,627,219 gallons, as given in the Agriculture Year Book for 1899, page 325, if valued at 40 cents, or $20,250,916, while only a little over one million gallons is being consumed in the manufacture of oleomargarine in the United States, at a value of only $435,000, which is only about one-fiftieth, or 2 per cent of the total amount exported; and there is nothing to fear whatever that this legislation will ruin the cotton industry of the South.

The representatives of oleomargarine manufacturers have put much stress on the amount of money invested. Let us make a comparison. The Moxley Company, as stated by one of its own representatives, estimate the actual value of their plant at $30,850; and this being one of the largest plants in this country, the average value certainly can not be more than $25,000. There being 26 of these establishments in the United States, we have a total investment of $650,000, while on the other hand, in the State of Iowa alone we have 994 creameries, at an estimated average value of $3,000 each, making a total investment of $2,982,000, or more than four and one-half times greater than the amount invested by oleomargarine manufacturers in the whole United States.

The gentlemen in opposition to this bill have had much to say about this 10 cents tax; that the 8 cents additional tax on colored oleomargarine in semblance of butter is to suppress and to stamp the legitimate manufacturers of oleomargarine out of existence for the benefit of dairy producers, denouncing it as class legislation, etc.

Much stress has been put upon the statement of Mr. Adams, commissioner of pure food in Wisconsin, wherein it is claimed that he said: "There is no use beating about the bush in this matter; we want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturer out of business." If true that he made this statement, it does not necessarily voice the sentiment of the members of the committee who made the majority report or any member of this House who favors its passage, nor does it necessarily prove that this is the purpose of the bill or the intent of the promoters and author of the bill. If these were the facts, I have too high an opinion of the members of this House to think that any one of them would give this bill any support whatever.

On the other hand, how do you harmonize this statement with the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas, who has investigated as to the selling price of the two articles? He himself made the statement that creamery butter is selling at 35 cents, while oleomargarine is selling at 20 cents, a difference of 15 cents per pound.

To satisfy myself, some time ago, in company with the Wisconsin member, Mr. DAHLE, of this committee, I went to the market and there purchased oleomargarine as well as butter, paying 15 to 18 cents for oleomargarine and 35 cents for butter. Here you have a difference of 20 cents per pound. It is fair to assume that if oleomargarine is as nutritious, palatable, and wholesome as butter, it ought to sell at the same price as butter. And if oleomargarine can now be sold at 15 or even 20 cents per pound, the additional 8 cents tax certainly will not deprive it of its market.

With this additional tax of 8 cents it can be sold at 23 to 28 cents, which is 7 to 12 cents less than the present price of butter. According to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas, it is absolutely proved that oleomargarine can be sold in competition with butter with this 10 cents tax, or that this industry will not be ruined by increased taxation as provided in this bill.

Besides this we have abundance of evidence proving conclusively that the cost of oleomargarine is not anywhere near 15 or 20 cents per pound. Not even one-half of that amount. I hold in my hand a prospectus of the Standard Butterine Company, issued by W. P. Wilkins, president, Gurley & Johnson, bankers, 1335 F street NW., Washington, D. C., dated September 1, 1900, a concern incorporated under the laws of the State of Virginia, with a capital stock of $1,000,000. No one will question the authority of these parties. They are all men of high standing—Wilkins a man of large experience in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and a man who knows what he is talking about.

Let me read to you what they have to say on the subject of the manufacture of oleomargarine, trades, profits, etc.:

It is perhaps best to add to this prospectus a statement of the exact cost of and profits in the manufacture of butterine, compiled from manufacturing statistics and recent market quotations:

Cost, showing proportions used for each 100 pounds:

Oleo oil, 32 pounds, at 9½ cents per pound	$3.04
Neutral lard, 17 pounds, at 8½ cents per pound	1.44½
Cotton oil, 17 pounds, at 5 cents per pound	.85
Milk, 17 pounds, at 1 cent per pound	.17
Salt, 7 pounds, at ½ cent per pound	.03½
Moisture, 10 pounds, at 00 per pound	.00
Total	5.54
Labor, parchment paper, tubs, etc	1.38
Internal revenue, 2 cents per pound	2.00
Total cost	8.92

F. o. b. Washington.

The above cost, when deducted from the market price of $13 per 100 pounds, shows a net profit of $4.08.

It will be seen that even if the company produced only the 400,000 pounds per month for which it now has definite orders a net profit of over $16,320 a month, or $195,840 a year, would be assured.

This would mean 8 per cent on the preferred stock of the company or 20 per cent on the entire capitalization.

This is a simple statement of actual facts which can be easily verified.

This showing surely ought to be of interest to everybody with money for which a highly profitable investment is desired.

The president of the company, Mr. W. P. Wilkins, has been engaged in the butterine business for many years and is certainly thoroughly competent to place the company on an immediate paying basis.

Mr. Wilkins has just returned from Europe, where he made a careful examination of all the great butterine manufactories.

The question of a sale for the product, however, is not problematic. The company already has from responsible dealers orders for 400,000 pounds a month, to be taken just as soon as it is possible to place the factory in operation.

It is confidently expected that within a very short time after operations are begun the regular output of the factory will not be less than 1,000,000 pounds a month.

In addition to the manufacture of butterine, the company proposes to refine for export both oleo oil and neutral lard, over 800,000,000 pounds of which are exported annually from the United States. There are only a few factories now operating that supply these products, and the field is ripe for the erection of a large plant such as this company will have.

Active operations will be commenced at an early date, and intending investors should give the matter their early attention. The company will gladly give all information desired and stands ready to satisfy everyone interested upon any points which may be raised.

STANDARD BUTTERINE COMPANY,
W. P. WILKINS, President.

In addition to this we have the statement of C. N. Lavery, representing Swift & Co., Kansas City (on pp. 225, 226 of the hearings before our committee), giving the average price of oleomargarine at 11 to 14 cents, including the 2 cents tax. By adding the proposed 8 cents additional tax to the price of oleomargarine it would make the cost to the consumer from 19 to 22 cents, according to Mr. Lavery's statement. And according to the Standard Butterine Company's statement the 8 cents tax added to their estimated cost of 8.92 cents would make the cost 16.92, or less than 17 cents.

We are all familiar with the price of butter enough to know that butter hardly ever sells below this, and I think it is fair to assume that the average price of butter is 25 cents the year around. If this estimate holds good, we have a difference of cost in the two articles of 8 cents, with the 8 cents additional tax added. Certainly, if butterine is what it is claimed to be by its friends, it can be sold in competition with butter with a large profit to its manufacturers, and there is nothing whatever in the statement that this bill will legislate oleomargarine out of existence.

The gentleman from New York dwelt at length and read from statements of employees of the Agricultural Department, quoting them as authority, why this bill should not pass. In reply to this let me read what the Secretary of Agriculture, the head of that Department, has to say, in a statement in the Philadelphia Inquirer of last April:

The farmers have a right to expect legislation sufficient to give them protection against unfair competition by fraudulent imitation.

I also read to you from pages 244–245 of the Year Book of the Department of Agriculture:

The practice of adulterating human foods, which has been so largely prevalent in all parts of the world, has proved an incalculable injury to honest agriculture. As an illustration of the way in which adulterated food may injure the farmer's profession may be cited the sale of oleomargarine for butter and glucose for honey. The food value of oleomargarine and glucose is not denied. They are, however, very much cheaper products than butter and honey. These adulterated foods, unfortunately, are often not offered for sale under their own names, except by legal compulsion, but are placed upon the market under the names of the genuine article which they are manufactured to imitate. Buyers therefore pay, as a rule, prices which would be asked for the pure article. The market for the pure article is diminished just to the extent to which these other substances are sold, and in this way positive injury to great agricultural interests is done.

This would indicate that the Department of Agriculture is not altogether opposed to the passage of this bill.

The exposures of the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine recently in the State of Pennsylvania and other States has disclosed the fact that manufacturers have entered into a conspiracy to break down the State laws, resorting to dishonorable methods; by deception of all kinds in substituting and forcing this counterfeit on the public; by evading and disobeying the laws of the land, and even going so far as to adopt a policy of encouraging and urging retailers to violate the laws of the State, and providing for a defense fund; and wherever prosecutions are made those prosecuted are defended by the best legal counsel obtainable, who resort to all technicalities, as well as—with the united efforts of the oleo industry with its millions—bringing every possible influence to bear in securing dismissals and acquittals, piling up costs and expenses to the State, and making everything as disagreeable as possible, both to the State and all connected therewith.

In view of the facts I feel justified in supporting this bill, and have no apology to make in so doing. And I repeat that this bill is not to destroy one industry to benefit another or to ruin the cattle or cotton industries; not for selfish motives or greed; not to enhance the price of oleomargarine to its consumers, but rather for wholesomeness, the suppression of fraud and deception, and the protection of an honest and legitimate industry against fraudulent competition, as well as to protect the consumers, giving them the right and privilege of choosing between a deleterious and a wholesome article, that they may buy it for what it is and at a much reduced price.

Justice and the welfare of the public demands the passage of this bill, and I have no doubt it will be done. [Applause.]

I submit herewith a table which shows the amount of oleomargarine produced each year since November, 1886, when the present law went into effect:

Also the following compilations of the substance of the dairy laws of the United States as published by the Agricultural Department:

ALABAMA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved February 18, 1895.)

No article which is in imitation of pure yellow butter, and is not made wholly from pure milk and cream, shall be manufactured, sold, or used in any public eating place, hospital, or penal institution, etc.; but oleomargarine, free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted. It must be stamped with its name.

ARIZONA.

No dairy laws.

ARKANSAS—MUST BE LABELED.

(Approved April 2, 1885.)

Substitutes for butter, whether in wholesale or retail packages, shall be plainly labeled "Adulterated butter," "Oleomargarine," or such other names as shall properly describe them. In hotels, etc., dishes containing said articles must be plainly marked in same manner.

CALIFORNIA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 4, 1897.)

Imitation butter and cheese is defined as any article not produced from pure milk or cream, salt, rennet, and harmless coloring matter, which is in semblance of butter or cheese and designed as a substitute for such. Shall not be colored to imitate butter or cheese, and must be in such form as will advise consumer of its real character. Every package must be plainly marked "Substitute for butter" or "Substitute for cheese" and accompanied by a statement giving name of manufacturer, ingredients, etc., a copy of which must be given to each purchaser, with verbal notice, at the time of sale, in connection with which words like "creamery," "dairy," etc., are prohibited. Patrons of eating places shall be notified if substitutes of butter or cheese are used. Prohibited in State charitable institutions.

COLORADO—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 1, 1895.)

All articles not produced from pure milk or cream, in imitation of pure cheese or yellow butter, are prohibited; but oleomargarine and filled cheese are permitted if free from color or other ingredient to cause them to look like butter or cheese. They must be made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of their real character. Cheese containing any foreign fats, oleaginous substances, rancid butter, etc., shall be branded "imitation cheese."

CONNECTICUT—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Public Acts, 1895.)

Imitation butter, defined as any article resembling butter in appearance and not made wholly, salt and coloring matter excepted, from cow's milk, is prohibited; but oleomargarine or imitation butter, free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise consumer of its real character, is permitted. Words like "butter," "dairy," etc., shall not form a part of its name or appear on its package. Imitation butter shall be sold only in labeled packages, or registered places which display signs, and purchasers shall be informed orally of the character of the article at the time of sale. Use of imitation butter in public eating places, bakeries, etc., must be made known by signs.

DELAWARE—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Passed May 8, 1895.)

The manufacture or sale of any article not produced from unadulterated milk or cream, which is in imitation of pure yellow butter or designed to take the place of pure cheese, is prohibited; but oleomargarine is permitted if in a distinct form, free from butter color, and sold in such manner as to show its real character; it shall be plainly marked "Oleomargarine."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—BRANDING LAW.

(Approved March 2, 1895.)

Substances in semblance of butter or cheese, not made exclusively of milk or cream, but with the addition of melted butter or any oil, shall be plainly branded on each package "Oleomargarine," and a label, similarly printed, must accompany each retail sale.

FLORIDA—MUST NOTIFY GUESTS.

(Approved February 17, 1881.)

The sale of any spurious preparation, purporting to be butter, is prohibited. Guests at hotels, etc., must be notified if oleomargarine or other spurious butter is used.

GEORGIA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved December 16, 1895.)

Imitation butter and cheese are defined as any article not produced from pure milk or cream—salt, rennet, and coloring matter excepted—in semblance of butter or cheese and designed to be used as a substitute for either. Shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese. Every package must be plainly marked "Substitute for butter" or "Substitute for cheese," and each sale shall be accompanied by verbal notice and by a printed statement that the article is an imitation, the statement giving also the name of the producer. The use of these imitations in eating places, bakeries, etc., must be made known by signs.

IDAHO—BRANDING REQUIRED.

(Approved January 27, 1885.)

Brand required for sale of oleomargarine or butterine, imitation butter, or mixture imitating butter. These shall not be sold as butter.

ILLINOIS—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved June 14, 1897.)

Imitation butter is defined as any article not produced from pure milk or cream—salt, rennet, and coloring matter excepted—in semblance of butter and designed to be used as a substitute for it. Shall not be colored to resemble butter. All packages must be plainly branded "Oleomargarine," "Butterine," "Substitute for butter," or "Imitation butter." Each sale shall be accompanied by notice to the purchaser that the substitute is imitation butter.

INDIANA—LABEL LAW.

Butter other than that made from pure milk, when sold or used in hotels, etc., must be plainly labeled "Oleomargarine."

IOWA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Passed in 1893.)

Imitation butter or cheese is defined as an article not produced from pure milk or cream—salt, rennet, and coloring matter excepted—in semblance of butter or cheese and designed to be sold as a substitute for either of them, shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese. Every package shall be plainly marked "Substitute for butter" or "Substitute for cheese," and each sale shall be accompanied by a verbal notice and a printed statement that the article is an imitation, the statement giving also the address of the maker. The use of these imitations in hotels, bakeries, etc., must be made known by signs.

KANSAS.

No law.

KENTUCKY—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Act of 1898.)

Oleomargarine, butterine, or kindred compounds, made in such from and sold in such manner as will advise the customer of its real character, and free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, is permitted.

LOUISIANA—LABEL LAW.

(Approved July 6, 1888.)

Such substances as oleomargarine, butterine, bogus butter, etc., shall be plainly labeled to indicate their composition. They shall not be sold as butter.

MAINE—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 27, 1895.)

Any article in imitation of yellow butter or cheese and not made exclusively of milk or cream is prohibited.

MARYLAND—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Passed in 1888.)

The manufacture, sale, or use in public eating places of any article in imitation of and designed to take the place of pure butter or cheese, and not made wholly from milk or cream, is prohibited. Mixtures of any animal fats or animal or vegetable oils with milk, cream, or butter shall be uncolored and marked with names and percentages of adulterants, and this information shall be given to purchasers.

MASSACHUSETTS—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved June 11, 1891.)

An article made wholly or partly out of any fat or oil, etc., not from pure cream, and which is in imitation of yellow butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine, free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted. It shall not be sold as butter, nor shall words like "dairy," "creamery," etc., or the name of any breed of dairy cattle, be used in connection with it. All packages exposed for sale must be plainly marked "Oleomargarine," and labels similarly marked must accompany retail sales. Stores where it is sold and wagons used for delivery must display signs, and hotels, etc., using it must notify guests. Persons selling oleomargarine must be registered and conveyors licensed.

MICHIGAN—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 15, 1897.)

Any article not made wholly from milk or cream, and containing melted butter, fats, or oils not produced from milk, and which is in imitation of pure butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine, free from color or any ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted; its sale as butter is prohibited; signs must be displayed where it is sold or used, and its original packages must be plainly marked "Oleomargarine" if the article contains suet or tallow, or "Butterine" if it contains lard; retail sales shall be made from a package so marked, and a label similarly printed and bearing the name of the manufacturer shall be delivered with each sale; shall not be used in any public institution. (N. B.—The above law was invalidated in 1897 by the supreme court because of the fact that the enacting clause was omitted when it passed the senate.)

MINNESOTA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved 1899.)

This law prohibits the sale of oleomargarine made in imitation of butter, and took the place of the pink law of 1891.

MISSISSIPPI—LABEL LAW.

(Approved March 9, 1882.)

Packages of oleomargarine or similarly manufactured butters shall be plainly labeled with the correct name of their contents, and the product shall be sold by that name. A privilege tax of $5 is imposed upon persons selling the articles named.

MISSOURI—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 19, 1895.)

Imitation butter is defined as every article not produced wholly from pure milk or cream, made in semblance of and designed to be used as a substitute for pure butter; it shall not be sold as butter; shall not be colored to resemble butter unless it is to be sold outside the State; original packages shall be plainly stamped "Substitute for butter;" in hotels, etc., vessels in which it is served must be marked "Oleomargarine" or "Impure butter."

MONTANA—TAXED 10 CENTS A POUND.

(Penal code of 1895.)

Any article in semblance of butter or cheese and not made wholly from milk or cream must be plainly labeled "Oleomargarine" or "Imitation cheese," and a printed label bearing the same word or words must be delivered to the purchaser with retail sales. Places where these articles are sold or used must display signs, and information as to their character be given if requested. Dealers must pay a license of 10 cents a pound on each pound sold.

NEVADA—BRANDING LAW.

(Approved February 14, 1881.)

Any article in semblance of butter, but not made exclusively of milk or cream, or containing melted butter, shall be in packages plainly marked "Oleomargarine."

NEBRASKA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 16, 1895.)

Imitation butter and cheese are defined as any article made in semblance of and designed to be used as a substitute for pure butter or cheese and not produced wholly from pure milk or cream, salt, rennet, and harmless coloring matter. These articles, including any having melted butter added to them, shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese; shall be plainly marked "Imitation butter," or "Imitation cheese;" verbal and printed information of the character of the articles, and address of the maker, shall be given at time of sale; signs shall be displayed in public eating places where used.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 29, 1895.)

Any article not made wholly from unadulterated milk or cream, which is in imitation of pure yellow butter or cheese, is prohibited, unless in packages plainly marked "Adulterated butter," "Oleomargarine," or "Imitation cheese." A label printed with the words on the original package shall be delivered with each retail sale. Oleomargarine, free from color or ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted. Notice of the use of substitutes for butter in hotels, etc., shall be given to patrons.

NEW JERSEY—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 22, 1886.)

Any article made wholly or partly out of any fat, oil, etc., not from pure milk or cream, artificially colored in imitation of pure yellow butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine and imitation cheese are permitted, if free from artificial color and in original package encircled by a wide black band bearing the name of the maker and having the name of the contents plainly branded on them with a hot iron. Retail sales shall be accompanied by a printed card on which the name of the substance and the address of the maker are plainly printed, and the customer shall be orally informed of the character of the article at the time of sale.

NEW MEXICO.

No law.

NEW YORK—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved April 10, 1893.)

The terms oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese means any article in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively from unadulterated milk, or having any oil, lard, melted butter, etc., as a component part. Imitation butter: The manufacture of oleomargarine or any article in imitation of butter wholly or partly from fats or oils not produced from milk, or the sale or the use in hotels, etc., of such articles, is prohibited. No article intended as an imitation of butter and containing oils, fats, etc., not from milk, or melted butter in any condition, shall be colored yellow.

NORTH CAROLINA—LABOR LAW.

(Ratified February 28, 1895.)

Oleomargarine and butterine are defined as articles manufactured in imitation of butter, and which are composed of no ingredient or ingredients in combination with butter. Original packages shall be labeled with chemical ingredients and their proportions.

NORTH DAKOTA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Laws of 1899.)

Law prohibits manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter.

OHIO—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved May 16, 1894.)

Oleomargarine is defined as any substance not pure butter of not less than 80 per cent butter fat and made for use as butter. It is permitted if free from coloring matter or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character.

OKLAHOMA.

No laws.

OREGON—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Filed February 21, 1899.)

Forbids the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter.

PENNSYLVANIA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Passed in 1899.)

Prohibits manufacture and sale of oleomargarine made in semblance of butter.

RHODE ISLAND—BRANDING LAW.

(Laws of 1882.)

Any article not made wholly from milk or cream, but containing any melted butter or animal oil or fat not the product of milk, shall be plainly marked "Oleomargarine," and a label similarly printed shall be delivered with all retail sales.

SOUTH CAROLINA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 9, 1896.)

Imitation butter and cheese are defined as every article not produced from pure milk or cream, with or without salt, rennet, and harmless coloring matter, which is in semblance of, and designed to be used as, a substitute for butter or cheese; they shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese; original packages shall be marked "Substitute for butter," or "Substitute for cheese;" shall not be sold as genuine butter or cheese, nor used in hotels, etc., unless signs are displayed.

SOUTH DAKOTA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Laws of 1897.)

Any article not made wholly from pure milk or cream, and in imitation of pure butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine, colored pink and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted; notice of its use in public eating places must be given.

TENNESSEE—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Act of 1895.)

Any article which is in imitation of yellow butter and not made exclusively from pure milk or cream is prohibited; but oleomargarine, free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its true character, and other imitations if uncolored and labeled with their correct names, are permitted; wholesale packages shall be plainly labeled, and a label shall accompany retail sales.

TEXAS.

No law.

UTAH—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 8, 1894.)

Any article in semblance of butter or cheese, and not made wholly from milk or cream, shall be plainly marked "Oleomargarine butter," or "Imitation cheese," and retail sales shall be made from packages so marked. Such articles shall not be colored to resemble butter or cheese.

VERMONT—PINK LAW.

(Laws of 1884.)

The manufacture of any article in imitation of butter or cheese which contains any animal fat, or animal or vegetable oils or acids not produced from pure milk or cream, is prohibited.

Imitation butter.—Imitation butter for use in public eating places, or for sale, shall be colored pink.

VIRGINIA—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved January 29, 1898.)

The manufacture or sale of any article made wholly or partly from any fat or oil not produced from unadulterated milk or cream, which is in imitation of pure yellow butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine, butterine, or kindred compound, made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, and free from color or other ingredient to cause it to look like butter, are permitted. Signs with the words "Imitation butter used here" shall be displayed in eating places, bakeries, etc., where the articles above named are used.

WASHINGTON—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Approved March 11, 1895.)

No article which is in imitation of pure yellow butter and is not made wholly from pure milk or cream, with or without harmless coloring matter, shall be manufactured, sold, or used in any public eating house or eleemosynary or penal institution, etc.; but oleomargarine free from color or other ingredient to make it look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted.

WEST VIRGINIA—PINK LAW.

(Approved February 16, 1891.)

Any substance in semblance of butter or cheese, and not made wholly from pure milk or cream, and packages containing such substances, shall be plainly marked; printed statements explaining the character of the substance must be given to consumers.

Oleomargarine.—Oleomargarine and artificial and adulterated butter shall be colored pink.

WISCONSIN—ANTI-COLOR LAW.

(Laws of 1895.)

Any article made partly or wholly out of any fat or oil, etc., not from pure milk or cream, and in imitation of yellow butter, is prohibited; but oleomargarine, free from color or other ingredient to make it look like butter, and made in such form and sold in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, is permitted. It shall not be sold as butter. All packages exposed for sale must be plainly marked "Oleomargarine." Signs must be displayed in selling places and on wagons. Hotels, etc., using it must notify guests. Use not permitted in charitable or penal institutions.

WYOMING.

No dairy laws.

Also what Judge Harlan had to say in delivering this opinion:

And yet it is supposed the owners of a compound which has been put in a condition to cheat the public into believing it is a particular article of food in daily use and eagerly sought for by people in every condition of life are protected by the Constitution in making a sale of it against the will of the States in which it is offered for sale because of the circumstance that it is in an original package and has become a subject of ordinary traffic. We are unwilling to accept this view. We are of the opinion that it is within the power of a State to exclude from its markets any compound manufactured in another State which has been artificially colored or adulterated so as to cause it to look like an article of food in general use and the sale of which may, by reason of such coloration or adulteration, cheat the general public into purchasing that which they may not intend to buy.

The Constitution of the United States does not secure to anyone the privilege of defrauding the public. The deception against which the statute of Massachusetts is aimed is an offense against society. The States are as competent to protect their people against such offenses or wrongs as they are to protect them against crimes or wrongs of more serious character, and this protection may be given without violating any right secured by the national Constitution and without infringing the authority of the General Government. A State enactment forbidding the sale of deceitful imitations of articles of food in general use among the people does not abridge any privilege secured to citizens of the United States, nor in any just sense interfere with the freedom of commerce among the several States.

From other authorities:

It has been uniformly held that the legislature, in the exercise of its police powers for the protection of the general welfare of the community and the promotion of the public health, has the right to prohibit the manufacture and sale of any article of food in imitation or semblance of another well-known article of food in a form which is calculated or likely to deceive the buyer or the consumer, and in any substitutes for butter, where the act is aimed at a designed and intentional imitation of butter in the manufacture of the new product and not at a resemblance of qualities inherent in the articles themselves and common to both. Also the Attorney-General's letter to President McKinley, which is as follows:

The petitioners, Joseph Wilkins and Howard Butler, were convicted of fraudulently removing labels from packages containing oleomargarine in violation of the act of August 2, 1886, and were sentenced on March 17, 1898, as to Wilkins, to imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of $1,500 and costs, and, as to Butler, to imprisonment for four months and to pay a fine of $500 and costs.

The judgment of the district court was subsequently affirmed in the circuit court of appeals, to which it was taken by the defendants, and an application subsequently made to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari was denied. Thereupon, in November last, the petitioners were committed to serve their sentences of imprisonment.

The grounds of the application for a pardon as to Joseph Wilkins are that he has a wife and child, and that each of the prisoners is of good reputation and standing and has never been convicted of any other crime. They request, in view of the humiliation and disgrace already suffered by them, as well as of the heavy fines imposed, and in view of their good reputation and standing in the community, and of the fact that no revenue has been lost to the Government, that that portion of the sentence providing for imprisonment be remitted.

The records of the office of internal revenue show that Wilkins has been a persistent violator of the oleomargarine laws and that prior to the present prosecution he has escaped punishment by means of money payments in compromise. The records show that on December 14, 1893, Wilkins filed a proposition to pay $2,100 and costs in compromise of all liabilities, civil and criminal, incurred in the first district of Illinois for selling oleomargarine as butter and by violating various sections of the law relating to wholesale dealers in oleomargarine. This offer was accepted December 26, 1893.

April 4, 1895, less than a year and a half after the last settlement, Wilkins again filed an offer of compromise, agreeing to pay $2,000 in settlement of his liabilities for alleged frauds under the oleomargarine law committed in connection with a firm in West Virginia. This offer was also accepted.

A year later, April 2, 1896, Wilkins was indicted with another in the District of Columbia for selling unstamped oleomargarine. On June 20, 1896, he offered to pay $1,000 in compromise, but this being rejected, the case went to trial and the accused was acquitted. There are three separate indictments against him pending now in the District of Columbia for selling oleomargarine in unstamped packages. These indictments were found January 4, 1897.

The offense of which the petitioners are now convicted was committed December 20, 1896, two days after the verdict of acquittal in the trial in the District of Columbia. The petitioners were discovered by a revenue agent in the act of scraping off the stamps, marks, and brands from packages of oleomargarine.

In connection with the present case, an offer to pay $3,000 and costs in compromise was made, but rejected February 23, 1898, and thereupon the case went to trial with the result above stated.

It is obvious that the business in which Wilkins was engaged must have been one of great profit, otherwise he could not have afforded to make the very large payments in compromise which he did make or offered to make.

That he was aware of the fraudulent and dishonorable nature of the business in which he was persistently engaged appears from his own statement made in a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, October 31, 1893, from which I quote the following:

"Having a thorough knowledge of the butterine business, and knowing the possibilities of that business if worked in certain directions and ways, I determined to try it, having the desire to make large gains quick. * * * After I found that some of my goods had been seized in Cincinnati I settled up my business as quickly as possible and did not ship any more. I came to you voluntarily, and I sincerely trust you will deal with me as leniently as the law will allow you, promising you faithfully that no such thing as this will ever occur again with me, and, if I am allowed to make a request, I ask that I be allowed to settle without having the Western houses know anything of my doings, because I know it was very dishonorable in me to do as I have done, and if I am allowed to go along in life without the public knowing of my misdeeds, then I shall feel sure that I can make a new start in some way that is entirely honorable.

"I realize full well that I could have in some way kept away from the hands of the law, but to do this would mean the staying away from home and relatives, and, above all, the constant strain on my mind, and with the sense that I had done a great wrong, I could not stand it. Trusting that you will allow me to settle immediately, which will allow me to drift back into the channels of straight and legitimate business soon, I remain."

Notwithstanding that the authorities were induced to settle with him upon his promise of abstention in the future from similar violations of the law, it appears that he straightway resumed his operations, undoubtedly taking courage from the success with which he had compromised the first offenses in which he had been discovered.

It is absolutely clear that for such a persistent violator of the law something more than a money penalty was essential. The sentence of imprisonment imposed in this case was peremptorily required by the circumstances. Nor can I say that the sentence was anything but moderate. It is less than the average sentence imposed upon persistent violators of the internal-revenue laws relating to the distillation of spirits, and much less than the ordinary sentences imposed for violation of the laws against the use of the mails for fraudulent purposes.

Not only is the dignity of the law to be upheld against such persistent violations, but the public is entitled to be protected by the salutary influence of stern punishment against fraud and deception, such as were practiced in this case, by means of which the petitioners were enabled to impose upon innocent purchasers as genuine butter a counterfeit article, which, if sold for what it really was, would have brought very much less in the open market.

I do not think that the sentences should be interfered with.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I have looked with some degree of curiosity over this entire bill, and one of the strange features of it is that it puts a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the uncolored material. This tax is not only aimed against the colored article, but even at the uncolored raw material. Now, why uncolored oleomargarine should be singled out I can not see. I think that Congress might as well put a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on apples, or peanuts, or on bacon, or any other article of food, as to put it on the pure article of uncolored oleomargarine. This whole matter seems to be on a color line. It is so apparent in the first section of this bill. The idea is not to stop the adulteration of food, or to prosecute the frauds against the illegal sale of oleomargarine, but it is simply to stamp it out, and to stamp out one industry for the benefit of another.

This bill, if it is constitutional, gives the legislature of every State a positive right to stamp out the manufacture of all classes of oleomargarine, whether colored or not. First, it says practically that no oleomargarine of any color shall be manufactured in any State, or at least the legislature in any State is given the power to prevent it. It says that it shall not look like butter, but we are not informed whether butter is to look yellow or whether it should be white or green. The legislature in these States would have the power to absolutely suppress the manufacture of oleomargarine in any form that looks like butter, not only with reference to the color, but in reference to the shape. I suppose, if oleomargarine were to be manufactured and sold in bricks, like it is now, although it be white, green, or whatever color, the legislature, under this act, if it would be constitutional—which I can not think it is—would be authorized to suppress the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.

So there is just one intention in this bill, and it is disclosed on the very face of it—that is the utter destruction of the manufacture and enterprise and industry of oleomargarine and the sale of it, and to prefer to it another interest—the dairy interest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the name of the live-stock interest of this country, not only of my district and my State, but throughout this nation, in the name of the cotton planters of the South, I protest against any such rank class legislation. [Applause.]

That this legislation is not intended to prevent adulteration of butter is evident from the fact that under this bill, if it be enacted, there are no greater safeguards to prevent the manufacture and sale of adulterated and impure butter than there are under the law as it exists now. If it were the intention of the advocates of this bill to suppress the manufacture and sale of spurious butter generally, whether made wholly or partly of either cream or oleomargarine, and thus invoke by indirection the taxing power of the Congress under the Constitution, there might be found an excuse for it; but no such intention is revealed in the bill or the discussions of its advocates.

Yet it is a well-known fact, denied by no one, that a great deal of so-called spurious, impure, and unwholesome butter, ostensibly made of cream of milk, is manufactured and sold as pure butter, and that the consumer is deceived and defrauded every time he uses this spurious article. The evidence before the committee discloses beyond dispute the fact that old and rancid country butter is bought up indiscriminately by certain establishments and by a renovating process is placed upon the market as fresh cow butter, when it is nothing of the kind; yet there is nothing in this bill which even squints at the suppression of this palpable fraud of adulteration.

The evidence before the committee further discloses the fact that so-called dairy butter is frequently impregnated with tuberculosis bacilli, and is thus made the purveyor of consumption and tuberculosis in various phases into the human system, while on the other hand oleomargarine or butterine is comparatively free of all germs injurious to the human system; that it is manufactured of the pure caul tallow from the beef, the lard leaf of the hog, the best of cotton-seed oil, and sterilized cream, all of which ingredients undergo a careful inspection and a process of heating and sterilization which render the finished article absolutely pure, or at least approximately so.

The evidence further discloses the fact as given by many eminent chemists, including the Chief Chemist of the Agricultural Department of the United States, that oleomargarine as manufactured by the leading factories of this country is a wholesome article of food, but that tuberculosis is very prevalent among dairy cows, and that it is much safer and healthier for a consumer to eat oleomargarine than creamery butter, so that in the face of such testimony it will not be contended by the advocates of this bill that they ask its passage to prevent the sale or manufacture of impure butter as an article of food.

Neither can it be said that this bill is aimed at the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine for creamery butter, because such fraud can be committed as well under this bill as under the present law, and by reason of the higher tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine, which this bill provides, increases the temptation to commit such fraud. The substitute offered by the minority of the committee, however, would practically make it impossible that such frauds could be committed. It would have the effect of placing creamery butter and oleomargarine upon their respective merits by making it practically impossible to sell one for the other, and would moreover have the effect of crowding impure, inferior, spurious, or so-called renovated process and adulterated creamery butter, which is now fraudulently sold for pure creamery butter and at the same high prices, out of the market, and would substitute for it the cheaper and more wholesome article of genuine oleomargarine. Yet the advocates of the Grout bill, who speak so much of fraud and adulteration, will not support the substitute for their bill. It can not be their intention, then, to suppress fraud and adulteration in the sale and manufacture of butter or butterine as an article of food.

But it is contended that it is a fraud on the part of the manufacturers of oleomargarine to color it yellow like creamery butter. But we reply that creamery butter is not offered upon the market in its natural color, and that if it be a fraud—which we deny—to color oleomargarine, why is it not a fraud to color butter yellow, which in its natural color during a great part of the year is white or not sufficiently yellow? The color is put in both substances to make them more palatable to the consumer, not in imitation of one or the other article.

It is a further fact that the yellow color was first used in oleomargarine and then adopted by the dairymen to make creamery butter more salable. Then where is the justice to draw the color line against oleomargarine? Why, if creamery butter sells on its merits, color it? If it needs no color to recommend its sale and use, why not offer it to the market in its natural state and permit oleomargarine to be sold in its yellow color, when it would be impossible to sell it as creamery butter, because its color would brand it as oleomargarine? But the fact is the consumer demands, for reasons of appearance and palatability that both creamery butter and oleomargarine shall be colored, and therefore it would injure the sale to discontinue the coloring of either and a manifest injustice to compel the discoloring of one by law, not only to the manufacturer and the producer, but to the consumer, who should always have the privilege of choice.

The hearings before the committee disclose the fact that the price of choice creamery butter has steadily advanced and has had no competition from the manufacture and sale of pure oleomargarine, and that the latter, on account of its good qualities and its cheapness, has had the effect of competing with the inferior and spurious articles of creamery butter, thus promoting the legitimate business of the dairymen and the health, comfort, and demand of the consumer, as well as benefiting the producer of beef tallow, leaf lard, and cotton-seed oil. Where, then, is to be found the reason for the enactment of this drastic piece of class legislation?

It must be found in the business of the manufacturer of so-called inferior and spurious creamery butter, who contemplates building up a trust or monopoly by law in an article of food which is neither desirable nor wholesome, by destroying the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine or butterine, which is a more wholesome and cheaper article of food than his so-called creamery butter, so that it can no longer compete with his inferior butter, and compel the consumer to buy and use his article alone. To effect this he has worked up a public sentiment in favor of pure creamery butter and a prejudice against oleomargarine, and flooded the country with cut-and-dried resolutions of dairy associations and letters and postal cards of individual dairymen, and bombarded members of Congress with them, and even threatened to defeat all those who oppose this bill.

There is a great hue and cry that the dairy business of this country is threatened and will be driven out of existence by the oleomargarine industry. I assert that upon the evidence before the Committee on Agriculture upon this bill the testimony of disinterested witnesses proves that no such result is impending; but the whole testimony of nearly all the witnesses shows that a great and legitimate enterprise, involving millions of dollars, to wit, the manufacture of oleomargarine, is, if not totally destroyed, to be seriously crippled, and the price of every bovine and swine in the country reduced, involving the loss of over $100,000,000; that the cotton-seed oil-mill industry and the cultivation of this great staple in the South is to be seriously affected: that thousands of laborers and producers engaged in these great enterprises will be injuriously affected, and that thousands upon thousands of consumers of oleomargarine will be compelled to use it in its uncolored state or quit eating it. This is not only an unjust discrimination against the people who are interested in the production of the raw material entering into oleomargarine, and its manufacturers, but an unwarranted attack upon the rights of the consumer who may prefer on his table colored oleomargarine to the best creamery butter, colored or uncolored, on earth. This is class legislation run mad, which, whether constitutional or not, is the essence of tyranny. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the Grout bill.

The SPEAKER. The proposed substitute will be read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Unless the House wants to hear the substitute read, I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the reading of the substitute be dispensed with and that it be printed in full in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. That special tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine shall be imposed as follows: Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600 per annum. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer thereof.

"'Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer therein; but a manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells oleomargarine of his own production only at the place of its manufacture in the original packages, to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer on account of such sales.

"'Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities not greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be regarded as a retail dealer therein.

"'SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word "Oleomargarine" in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word "Oleomargarine" printed on the outside thereof in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put singly by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers and marked, stamped, and branded with the word "Oleomargarine" printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word "Oleomargarine," with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"'Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed, and shall sell only from the original crates or boxes in which they receive the pound or 2-pound prints, bricks, rolls, or lumps.

"'Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months; and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years.'"

Mr. GROUT. I now ask the previous question on the bill and amendments. It is time that we should proceed to a vote.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I ask the gentleman to withdraw for a moment the call for the previous question. I would like to be heard.

Mr. GROUT. How much time does the gentleman desire to occupy?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I shall not go farther than the rule allows. I shall be content with five minutes.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman must notice that it is getting very late and we are to have two roll calls; but I yield to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the pretense of those who support the bill reported by the committee has been that it is an effort to prevent a fraud; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania—unwittingly, no doubt—revealed to the House the true purpose of the measure when he argued that it will prevent the enormous loss which he declares the dairy interests of this country have sustained from competition with oleomargarine. He thus admits what has been so often charged in this debate, that this bill simply invokes the taxing power of the Government to suppress one legitimate industry in favor of another. These gentlemen can not be sincere in alleging that their purpose is to prevent fraudulent practice, because they must know that every State in this Union possesses to-day ample power to accomplish that end. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Plumley vs. The State of Massachusetts, has distinctly and positively affirmed the plenary power of the States over the suppression of fraudulent practices with respect to this very article. The court in that case wisely said:

> If there be any subject over which it would seem the States ought to have plenary control and the power to legislate in respect to which it ought not to be supposed was intended to be surrendered to the General Government, it is the protection of the people against fraud and deception in the sale of food products. Such legislation may, indeed, indirectly or incidentally affect trade in such products transported from one State to another State. But that circumstance does not show that laws of the character alluded to are inconsistent with the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States.

It is very true, sir, that that decision was given by a divided court——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I have only five minutes, but I will yield.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. Will he kindly answer whether or not the commodity which was in question in that case of Plumley vs. Massachusetts was sold in the original package?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. The case did not turn on that question. The act was entitled "An act to prevent fraudulent practice in respect to the imitation and sale of butter." It imposed severe penalties; and the court upheld the law as an exercise of the police power of the State. It declared that the State had the right to control imitations and fraudulent practices such as are involved in the sale of oleomargarine for butter.

There was in that case, as I was about to say when interrupted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a dissenting opinion delivered by the Chief Justice and concurred in by two of his associates; but, sir, that dissenting opinion proceeded upon the theory that oleomargarine, so far as that record disclosed, was as healthy as butter itself. The majority of the court held that the State could suppress a fraud; the minority dissented, upon the ground that oleomargarine was not a fraud.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it frequently happens that a deception is an innocent one. No man claims that a dairy establishment—such, for instance, as the great Elgin Creamery—when it sends its butter to one city more deeply colored than to another, does so fraudulently. Nobody claims that a fraud is intended. Nobody claims that there is any attempt to rob an unsuspecting public. There are many innocent and harmless deceptions, and most of all about the question of color. Who believes that a beautiful woman, when she happens to paint her cheek, is trying to deceive us to our injury? [Laughter.] Yet, sir, many ladies—God bless them!—color their cheeks different from what God and nature painted them. If it is to be charged that every time an article is colored or discolored somebody is attempting to practice a fraud, then why not make it a crime to color butter, just as it is now proposed to make it a crime to color oleomargarine? [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the case to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has just referred—a case which arose in the State courts of Massachusetts, but came up on writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States—was fully discussed by me, as will be remembered, in the opening of this debate. It is true no question was made in that case but that oleomargarine might be a wholesome article of food. The case went on the ground that it was a fraud——

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. You say that what you are after is fraud. I say not.

Mr. GROUT. The Supreme Court said that oleomargarine was a fraud and that it was within the province of the local law of Massachusetts to prohibit it. I explained to the House that the decision still stands, but as it was by a divided court it might be reversed, and that it is the desire of the dairymen of the country to have it written also in the statute law of the land, where it can not be reversed except by legislative action. So much for this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the first question will be upon the Wadsworth bill just offered as a substitute for the bill before the House——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not the Wadsworth bill, but the substitute reported by the minority of the committee.

Mr. GROUT. Yes, the minority substitute; but it is known as the Wadsworth substitute. The objections to this substitute have been fully presented by other speakers and I have no time to enter into a serious discussion of it, and will close by reading a letter forwarded to me by Hon. STEPHEN B. ELKINS, Senator from West Virginia:

MONTROSE, W. VA., December 1, 1900.

DEAR SENATOR: I have a small family, small farm, and a Jersey cow. I am satisfied, for everything has gone my way. It's the cow that's kicking. She's "kickin" 'ginst the Wadsworth substitute for the Grout bill.

Yours, truly,

ORB WHITE.

STEPHEN B. ELKINS.

[Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. All I can say in answer to the gentleman from Vermont and to the letter which he has read is that I am not ashamed to look the cow in the face. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I will let the gentleman from New York and the cow have it out. I now call for the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the substitute.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 179, answered "present" 5, not voting 58.

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:
Until further notice:
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. MULLER. Mr. ROBERTS against the Grout bill, Mr. MULLER for it.
Mr. MONDELL with Mr. SHAFROTH.
Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. VANDIVER.
On this vote:
Mr. BARHAM with Mr. KING.
For the balance of this day:
Mr. BULL with Mr. RIORDAN.
Mr. VANDIVER. I desire to say that I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. JONES. If he were present, he would vote "yea."
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
On motion of Mr. GROUT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:
H. R. 4400. An act for the relief of Frank E. Kellogg, collector of the Sixth internal-revenue district, Missouri.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bills H. R. 12163 and 12164, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, should have been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Without objection, that change of reference will be made.
There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCDERMOTT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WAR-REVENUE REDUCTION.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, by agreement with the members of the minority of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the minority have until the adjournment of the House on Monday to file their views.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] asks unanimous consent that the minority have until the adjournment on Monday next to file their views. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if he expects to call up the bill on Tuesday?
Mr. PAYNE. I was just going to make a statement in reference to that. In the first place, I ask unanimous consent that 3,000 copies of the bill and report may be printed. I shall also ask that consent for the views of the minority when they are presented.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the gentleman to include that in his request.
Mr. PAYNE. They can not very well be printed together. I want the report printed as soon as possible, and I want the members to see the changes made in the bill. On Monday I will ask that a further edition be printed. I will present the request in this form: I ask that 3,000 copies of the bill and report be printed, and that after the views of the minority are submitted 3,000 additional copies of the bill and of the report and views of the minority be printed.
The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from New York if it is his purpose to have these copies go to the folding room to the credit of members? Otherwise they would go to the document room.
Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I suggest that that be done; otherwise somebody will go to the document room and take them out, and the members who will be applied to for copies will not be able to get them.
Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that 3,000 copies of the bill just reported be printed for the use of the House, to go to the folding room to the credit of members like other documents; also, after the views of the minority are submitted, 3,000 additional copies, with the views of the minority, the same to go to the folding room to the credit of members.
Mr. PAYNE. I ask to have the report printed also in each instance.
The SPEAKER. Including the report in each instance. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. PAYNE. Now, I desire to give notice that I shall endeavor to call up this bill for consideration after the legislative appropriation bill has been disposed of, and I think that will probably be on Tuesday next.

CAPITAL CENTENNIAL EXERCISES.

Mr. PAYNE. I also wish to call the attention of the House to another matter. As is known to members of the House, next Wednesday is, by an act of Congress, set apart as a day to celebrate the anniversary of the establishment of a seat of government in the District of Columbia, and in that bill it is provided that there shall be a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress at 3.30 on Wednesday in this Hall. I therefore ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn on Tuesday next it adjourn to meet at 3.15 on Wednesday, in order to give an opportunity to the doorkeepers to arrange the House for the joint meeting at 3.30.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn on Tuesday next it adjourn to meet at 3.15 on Wednesday next. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:
A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for support of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewas and the Sioux of Devils Lake, North Dakota—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Comptroller of the Treasury submitting an estimate of appropriation for an additional force of clerks in his office—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for armament of fortifications—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of Board of Engineers on deep waterways—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of expenditures at the Springfield Armory, and of arms, etc., altered and repaired during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation for additional revenue cutters to be used in Porto Rican waters—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of the Ohio River near Maysville, Ky.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the receipts and expenditures on account of appropriations for contingent expenses of the War Department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900—to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calenders therein named, as follows:
Mr. BABCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 278) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to employ an additional assistant to the attorney, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2015); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2016); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. WEAVER, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1618) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claim of the personal representatives of William Kiskadden, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2014); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12237) granting a pension to Patrick J. Murphy—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. BABCOCK: A bill (H. R. 12456) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia as to the Metropolitan police, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 12457) for the relief of the State of Kentucky—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. S. A. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 12458) providing for raising and preserving the hull of the Niagara, the flagship of Commodore Perry in the battle of Lake Erie—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 12459) for a customs warehouse at St. Louis, Mo.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 8, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

O thou great Spirit, in whom we live and move and have our being, through whose influence all progress is due, make us more susceptible, that we may go forward to greater manhood; that when the time comes that we shall depart this life we shall have left behind us a record worthy of Christian manhood. Hear us, and answer us in the name of Christ, the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

CHAIRMANSHIP OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays the following communication before the House for its information:

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, December 7, 1900.

SIR: I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House to inform you that by the unanimous vote of the committee at its session this morning, a quorum being present, Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS was unanimously chosen as chairman of the said committee, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Hon. CHARLES A. BOUTELLE.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

J. E. HALL,
Clerk Committee on Naval Affairs.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
Speaker House of Representatives.

DISTILLATION OF BRANDY FROM CHERRIES.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up and have unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which belongs to the Committee of the Whole. It is a bill to amend section 3255 of the Revised Statutes, and would place brandy made from cherries on the same basis as brandy made from berries, apples, and other fruits. That is the only change made by the proposed bill, and it comes from the Committee on Ways and Means. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12281) to amend section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3255. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, pears, pineapples, oranges, apricots, berries, prunes, or cherries from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when, in his judgment, it may seem expedient to do so."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. As I stated, Mr. Speaker, the only change made in the existing law would apply the same rule to brandy distilled from cherries as already applies under this statute to brandies distilled from other fruits. Cherries seem to have been omitted in the original statute.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that a recess be taken until 1 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 8 minutes) the House was declared in recess.

DEATH OF HON. ALFRED C. HARMER.

After the recess,

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report to the House the special order for this hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that Saturday, at 1 p. m., the 8th day of December, be set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have sent to the Clerk's desk the resolutions which I desire to submit to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, in this great Hall, where our late colleague and associate, ALFRED C. HARMER, with rare fidelity to his public trusts, did good work, we have assembled to-day to express a loving and affectionate farewell and to pay tribute to a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, late a member of this body, who for years—more than a quarter of a century—held the confidence of his immediate constituency, the high esteem of associate Representatives in fourteen Congresses, and who, on the 6th day of March, 1900, after a long and painful illness, passed away to join the unreturning caravan "to where," beyond these voices, "there is rest."

He was born August 8, 1825, in Germantown, Pa., a township in the county of Philadelphia which in later years became a part of the city of Philadelphia. At an exceptionally early age—before he was 20—he began his active business career in independent enterprise, which developed in a short time into a large wholesale establishment.

In his young years—in fact, we all know, even to the days nearing his final departure—he was marked by handsome face, commanding form, and genial comradeship, always conspicuous in the gatherings of his friends and public assemblages.

At the age of 21 he was elected a director of the public schools of Germantown and a few years later a member of the city councils of Philadelphia—most distinguished honors for a very young man. Although of the youngest, if not the youngest, of that body, by his watchful care over the interests of his people, by his sound judgment, and by his patient energy he soon associated himself with and became one of the leaders and strong men of the city legislature.

About that time Philadelphia held stock in the North Pennsylvania Railroad to the amount of $1,400,000. So great was the confidence in his integrity that he was elected three times by the councils of the city as a director to protect and watch over the interests of the city in the great corporation.

In 1860, as a candidate of the People's Party, successor to the old Whig party, he was elected recorder of deeds for the city of Philadelphia. He filled this important trust with his usual fidelity and untiring industry, while during all the years of the civil war he devoted much of his time and active energy to the cause of the Union, raising funds and equipping large numbers of soldiers in the field.

In the summer of 1870 he received the nomination of the Republican party for Congress for the Fifth Pennsylvania district and was elected a member of the Forty-third Congress. This was the beginning of his long and useful Congressional career, exceeded in the history of this body by but few men, and identified with legislation as important as any quarter of a century's work in the history of the nation.

From 1871 until the date of his death, twenty-seven years of service, there was but one Congress for which he met defeat, and that occurred by reason of two Republicans antagonizing each other in the district. The Democratic candidate polled a larger vote than either in a district whose normal Republican majority was 7,000.

While Mr. HARMER was recognized as a Representative of positive force and accepted ability in the House, he rarely entered upon general debate or word contests upon the floor. He was one—and there are many of like character in every Congress—whose work and results aimed for were reached in the committee room, a contribution as valuable to good legislation as oratory or prepared argument. His committee associates regarded him as a colleague always punctual, full of industry, watchful of the interests of his great State and industrial city, sound in judgment, clear in the expression of his convictions, fearless and aggressive, though most patient, and distinguished for his integrity, good purposes, zeal, and fidelity.

The records of the many Congresses in which he served as a Representative will show by his votes that at all times he exhibited good judgment, that he was true to his party convictions, and that he was always a patriot. To no division or part of his constituency did he show more faithful solicitude and devote more personal labor than to the soldiers and widows of our wars since 1861. He made their claims and privileges immediate and special. In every case he wrote an autograph letter to the claimant, with words of interest, sympathy, and hope. He pressed those cases personally and never rested until a fair and just judgment was rendered. Every soldier and soldier's widow among his people mourned for him when he died. They felt that they had lost their best friend. I trust his honorable successor will feel that in the obligations that will press upon him his richest legacy will be to take up and continue ALFRED C. HARMER'S work for the old soldiers, their widows and orphans.

He was one of a group of four men in the House, all born in the city of Philadelphia, whose combined service reached the aggregate of one hundred and twelve years, commencing in 1861 and ending in 1900, two of whom served twenty-nine years, and two of whom served twenty-seven years, with but one Congress wherein there was defeat: William D. Kelley, who served twenty-nine years continuously; Samuel J. Randall, who served twenty-seven years continuously; Charles O'Neill, who served twenty-nine years, and our lamented colleague of this Congress, Mr. HARMER, who served twenty-seven years, each of the two latter with one Congress of defeat. All were exceptionally strong men, influential in the House, and possessing the confidence, approval, and affection of their constituents. Let their names go into the history of this House as exceptional in work well done, as well as exceptional in the great confidence of their respective constituencies.

When, with trembling hand and voice filled with serious sadness and emotion, Mr. HARMER had administered the oath of office to the Speaker of this House, on returning to his seat near the rostrum, with tears in his eyes and in faltering tones he said to me, "This closes my public life—so near the end of my life physical. My work is done, and the curtain falls."

We send greetings to-day, dear colleague and friend. The work you did for so many years was work well done. Your people loved you, and they remember you with affectionate devotion. The record of your active, earnest life will ever remain a part of your country's history.

In words eloquent and impressive the pastor of his church, concluding the funeral services at the home of our colleague, in the hearing of thousands of his friends, thus spoke:

Lastly, I would speak of him as a believer. In youth he owned his faith in Christ, and in old age he shrank not when he came to the valley of death's shade; and after all, as he believed, death is but a shadow. He adopted Whittier's words—

"On easy terms with law and fate,
For what must be I calmly wait,
And trust the path I can not see—
That God is good sufficeth me."

And so he passed away as one long absent from his home who hears his father's summons in a foreign land and gladly hastens to obey, in sorrow only for the friends he leaves behind. We dry our tears and give him joy. With honor's chaplet long upon his brow, he went away to change it for a crown of immortality.

The curtain falls. Farewell!

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, far more than endearing was our departed friend to his associates. He had all the lovable qualities so characteristic of his Quaker ancestry. Indeed, the spirit of William Penn was the light of his existence. It seemed to permeate him, body and soul. His temperament was as even as the temperature of tropical seas and his disposition as genial as the breezes of summer. He gleaned his friendships silently and unconsciously. They were a part of his being, and as lasting as his soul itself. His sympathies were easily awakened and his generosity almost proverbial. With him life was a quiet stream, winding its way between the hills of adversity, rippling through the meadows of peaceful industry and strict integrity, until it reached the boundless ocean of eternity. It had no rapids, no cataracts, no great freshets. Its banks were fringed with flowers, and shaded with elms and maples. He had the spirit of a philanthropist and the serenity of a philosopher. Forty-four years had he trodden the highways of public life in the sunlight of popular favor without encountering storms and cyclones. Showers there were, but only enough to produce flowers and add zest to life. Twenty-seven of these forty-four years were spent in this House. The service was arduous and faithful, but silently and conscientiously performed.

Mr. HARMER was par excellence the silent man of the House. He never ventured into the paths of oratory, but paid the strictest attention to the wants of his constituents. His life work was performed in the privacy of the committee room rather than on the floor of the House. He was a true representative of the City of Brotherly Love. He witnessed many an exciting scene in our legislative annals, and remained a quiet spectator, guided by common sense and unruffled with anger. In his Congressional career he sat under the rulings of nine Speakers and saw eight Presidents inaugurated. It was probably the proudest moment of his life when, as Father of the House, he administered the oath to the present occupant of the chair. It was his last public duty, performed while standing on the brink of the grave. It was a striking exhibition of Philadelphia's appreciation of the services of her Congressional delegation. Three times in succession had she supplied Congress with a Father of the House. Talented William D. Kelley had been succeeded by cheery and lovable Charles O'Neill, who in his turn had given place to his estimable colleague, ALFRED C. HARMER, and now HARMER in his turn has departed, leaving the mantle with another colleague, who has served twenty-two years without a break.

But, Mr. Speaker, there was one trait about our friend, now in the unknown world, that peculiarly endeared him to every American heart. It was his unswerving devotion to his country. Placid and undisturbed he heard the fierce discussions attending the consideration of the "force bills" under the rulings of those great Speakers from Maine, Thomas B. Reed and James G. Blaine. He listened to many almost interminable tariff debates without showing the least impatience. When the very foundations of the Republic were shaken by the uproar attending the seating of Rutherford B. Hayes he remained as tranquil as an Indian summer. But his emotions were stirred to their inmost depths when war with Spain was declared and Liberty rescued Cuba from the talons of Despotism. It was a war for humanity. He recognized the spirit of the age. By vote and action he supported the war, straining every nerve toward a successful result. There was no alloy in his patriotism. Love of country filled his heart more completely than any other emotion.

In one respect our dear friend was unique. Unlike the rest of us, he never made a speech, and, unlike many of us, he impressed himself upon the legislation of the country. His services were varied and wide in scope. Twelve years was he a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs; twelve years was he a valued worker in the Committee on the District of Columbia; four years did he serve on the Committee on Foreign Affairs; two years on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; four years on Pacific Railroads; two years on Indian Affairs, and six years was chairman of the Committee on the Library. Aside from these, he served for a score of years on numerous select and minor committees vitally affecting the interests of the country. It was while I was associated with him in the Committee on the Library that I first appreciated the extent and variety of his services to the nation. Few men have had more experience in Congressional life. It was a pleasure to sit with him in committee. The spirit of brotherly kindness was always present, and the burden of work was ever alleviated by the sunshine of his presence.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. HARMER'S love of his country was only equaled by his love for his family. A more devoted husband and a more kind and indulgent father never blessed the earth. To them his loss is irreparable. But death has discharged him from all earthly duties, and naught remains but his memory. We shall miss him; his constituents will miss him; the country will miss him. May we all meet him in the blest hereafter with a consciousness of duty as faithfully performed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, when it was suggested to me that upon this occasion I should address a few words of eulogy to the House upon the memory of our departed colleague, I could not refuse to comply; and yet I come with no prepared words, but only to contribute a few sentences to this occasion.

When I came to the House of Representatives, in the Forty-ninth Congress, I found General HARMER an old, experienced member, and I became acquainted with him through availing myself of his kindness, his generosity, and his great knowledge of the details of the business and affairs of Congress. I knew him intimately until the time of his death. One of the pleasantest memories of my career here will be that I had in some degree at least his confidence and enjoyed in some degree his friendship.

He had become noted for his silence before I came to Congress. If he ever made a speech in this House, he made it before I came. But he was recognized at all times as a man of thorough ability in the matter of mastering the details of legislation. At least that was true of him until the very close of his career.

In this connection I wish to deflect a moment from discussing the character of the deceased to speak of the wonderful effect that the policy of the people of Philadelphia has had upon their own interests and upon the interests of the country. The policy of sending men to Congress for long successive terms of service has been adhered to with greater tenacity in the city and county of Philadelphia than in any other locality in the United States.

I do not suppose that it will be claimed that all of the men who have represented Philadelphia here during the period covering the service of many of us were originally men of the greatest ability, although some of them were men of distinguished character when they came here, and all of them have become men of distinguished ability and character while here, so that it has come to be a fact that there is no city in the United States that has impressed its own views and interests one-half so much upon the legislation of Congress as has the city of Philadelphia. I do not know what is the occult method by which the people there ascertain in the first place the possible capacity of the men they select. But within my knowledge none of those men have failed, and it is a remarkable history, given by the gentleman from New York, that in these successive Representatives Philadelphia has had the honor to have upon the floor of this House that personage distinguished by the friendly but important and conspicuous name of "Father of the House."

At the time I came here Judge Kelley was a member of the House, rapidly going into a physical decline. He lasted, I believe, for but two Congresses after I came. Judge Kelley was a man of remarkable character and ability. I did not know him before I came to Congress, but I have doubted whether it was absolutely inferable from his characteristics that he would become the great leader of a great idea here; but he did.

And while "Charlie O'Neill," as we so fondly called him (for everybody loved him), was not a man of strikingly brilliant attainments, yet he became a man of wonderful influence here, and no man was more influential in matters pertaining to the interests of Philadelphia and of his own State than was he.

And then came General HARMER to this position. Influential he certainly was; kind and loving we always recognized him to be; distinguished by the confidence that his people had in him; and while it is not exactly the proper and necessary corollary of the few remarks which I am making, we are still satisfied that the star of ascendency in these matters of influence and good-fellowship has not set in the sky of Philadelphia's relations to the House of Representatives. It comes in large part from the character of the men that they select; it comes also from the persistent and cordial support that the people at home give to their Representatives here.

I, too, witnessed the affecting scene at the opening of this House of Representatives. I did not know that General HARMER had said to others what he said to me; but after he had taken his seat at the close of the organization of the House, when he administered the oath to the Speaker, he said in just a word or two, "Good-bye, GROSVENOR; you will never see me do the like of that again." It touched me as I have never been affected by the words of any member of the House; for while I had not witnessed his greatness in debate, I had recognized his influence upon the legislation of the country by his wisdom, by his faithfulness, and by his presence here when he was able to be here.

I think there can be no higher testimonial given to any man who is a member of the House of Representatives than that which was given to General HARMER by his constituency at home. I never knew the details of his political conflicts, if he had any; but I knew that for that long time he came here credentialed by the confidence, the loving confidence, of his constituents. He has gone, and has left behind him a record that ought to be studied by the people of the United States and understood by them. It is a grand commentary upon the criticisms of public men that we hear so much about from the public press and in the public pulpit and from the public forum that a great city, sometimes criticised bitterly in the heat of political contests, has sent to this House of Representatives a column of men, a galaxy of men, such as Randall and Kelley and HARMER and O'Neill, dead; and I might add the names of those who are living. Yet, in all this period of scandal and detraction, the faithfulness, the honor, the integrity of that cluster of men has never been criticised. It goes to show that the attacks upon the public men of America—the sneers and criticisms upon public men—have in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, when applied to the Congress of the United States, been unfair and unjust. I gladly testify my fond remembrance and great appreciation of the high character and loveliness of the deceased.
